Mr. MacGregor: I cannot give the hon. Gentleman an assurance, because we have a lightweight regime in pigs and it depends very much on the market. At present pig production is in surplus, and that market position is obviously affecting the price. In so far as measures are available to me, we argued for, and succeeded in obtaining, private storage aids, which are making some difference to market stability. I have made my position clear on MCAs in the pigmeat sector. The hon. Gentleman will recognise that pigmeat MCAs have fallen nearly 20 points since February last year to the current level of minus 7·5, which has made a big difference to the position. Pigmeat prices have stabilised and some feed costs are still coming down.

Mr. Ralph Howell: I accept that my right hon. Friend is doing all that he can to bring about an immediate 9 per cent. green pound devaluation, but will he give an assurance that the Government are exerting maximum pressure in this direction, and will he say what is the chief stumbling block to the devaluation of the green pound?

Mr. MacGregor: This is fundamentally a matter for the price proposals. I made it clear this week that it is necessary to take further steps towards achieving the objective of the complete removal of MCAs by 1992 when the single market comes into operation. We shall be discussing this matter at later Council meetings when we discuss the price proposals. With regard to the main stumbling blocks, there are divided views within the Community, and the Commission has made it clear that it is not making any proposals on this matter.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: When the Minister next meets the president of the NFU, will he alert him to the increased incidence of licensed security dealers in the City of London who are investing in agriculture-related stocks, and, in particular, to the operation of Afcor Investments Ltd., which specialises in this sector and whose investments are questionable? Will he also raise the matter with his colleague at the Department of Trade and Industry?

Mr. MacGregor: I know nothing of the question, so I shall look into it, but it is not the kind of matter that I normally discuss with the president of the NFU.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: Will my right hon. Friend ensure that he does not agree to any devaluation of the green punt without a larger prior devaluation of the green pound, so that British beef producers do not suffer still further from the disparity between the two and a devaluation of the green punt that is not matched by at least an appropriate one of the green pound?

Mr. MacGregor: We have not got into detailed discussions on the price proposals yet, so the precise positions of the different member states is not yet clear. My hon. Friend will note that last year we had a devaluation of the green pound in relation to beef that was ahead of the Irish position, and the competitive difference has come down substantially in the past year or two.

Mr. Wallace: Will the Minister accept that, in Scotland at least, farm incomes in real terms are worth only one third of what they were worth 10 years ago? Does he recall that 10 years ago Conservative Members joined Liberal Members to beat the Government and force a revaluation of the green pound? Does the Conservative party accept that the case for devaluation must be prosecuted with as much vigour now as it was 10 years ago?

Mr. MacGregor: Farm incomes are under pressure throughout the world because of surpluses. It is because of that problem that we have been devoting so much effort to deal with the surpluses. The position of the green pound is a matter for agreement within the Council. Therefore, we have to get the proposal on the table if we are to get anywhere, and we have to get general discussion among the Twelve. That is where the issue has to be dealt with.

Forestry

6. Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on measures to stimulate tree planting.

Mr. Gummer: On 23 March we announced details of a new forestry grant scheme, to be known as the woodland grant scheme, which is to be introduced on 5 April. Copies of a Forestry Commission leaflet on the scheme have been placed in the Library of the House. We also intend to introduce the farm woodland scheme later this year.

Mr. Marland: How will the new planting grants impact on the existing farm woodland scheme, about which the Conservative party is so enthusiastic?

Mr. Gummer: The farm woodland scheme, as my hon. Friend knows, is a mixture of two parts. There are the planting grants, which come from the Forestry Commission, and there are annual income grants to farmers to make up for the income that they have forgone by using that land for planting. Therefore, the farmers will benefit from the new planting grants that the Forestry Commission has announced, although we have interpreted them in such a way as to be of particular advantage for the planting of broadleaves and of rather less advantage for the planting of conifers.

Mr. David Nicholson: Can my right hon. Friend give the House an estimate of what effect the farm woodland scheme and set-aside are likely to have on land use and the countryside over the next decade?

Mr. Gummer: My hon. Friend expects me to have a crystal ball of a kind that I would not claim to have. We believe that there is a considerable opportunity for farmers to use land in both these ways. We are trying to combine a regime of stricter price control with alternative uses. The advantage of the farm woodland scheme, which has been strongly welcomed by the Opposition—[Interruption.]—except, it seems by the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) will be seen quickly and clearly by farmers.

Research and Development

8. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the financial resources currently available for agricultural research.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The total of Government expenditure on research and development in agriculture and food planned for 1987-88 is approximately £195 million. In addition, much relevant research is done by the industry, particularly the food industry and industries which provide agricultural inputs such as agrochemicals and veterinary pharmaceuticals.

Mr. Hunter: When does my hon. Friend expect to come to conclusions about the future level of public funding for agricultural research and development, especially in the light of an internal review recently conducted?

Mr. Thompson: The internal review is still being conducted, and we have held informal discussions with various bodies, such as the Agricultural and Food Research Council, development councils, producer organisations, research associations and the IPCS.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: Is the Minister aware of the deep concern in Scotland at the continuing reduction in research facilities? Is he aware of the threat currently hanging over Torry research station in Grampian, and will he take action to ensure that we do not see the loss of this organisation?

Mr. Thompson: I am aware that there is concern in many areas about the new shifts of research, and about areas in which research is going down. That is partly because we are looking at research into diversification and extensification, rather than, as formerly, purely producing more and more food. I shall look into the hon. Lady's question and write to her.

Bees

9. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to hive off the responsibilities of his Department's bee officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No, Sir. From the next bee season we shall be concentrating our inspection for foulbrood on colonies where the disease is suspected or which have a recent history of the disease, but these inspections will continue to be carried out by the Ministry's bees officers.

Mr. Tony Banks: A stinging reply.

Mr. Allen: Earlier this week I put on the Order Paper a request for morning sittings. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the usual channels for responding so quickly.

Has the Minister received representations from the Nottinghamshire Beekeepers' Association? Is he aware that, by reducing the number of random checks of bee officers from his Ministry on the hives of this country he will encourage the spread of American foulbrood, European foulbrood and, indeed, the bee equivalent of myxomatosis, varroasis? Will the Minister now restore any of the cuts in bee inspections and stand up for the health of the British bee?

Mr. Thompson: Random sampling over the past 10 years of almost every hive has found disease in less than 1 per cent. of the flock, so the present level of inspection cannot be justified. Nevertheless, we shall inspect those premises that have foulbrood.

The inspections have prevented a further spread of the disease, and we now have a very healthy flock [Interruption.] We shall therefore inspect only premises where we suspect that the disease is present, or whose beekeeper asks us to inspect them.

Green Pound

10. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about the level of the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received a number of representations on this subject. The majority have sought a devaluation for pigmeat. Some have concerned all or a number of sectors. Representations from food manufacturing interests have opposed devaluation.

Dr. Clark: I recognise that my right hon. Friend has already said that he is seeking a devaluation of the green pound. Is he aware, however, of the considerable importance attached by the British farming community to his success? Bearing in mind that the first 4 per cent. of any devaluation will be used to offset the drop in farm incomes brought about by the recent package of measures on stabilisers, is he seeking a devaluation greater than 4 per cent., so that there will be real benefit to the British farmer?

Mr. MacGregor: Of course I am aware of the feelings of farmers in this country, but I think it is important to keep the two matters separate. The stabiliser regime is necessary on its own, with—if production goes beyond the maximum guarantee quantity thresholds—the effects of price reductions. That is necessary to deal with the soaring cost of the common agricultural policy and the surpluses.

Devaluing the green pound is a question of fairer terms of competition between the member states, and is also strongly linked with the move towards the single market by 1992, when it must be right to get rid of the MCA system altogether. It is important to approach the two matters differently, and that is what I am doing.

Sir Charles Morrison: In my right hon. Friend's negotiations with other member states, will he remind them that they are meant to believe in the principle of fair competition? Are not British farmers suffering considerably because of the level of the green pound? Will he impress upon those member states that, as they have to get used to the principle of fair competition for 1992, it would be far better if they began to get used to it now?

Mr. MacGregor: I am sure my hon. Friend recognises that our competitiveness has vastly improved during the past year. United Kingdom MCAs are now 18 to 20 points lower than in February 1987, which is well over half in all sectors and more than three quarters for beef. That has significantly improved our competitive position. I agree about the importance of achieving competition on, overall, reasonably fair terms. I also agree about the importance of moving to that position ready for 1992, and that is what I stressed this week.

Coastal Protection

12. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from coastal authorities on his proposed changes in the capital allocation for coastal protection works.

Mr. Gummer: Representations have been received from a number of coastal local authorities, from Members of this House, and from others with an interest in this matter.

Mr. Atkinson: Is my right hon. Friend aware of the important coastal protection work now under way in my constituency to save Hengistbury Head? Will he confirm that the proposed changes in capital allocation for 1988-89 will not affect schemes already under way or being considered by his Department?

Mr. Gummer: My hon. Friend has mistaken the concept. All that we have said is that although there will be 100 per cent. capital allocation, there will be some occasions on which we will not have sufficient funds to give that percentage. We shall, therefore, offer a lower rate to local authorities that can manage with a lower capital allocation. The change is not fundamental; it is merely a means of ensuring that we use all our capital allocation each year, rather than leave some unused because local authorities cannot have 100 per cent. of what they need.

Forestry

14. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations were held concerning the proposed new grant arrangements for forestry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme were closed to new applications from 15 March. In order to maintain the confidence of the forestry industry, it was essential to announce details of the replacement grant scheme as quickly as possible. The Forestry Commission therefore had to consider and finalise the details of the new scheme very quickly, which precluded prior consultations on them as such with outside bodies.

Mr. Davies: In retrospect, does the Minister think that it would have been better if he had consulted the forestry industry, farmers and environmental interests? Does he accept that the result of no consultation is two forestry policies—one for England and one for Scotland and Wales? Does he recognise that the environmental safeguards that apply to Scotland and Wales are lower than those for England? As MAFF is the lead Department with responsibility for the Forestry Commission, does he propose to take any initiative to even out the application of his policy to Scotland, Wales and England?

Mr. MacGregor: The policy, in most of its broad details, is applied uniformly throughout the United Kingdom. The difference to which the hon. Gentleman refers arises because my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I said that we would be unlikely to accept proposals for conifer planting in the English uplands. That is an English environmental matter. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, on environmental grounds and for forestry reasons that affect those two countries, took a different view on that aspect of the policy alone.

Overall, the policy is the same for all countries. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will approve of the emphasis in the farm woodland scheme on broadleaves rather than on conifers. There is only a marginal difference in the conditions for English upland areas, and that is for environmental reasons.

British Produce (Marketing)

15. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any further plans to promote the marketing of British produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government attach particular importance to the improvement of marketing. For that reason we set up Food from Britain in 1983. FFB has spent about £15 million so far at home and abroad, most of it provided by the Government. In each of the three years from 1988-89 our contribution will depend on industry providing at least £3 million.

Mr. Butler: Does my right hon. Friend agree that we have excellent products in this country, but that traditionally we have fallen down on the marketing of them? Does he not believe that we could do still better?

Mr. Gummer: I am sure that we could do better. Marketing is of great importance in the industry. It is in the market place that the farmer finds himself most at home. That is why I was pleased to see the excellent presentation of British food at the "Alimentaria" food fair in Spain, which is an increasingly important market.

Forestry

18. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about his Department's policy towards the encouragement of the planting of deciduous trees in England and Wales in the light of the Budget taxation proposals.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received no such representations, but substantial encouragement for the planting of broadleaves will be provided by the new woodland grant scheme and by the proposed farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Chapman: While very much welcoming the Government's woodland grant scheme, may I ask my right hon. Friend to confirm that, with the present state of the agriculture industry, we have a once in a lifetime opportunity to start re-creating some of our lost woodlands? Does he understand the importance of that envronmentally as well as economically, in the light of the fact that we have probably lost about half our ancient woodlands in the past half century?

Mr. MacGregor: I agree with my hon. Friend that there is a good opportunity for three reasons—the surpluses, the environmental aspect and the other opportunities in farming. We have introduced the farm woodland scheme and it looks as if we shall get a good response to it.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Q1. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 31 March.

The Prime Minister (Mrs. Margaret Thatcher): In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the President of Cyprus.

Mrs. Hicks: Will my right hon. Friend join me in congratulating the chief superintendent of the police in Wolverhampton and the 250 police officers in the west midlands on their brave and successful initiative with Wolves earlier this week? Does she accept that we must continue to detect and punish the violent football offenders who are determined to wreck football matches and ruin the game for genuine football fans?

The Prime Minister: I think that the police in all parts of the country are to be congratulated on their determined efforts to tackle football hooliganism and to track down those responsible for this terrible offence that is doing so much damage to football. With good co-operation between the police, the Football Association and the clubs a good deal has already been achieved, but I agree with my hon. Friend that there is still a long way to go.

Mr. Kinnock: Is the Prime Minister aware that from tomorrow, when her changes in housing benefit and rate relief come into effect, an old lady on a basic pension will, because of the 20 per cent. rule, have to pay £2 a week instead of getting £500 rate relief per annum? An 87-year-old war widow with a small occupational pension will have her housing benefit reduced by £17·87 a week. A couple in work with a joint income of £82 a week will lose £16·50 in help with their rent and rates. This is an historic day. It is the first Maundy Thursday in history when, instead of giving money to the poor, rulers are taking money from the poor.

The Prime Minister: First, more is being given to the poor, as the right hon. Gentleman knows—a great deal more. Indeed, expenditure on social security has gone up from £16 billion to £46 billion—an enormous increase. It will go up a further £2 billion next year. That means —[HON. MEMBERS: "Answer the question."]— I am answering the question and I insist on doing so in my own way. The average family will be paying £64 a week to finance social security. Yes, we have had structural changes. Yes, they were meant to re-target the money spent so that disabled people, families with children and those in low-paid work are better off. In cash terms transitional protection of income support means that 97 per cent. of sick and disabled people, 92 per cent. of couples with children, 89 per cent. of single parents and 87 per cent. of pensioners get more or the same.

Mr. Kinnock: The Prime Minister is making the same stupid mistake as she made with the National Health Service figures. First, does she not realise that there is no transitional arrangement for housing benefit and for the loss of rates relief, so that is utterly irrelevant? Secondly, the Prime Minister can play the numbers game as much as she likes. There are 9 million people in poverty in Britain now. In 1979 there were 6 million people who were reckoned to be in poverty. The right hon. Lady can talk about targeting as much as she likes, but does she not realise that if the targets missed include war widows, if the targets missed include people who are desperately sick, if the targets missed include hundreds of thousands of poor people, her targets are rubbish?

The Prime Minister: What the right hon. Gentleman is saying is that we can never have a restructuring of social security if anyone loses. It is an absolutely ridiculous thing to say. He totally ignores the enormous increases— [Interruption.] We deliberately re-targeted. I dealt with housing benefit last week. Yes, we deliberately did have changes. There is no blunder in the figures. The fact is that 97 per cent. of the sick and disabled, 92 per cent. of couples with children, 89 per cent. of single parents and 87 per cent. of pensioners are getting more or the same. As for war widows, they have more to thank this Government for than any previous Government. It was this Government who totally and utterly relieved war widows' pensions of tax, and I am grateful to the right hon. Gentleman for allowing me to say that once again.

Mr. Kinnock: Is the Prime Minister not aware that in order to get those figures she has had to lump together gainers and those who are reckoned to be neither gainers nor losers? The Minister who compiled those figures had to go to the Select Committee yesterday and admit that those who are reckoned to be neither gainers nor losers are already losers because, as he put it, their benefits were frozen in 1987. Does the Prime Minister not recognise that £650 million is being taken away from housing benefit and that 700,000 people will lose everything? They are people who have put a few bob away to tide them through their old age. The right hon. Lady is cutting them off without a penny.

The Prime Minister: Does the right hon. Gentleman not realise that expenditure that has increased from £16 billion to £46 billion, and that is going up by a further £2 billion, is, even on his arithmetic, an enormous increase?

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Will my right hon. Friend join me in congratulating the miners at the Gedling colliery in my constituency on the figures that were announced earlier this week, which show that productivity over the last year has increased by nearly 25 per cent.? Does she agree that increased productivity and greater competitiveness offer the best guarantee for the long-term interests of the industry, not only in Gedling and Nottinghamshire, but throughout the British mining industry?

The Prime Minister: Yes. I join my hon. Friend in congratulating the miners on the excellent increase in productivity. I join him also in making it clear that there is a very good future for those who work in the mining industry when they produce coal at competitive prices and give a very good return on the massive amount of investment that this Government have ploughed into the mining industry. Many congratulations.

Dr. Owen: Will the Government rethink their appallingly short-sighted response to the report on AIDS and drug misuse in view of the fact that in Edinburgh 50 per cent. of those on injectable drugs now have the HIV AIDS virus, that this is by far the most likely route into the heterosexual community, and that unless money is spent in Edinburgh and in the country as a whole to control drug misuse we shall run a very serious risk of AIDS spreading into the community as a whole?

The Prime Minister: I do not agree with the right hon. Gentleman. He is very well aware of the large amount of money that has been spent on warning people about the dangers of the behaviour that they assume. We have tried to get over to them an excellent educational policy, and we have tried to make available very good extra facilities. A large amount of money has been put into extra research. I think that we have got the balance about right.

Mr. Cormack: When my right hon. Friend goes to church over Easter, will she see whether the collection is to go to the fabric fund? If it is, will she reflect, as she puts her contribution in the plate, that 15 per cent. is going to her next-door neighbour? Will she therefore have discussions with the Chancellor of the Exchequer to see whether VAT can be removed from repairs to listed buildings, especially churches?

The Prime Minister: The Easter collection normally goes, as my hon. Friend, I think, knows well, to the clergy in the diocese, and I hope that it will continue to do so. I realise that my hon. Friend knew all that and only twisted the question the other way to make his point. The matter has been considered many times, and I do not think that there will be any change in the decision already made.

Q2. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 31 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Jones: As the Prime Minister is so dismissive of the views of the Citizens Advice Bureau, does she share the views of the member of her own party who said yesterday that pensioners with modest savings could lose up to £10 per week in housing benefit as a result of the changes coming into effect shortly? Will she give the House a straight answer?

The Prime Minister: It was a matter of policy that housing benefit should be cut off where people have £6,000 in capital in addition to the ownership of their house, which many of them also have. It was a matter of policy that those people should not be entitled to housing benefit. Every two households in this country support not only themselves but a third household and there really is a limit to the amount that we can have in housing benefit. Again, we think that we have got it right and that people without capital should not be forced to pay housing benefit to those with sums over £6,000.

Mr. Gow: When my right hon. Friend comes to reply to the letter sent to her by Amnesty International, apparently on behalf of three terrorists—mercifully now dead—will she point out that it is the organisation to which those terrorists belonged that has been in massive breach of all decent standards relating to human rights? Will she further point out that an inquest is to be carried out before a jury in Gibraltar and that the inquiry for which Amnesty International has asked is a stunt without status?

The Prime Minister: I agree with almost every word that my hon. Friend used in putting his question so ably. I hope that Amnesty has some concern for more than 2,000 people murdered by the IRA since 1969. There will be an inquest in Gibraltar and that is the proper occasion for the matters in question to be examined.

Q3. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 31 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Barnes: At a moment of weakness on the Cross, Jesus said:

"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Why, by the time we come back after Easter, will the Government have forsaken the poor of this country?

The Prime Minister: As I said, the Government do not find resources; the people do. The people are already paying £46 billion to state social security, and it is going up by a further £2 billion. The average family will then be paying £64 a week to social security. That is a very considerable amount. It is not the Government, but the people who find resources.

Q4. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 31 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Bennett: Does my right hon. Friend agree that recent tragic events in Northern Ireland reinforce, if any reinforcement were necessary, the vital importance of the Army supporting the civil power there? Does she further agree that if the "Troops Out" movement, which is supported by many Opposition Members, were to be successful, it would place many innocent lives in Northern Ireland in jeopardy?

The Prime Minister: I agree with my hon. Friend. Northern Ireland is part of the United Kingdom and there can be no question of withdrawing our troops while the security situation remains as it is and the IRA continues to murder and maim indiscriminately. I think my hon. Friend will agree that we have every reason to be grateful to the Army and the Royal Ulster Constabulary for the considerable restraint and courage with which they carry out their duty.

Mr. Millan: Would the Prime Minister care to explain why she has chosen to meddle again in Scottish education and impose a major unwarranted and unwanted change —the opting out of schools? Would she care to explain why she intended to choose the dishonest and disreputable method of announcing the change through a planted amendment to the School Boards (Scotland) Bill?

The Prime Minister: The right hon. Gentleman is aware that the system of governing schools in Scotland is quite different from that which obtains in England. He is aware that there is a Bill before the House which has received a First Reading and will soon receive a Second Reading. It will establish school boards in Scotland. That is the initial step which must be taken. There will be no addition—and nor could there be, under the Long Title, to make opting out a possibility during passage of the Bill. [Interruption.] We obviously take a totally different view. Our purpose is to increase choice in education, whereas the attitude on the other side of the House is that that is the education that Socialists want and the people must take it or leave it.

Q5. Mr. Burt: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 31 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Burt: Will my right hon. Friend recall, especially this Easter time, Mr. Terry Waite and Mr. John McCarthy, who are captive in Beirut? Will she note the deep concern that is felt on both sides of the House for those two good men and all other innocent political hostages? Can she reassure the House and the families of those men that everything possible is being done to secure their release which does not put further innocent lives at risk?

The Prime Minister: Yes, we are very much aware of those two people and of all those who have been taken hostage. My hon. Friend is aware of the policy that we pursue. We will make representations on their behalf and follow up every lead to try to see that they are in reasonable health and are kept in reasonable circumstances. We will not pay ransom, because to do so would only mean that more hostages are taken. We do not forget these people and are well aware, particularly during public holidays, of the great strain that their families are under.

10.31 am

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): Will the Leader of the House state the business for the week in which we return after the recess?

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John Wakeham): The business for the first week after the Easter Adjournment will be as follows:

TUESDAY 12 APRIL—Second Reading of the School Boards (Scotland) Bill.

Motion on the Church Commissioners (Assistance for Priority Areas) Measure.

WEDNESDAY 13 APRIL—Progress on remaining stages of the Health and Medicines Bill.

Afterwards motion relating to the Local Government (Prescribed Expenditure) (Amendment) Regulations.

THURSDAY 14 APRIL—Completion of remaining stages of the Health and Medicines Bill.

FRIDAY 15 APRIL—Private Members' Bills.

Mr. Dobson: I am grateful to the Leader of the House for his statement.

When can we expect a debate in Government time on the proposed sale of Rover to British Aerospace? In view of what we have just heard from the Prime Minister, may we expect a ministerial statement to establish exactly what is the Government's policy on allowing opting out of schools in Scotland? Is it as demanded by the Prime Minister in the leaked letter to the office of the Secretary of State and confirmed by her today, or is it as stated, and frequently repeated, by the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland? Parents in Scotland are entitled to some clarification.

When does the Leader of the House expect to tell us that there is to be a general inquiry into leaks from the Prime Minister's office, or is it that civil servants are gaoled when they leak what embarrasses the Prime Minister and promoted when they leak what pleases her?

Will the Leader of the House provide a fifth day on the Floor of the House for debate on the remaining stages of the poll tax Bill? He will be aware that the Secretary of State for the Environment tabled amendments to the Bill after the guillotine was introduced. We think that the Opposition and those Conservative Members who claim to oppose the poll tax should have an opportunity to debate in full those amendments and all other aspects of the Bill.

Although we recognise that the security services were rightly concerned to prevent a terrorist explosion in Gibraltar, when can we expect a ministerial statement to be made which explains what happened and how the press came to be misled into carrying false information about the subsequent shooting? My right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) has still not had answers to the 10 questions that he put to the Foreign Secretary and until answers are given to those questions many people in this country will be perturbed about what is believed to have happened and this country's reputation will suffer.

Does the Leader of the House recall that on Tuesday the Prime Minister invited the Opposition to put down a motion to cancel the social security changes due at the beginning of April? Will he guarantee that, if we put down such a motion, the Government will find time for it to be debated and that the Prime Minister will take part in the debate and display to the whole country her expertise in robbing the poor to pay off the rich?

Mr. Wakeham: The hon. Gentleman asked me a number of questions about business for the week after the Easter recess and other matters.

The hon. Gentleman asked whether there should be a debate on the Rover Group and the recent arrangements with British Aerospace. We can best discuss that through the usual channels, but the Government will be happy to have a debate on that, if the time can be found for it.

With regard to Scotland, the points at issue could, with a little skill, be brought into the debate on Tuesday 12 April on the Second Reading of the School Boards (Scotland) Bill.

With regard to leaks, I do not believe that it would be right to have a general inquiry. I should have thought that the Opposition would have believed that proper government required confidential arrangements for dealing with matters and would have deprecated leaks rather than seeking to make political capital out of them whenever they occur.

I recognise that there is concern in some quarters of the House about whether there is adequate time for the Local Government Finance Bill. The House has passed a timetable motion in respect of the Bill, but I should be happy to have discussions through the usual channels to see whether satisfactory arrangements can be made.

As for the events in Gibraltar, I should have thought that the hon. Gentleman would have agreed with the Prime Minister that it was right for the inquest in Gibraltar to have been conducted in accordance with the law and that any questions that might not be answered at that time could then be dealt with more appropriately through discussions with the Foreign Secretary and his right hon. Friend. I believe that it is the right course for the inquest to take place, although, of course, that is not a matter for me.

With regard to the Opposition motion on social security matters, there is an established procedure to discuss on Opposition days matters that the Opposition choose. No doubt—

Mr. Dobson: The Prime Minister asked for a debate.

Mr. Wakeham: The Prime Miniter made a suggestion as to what the Opposition might like to discuss. That is a matter for the Opposition and, when a Supply day is organised, no doubt they will have to choose the subject that they want to discuss. I have no doubt that whichever Minister replies to the debate will see off the Opposition once again.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House knows that this is a day for private Members' Adjournment debates. I shall allow business questions to run until 11 o'clock. I hope, therefore, that hon. Members will ask brief questions.

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): Does my right hon. Friend recall the emotional impact of the Vietnamese boat people who arrived in Hong Kong some years ago? Is he aware that several thousand refugees are still in camps in Hong Kong, some of them the original arrivals, and that when the governor of Hong Kong was in London recently he was apparently unable to persuade Her Majesty's Government to allow some of those refugees to settle in Britain and thus encourage other countries to help in solving this problem? Will my right hon. Friend consider allowing the House to debate our moral obligation to those refugees and, indeed, the people and Government of Hong Kong, who have shouldered the burden for so long?

Mr. Wakeham: That is an important matter in Hong Kong and it is of wider concern, but I cannot promise my hon. Friend an early debate on it. However, I shall refer the point that he has raised to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Mr. Norman Hogg (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth): Will the Leader of the House accept that, since the Secretary of State for Scotland is here today, and likewise the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland with responsibility for education, it would be appropriate to have a statement at 11 o'clock on the situation which obtains as a result of the now celebrated leaks which appeared in the Glasgow Herald? I am referring to the School Boards (Scotland) Bill and the Government's intention to bring forward proposals for opting out.

Will the right hon. Gentleman further accept that all those circumstances, which have been created largely by the Prime Minister, have caused the Secretary of State for Scotland to become something of a figure of ridicule in Scotland, which is not in anyone's interests? Such a situation cannot continue, and it would be in the Government's interest if a statement were to be made at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Wakeham: I am tempted to discuss other matters of ridicule, but I will not. The Prime Minister tried, and I tried yesterday, to set out the position with regard to education in Scotland. The right thing to do is to discuss this matter in the debate on the day that we return after the Easter Adjournment.

Mr. Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): In view of the most worrying statement this morning by the chairman of the excellent British Aerospace that his results have been devastated by losses on the Airbus contract, will the Government make an early statement about whether they have any powers to bring some economic management into that project and to stop the creation of a mountatin of state-aided and unsaleable planes?

Mr. Wakeham: I cannot accept what my hon. Friend says about the management of that project, but I shall certainly refer the matter to my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): The Leader of the House is undoubtedly aware of the great concern in Scotland about the leaked proposals. Will he say whether, in the absence of a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs, the Government would be prepared to send the School Boards (Scotland) Bill to a Select Committee before it is referred to a Standing Committee, or does he have news to report on the progress of setting up a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs?

Can the Leader of the House help us? Does he know why the Leader of the Opposition appears to have discontinued the convention that he asks the Leader of the House the question on business? Is he too busy fighting on other fronts?

Mr. Wakeham: I am always sorry when the Leader of the Opposition is not here, and that is no criticism of the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), who stands in admirably for him. However, the Leader of the Opposition does seem to have one or two matters on his plate at the moment, and we shall await developments.

My task here today — [Interruption.] The hon. Gentleman asked me about the School Boards (Scotland) Bill and I am trying to answer him. My job is to announce the business, not the contents of ministerial speeches, and he will have to wait until Tuesday 12 April for that.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): May I share with my right hon. Friend the concern just expressed that the Leader of the Opposition seems to have abandoned the long-standing convention of his being here for business questions? Perhaps my right hon. Friend will take an early opportunity to explain that to the House.

May I urge on my right hon. Friend an early debate, ranging across the whole spectrum of political policy, so that the various Labour party leadership candidates may give to their colleagues and the House the fullest explanation of their policies? Perhaps they will be prepared to give a statement on whether any one of them elected to the leadership of the Opposition would be prepared to liaise with any of the others elected as deputy leader. Opposition Members are entitled to know the answer to that vital question.

Mr. Wakeham: As usual, my hon. Friend is being extremely charitable to the Opposition. However, having heard some of the right hon. and hon. Members who are candidates, my experience is that at the end of their speeches one is not much clearer what their policies are.

I am not sure that my hon. Friend's way is the right way to proceed.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): When will there be a statement on the Agriculture Ministers' meeting which took place earlier this week? Would it not have been better for the statement to have been made today? Will it be made when we return from the recess? Is the Leader of the House aware that 21 documents arising from the Copenhagen and Brussels meetings need to be debated in the House? Will he guarantee that they will be debated before decisions are taken?

Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the April business statement for EEC matters is not in the Vote Office? Does he agree that these matters are not up to scratch in a procedural sense, and should not the Leader of the House ensure that matters are improved as soon as possible?

Mr. Wakeham: The hon. Gentleman keeps a close watch on these matters. He is aware that I have had discussions and I recognise that there were some shortcomings in what happened in the past. We are doing our best to improve the position. There were certain discussions through the usual channels about the most convenient way of handling statements in the House. I will take on board the points raised by the hon. Gentleman and try to improve in the other areas.

Mr. Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington): Is my right hon. Friend aware of any early-day motion which has attracted the support of more than 350 hon. Members? Does not such support reflect the strong feeling in the House about the anomaly whereby all public service pensioners' war service is included for pensions purposes unless their service was abroad? In view of the strong feeling expressed by the vast majority of hon. Members on both sides of the House, is there any need for a debate? Should not the proposal just be introduced?

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise how strongly my hon. Friend and other hon. Members feel about this. As he is aware, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has said that he would be glad to discuss the issue again with my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) and a number of his colleagues. That is perhaps the best way to proceed.

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): As a result of the considerable concern over the Government's poll tax proposals, their complexity and the fact that amendments were introduced by the Secretary of State for the Environment after the guillotine fell, will the Leader of the House ensure that an extra day is made available so that those proposals can be explored in considerable detail in the House before we vote on them?

Mr. Wakeham: I do not believe that the fact that there are Government amendments automatically means that the guillotine motion passed by the House is invalid and should be reconsidered. That is not a precedent that I can accept. The question is rather the number of amendments, their complexity and whether there is adequate time. I told the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), the Opposition Front Bench spokesman, that I would have discussions through the usual channels. We will look at this again, although the House has settled the matter.

Mr. Nicholas Baker (Dorset, North): Will my right hon. Friend find time to discuss the report published today by the Haringey education authority which recommends that children should be required to learn about "gay scientists, lesbian stand-up comics and Nazi persecution of homosexuals"?
Will join me in condemning pernicious rubbish of this kind and support a policy for the sake of the nation's children and to prevent discrimination by way of reaction against the homosexual community that local authorities should not try to pretend that homosexuality is a pretended family relationship?

Mr. Wakeham: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend, but I cannot find time in the week after the Easter recess for a debate on that subject.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): May I draw the attention of the Leader of the House to early-day motion 919, which marks the fact that today is the second anniversary of the abolition of the Greater London council?

[That this House notes that 31st March marks the second anniversary of the abolition of the Greater London Council; calls attention to the loss to London of bold, imaginative and socially responsible policies in the areas of transport, planning, housing, recreation and the arts; further notes the cuts being imposed by the Government upon the London Fire Brigade together with the general deterioration during the past two years of London's services and infrastructure; and calls for the restitution of London-wide local government, together with a single voice for the capital city and the return of a sense of London identity and zest for living which two years ago emanated from County Hall.]

Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that in many respects services and infrastructure in London, particularly with regard to transport, planning and housing, have descended into unplanned chaos? The right hon. Gentleman has promised an early debate on London. When will it take place?

Mr. Wakeham: I congratulate those who tabled the early-day motion, because without it we would have quite forgotten the anniversary. Perhaps we should have a minute's silence from the hon. Gentlem[illegible] year. That would contribute more to good government than anything else that he has done. I listened carefully to what he said, but I cannot promise an early debate on the subject.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): Will my right hon. Friend take note of the reduction in rates payable by Londoners since the abolition of the GLC, for which we are all grateful, which we do not want back in any form?

Will my right hon. Friend consider early-day motion 752, signed by hon. Members on both sides of the House?

[That this House calls upon Her Majesty's Government to press the European Economic Community to renew the import ban on baby seal products as a means of maintaining pressure for a ban on the inhumane culling of baby seals, wherever they occur.]

May we have an early debate on this important matter?

Mr. Wakeham: That is an important matter. The Government strongly support the current EEC directive banning the import of harp and hooded seal pup skins and products on conservation grounds. A review of the conservation status of those two species will be undertaken before the expiry of the directive at the end of September 1989. No expiry date has been attached to our national measures to implement the directive under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): May we have a debate on the Register of Members' Interests, especially in view of the abuses that have come to light, including the planting of 58 parliamentary questions on behalf of Price Waterhouse and the recent article in the Daily Mirror demonstrating that Morgan Grenfell appears to regard Members of Parliament as being available for hire?

I draw the attention of the Leader of the House to early-day motion 927, which calls for an inquiry into the sale of the Rover Group and especially the role of the right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit).

[That this House notes the £2·9 billion paid to rescue British Leyland, now called the Rover Group, by the taxpayer; is astonished that British Aerospace is effectively being paid £650 million to take over the sole remaining British volume car-maker with assets valued at over £700 million and an improving financial position; demands that any benefits go to the nation; and calls for a full inquiry into this bizarre deal and the position of the Right honourable Member for Chingford as adviser to the Chair of British Aerospace in the conduct of negotiations.]

Would it not be better to discuss all those matters and the effectiveness of the register in an early debate?

Mr. Wakeham: I know that the hon. Gentleman wishes to be helpful in these matters. I have noted the Select Committee's proposal about the changes to be made in the registration of directorships and its further consideration of lobbying, but I do not see the need for a debate. Although there is a stronger case for a debate on the Rover Group, I can add nothing to what I have already said to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson).

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): In the light of the successful completion last night of the Committee stage of the Abortion (Amendment) Bill, after three and a half days of exhaustive, if not exhausting, debate, will my right hon. Friend bear in mind the fact that if the Bill was obstructed on the Floor of the House on Report and Third reading, and was not completed, many people who have a great interest in the subject would look to the Government to provide time so that the House could make a final decision on the matter?

Mr. Wakeham: The Government have made their position clear. At the beginning of the Session, we provided additional time for private Members' Bills generally, and, except in wholly exceptional cases, we do not believe that we should provide additional time for any Bill, however important it is or how much support it attracts. But I agree with my hon. Friend that the whole House would deprecate the use of procedural tactics to try to stop it reaching a decision on the matter.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan (Cardiff, West): Has the Leader of the House read early-day motion 922, which has been signed by more than 120 Labour Members of Parliament?

[That this House notes the Prime Minister's apparent wish for a debate on her social security changes; believes that the challenge she issued to the Leader of the Opposition on this subject on Tuesday 29th March was solely intended to cover up her own confusion; and invites the Prime Minister therefore to propose a debate in Government time and on a Government motion to enable the Leader of her Majesty's Official Opposition to respond to her challenge.]

It seems to commemorate another second anniversary — the last time that the Prime Minister spoke in a debate in the House. Does the Leader of the House agree that the 62 new Labour Members are suffering from a form of sensory deprivation, which is a great disappointment to them, not having heard the Prime Minister's spout-to-kill policy in operation? Does he agree that the social security changes that will be introduced on 11 April would provide a suitable opportunity for a debate involving the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Wakeham: I had noticed that early-day motion, but it completely misses the point made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Tuesday. If the Opposition are so set against the social security increases that will go to the overwhelming majority of claimants after 11 April, they should give themselves the opportunity to stop those increases.

Mr. Allen Adams (Paisley, North): Given that once again this week the Prime Minister has behaved towards Scotland with all the sensitivity of a sex-starved boa constrictor, will the Leader of the House——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know whether there is anything in "Erskine May" about that sort of comment, but I do not think that it adds to the dignity of the House. As it is Easter, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will rephrase his question.

Mr. Adams: Of course I withdraw it, Mr. Speaker. I would not call the Prime Minister a sex-starved boa constrictor, but outside this place I have heard a number of people refer to the Prime Minister in those terms.

Will the Leader of the House try to get the Secretary of State for Scotland off his knees for five minutes and bring him into the Chamber to make a statement on Scottish education so that we may know exactly what the Government's policy is?

Mr. Wakeham: If the hon. Gentleman is trying to influence me or change my mind, he will have to do much better than that.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): Is the Leader of the House aware that many pensioners are extremely angry about losing the pension increase because of the delay in payment until 11 April? Will he arrange to dip into the money that the Government are saving by robbing pensioners of their pension increases to pay for free television licences for all pensioner households? Those licences will be increased on 1 April.

Will the right hon. Gentleman also arrange for the Secretary of State for Social Services, on the first day back, to make a statement on the changes in the social security system, which the Government have called historic, to enable the House to put questions to him about the problems that will inevitably arise from those changes?

Will the Leader of the House ensure that citizens advice bureaux are not victimisied by the Prime Minister but are given additional funds to deal with the avalanche of queries arising from the social security changes?

Mr. Wakeham: The answer to all the questions except the last one is no, Sir. The hon. Gentleman's question on funding for citizens advice bureaux is not a matter for me.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Will the Leader of the House ensure that during the week after the recess there is a debate on foriegn affairs, and especially the Prime Minister's forthcoming trip to Turkey? Will he convey to her the wish of many hon. Members and many British people that, instead of approving the veneer of democracy that the Turkish Government try to put on their country, she should instead visit the prisons in Turkey, which are the most overcrowded and which have the largest prison population in Europe?

She should also visit Diyarbakir in eastern Turkey where many Kurdish people are being killed by the Turkish army, and she should call for the release of Mr. Kutlu and Dr. Sargin, the general secretaries of the Communist party and the Workers party respectively, who have been held in prison and tortured but have not yet been brought to trial. Will the right hon. Gentleman ensure that the Prime Minister denounces this travesty of democracy in the name of this country?

Mr. Wakeham: I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will have a successful and informative visit to Turkey. I have already said that the time is approaching when we should have another debate on foreign affairs. I know that hon. Members on both sides of the House wish to discuss many issues, but I cannot promise such a debate in the near future.

Mr. Greville Janner (Leicester, West): May we have a debate very soon on the extraordinary saga of the disappearing documents, which were in the Public Record Office, relating to war crimes in general and to the allegations against President Waldheim in particular? Will the Leader of the House draw the attention of the Foreign Secretary to the leading article in The Times today about an alleged deal with Allied intelligence, and will he assure the House that the Easter holiday will not be used by our military intelligence to remove yet more documents from those files?

Mr. Wakeham: The hon. and learned Gentleman wishes me to refer that report in the newspapers to my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary. I shall certainly do that. I know how strongly the hon. and learned Gentleman feels about some of these issues, but I cannot promise him an early debate on the matter.

Mr. Barry Porter (Wirral, South): Will my right hon. Friend find time for a debate on the troubles of Prescot, or indeed the troubles caused by Prescott? Prescot requires, indeed demands, new employment and it is right that the problems of this small town in south Lancashire should be debated in the House.

Mr. Wakeham: I regret that I cannot find time next week for that very important subject.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): I welcome any move by the Home Secretary to ensure that there is adequate protection for African National Congress representatives in London following the assassination that took place in France. Would it be possible for the Foreign Secretary to call in the South African ambassador and make it perfectly clear that Britain will not tolerate the South African authorities' murder squads operating in this country? Would the Leader of the House also remind the Foreign Secretary that the ANC offices have, on numerous occasions, been burgled and that on one occasion they were fire-bombed? We must tell South Africa that its murder squads and other hit agents cannot operate in the United Kingdom under any circumstances.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no idea whether the hon. Gentleman's allegations are correct. However, I shall refer the points he made to my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary.

Mr. Tony Worthington (Clydebank and Milngavie): The Leader of the House must act to end the tragi-comedy of Scottish education policy where the Secretary of State for Scotland is being turned into the Kurt Waldheim of the Government Benches; he only obeys orders. Will the Leader of the House arrange for the Prime Minister to come and tell us about Scottish education policy because the Secretary of State does not know about it?

Mr. Wakeham: What is tragic is the way in which the Opposition get excited about some of these things and make a great deal of fuss and then realise that they are barking up the wrong tree. What I have done to try to assist them is to arrange the Second Reading of the School Boards (Scotland) Bill on Tuesday 12 April, and if they get their act together, they can make their points in that debate.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of the fact that the Adjournment debates are starting half an hour later than is shown on the Order Paper, the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) and the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) should divide the time between them. The debate of the hon. Member for Newbury will continue until 11.30 and the debate of the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East will be from 11.30 until 12 o'clock.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot take points of order now. This is private Members' time.

Mr. Dalyell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I asked you for a ruling yesterday, as reported in column 1107 of Hansard, on the issue of leaks by civil servants and politicians. My question is simple: are you going to consider that, possibly over the Easter recess, in the light of what was reported in column 1107?

Mr. Speaker: I shall be considering throughout the Easter recess what went on yesterday.

Light Aircraft (Safety)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Ryder.]

11.2 am

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson (Newbury): I am grateful for this opportunity to speak about the safety of light aircraft. I do so as deputy chairman of the Air Safety Group, an organisation on which are representatives of all the main political parties. If 1988 is anything like previous years for light aircraft accidents—by "light aircraft" I mean aircraft below 5,700 kg in weight—there will probably be at least 200 accidents, some of which will be fatal.

In 1987, 56 people were killed in crashes of that sort. On the face of it, that sounds like a large number of accidents until one realises that there are about 4,000 aircraft in that category. Nevertheless, the chances of being killed in a light aircraft are 46 times greater than in a commercial jet. A total of 200 accidents, even if they represent only 5 per cent. of light aircraft in operation, is a high number and in recent months I have tried to discover whether there are any similar features in light aircraft accidents that call for remedial action. To some extent, I think that my research has paralleled that of the Civil Aviation Authority, the inquiries of which proceed.

In a press release in October 1987, Mr. Christopher Tugendhat, chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority, said about last year's figures:

"Whereas fatal accidents involving UK public transport aircraft are very rare, the fatal accident record for light aircraft operated by private individuals and flying clubs has shown a disturbing increase."

He went on to say:

"I am asking a CAA task force to analyse these accidents to see whether there are any common threads and if anything can be done."

This morning I want to suggest some steps that should be taken. I do so after talking to private flyers, those who run flying clubs and the accidents investigation branch of the Department of Transport at the Royal Aircraft Establishment at Farnborough.

The first and most surprising discovery I made during my investigations was that there is no legal requirement for light aircraft owners to have third party insurance. Obviously, some pilots have that as well as personal accident insurance. However, despite the number of accidents to which I have referred, insurance remains an optional extra. I find that disturbing. After all, light aircraft crashes often cause fatalities not just to the pilot and his passengers but to members of the public.

To give one example, in September 1985, at Fordingbridge, a microlight aircraft that had been flown to a school fete crashed when taking off from the fete. It killed a woman and injured her child as well as five other people in the crowd and the pilot. The pilot was not insured. As it happens, it was the first microlight crash in which a member of the public has been killed in this country. I refer to it solely because it illustrates the hazards inherent in private flying and the reason why third party insurance should be a legal requirement. In fact, had that pilot taken out third party insurance, it would have cost him £120 per annum, and, if he had personal accident insurance, that would have cost a further £500 per annum.

Of course, insurance will not prevent crashes or save lives, but it means that victims of such accidents can receive compensation. I commend to my hon. Friend the Minister the suggestion for compulsory third party insurance for private pilots.

When I visited the accidents investigation branch at RAE Farnborough, it told me that on average there are about 150 reportable accidents a year involving private light aircraft, including club aeroplanes. A reportable accident is one in which there has been a death or serious injury or in which the aircraft was missing or has been badly damaged. If someone has been killed, the accidents investigation branch sends out a team to the site of the crash for a field examination a report is submitted to the CAA. Roughly four months later the accidents investigation branch will publish an account of the crash in its bulletin. That bulletin is widely circulated among aircraft operators, flying clubs and manfucturers. However, private pilots will probably not see it unless they are a member of a club.

To obtain a private pilot's licence, the would-be pilot has to undergo a medical examination before he or she obtains a student pilot's licence. He will probably go solo after 10 to 15 hours training and will receive his licence after 40 hours in the air. Once he or she has received their PPL, they will be required to fly for at least five hours a year, in fact during a 13-month period. Depending on when they fly the five hours, it would be possible for them to fly those hours within a two-year time frame. However, those five hours are meant to be a refresher course, proving that the pilot is keeping up to date with the requirements of his aircraft, modern air space and aircraft regulations.

It must be anybody's guess as to whether five hours in 13 months or over a period of two years is enough to ensure that a pilot maintains his skills and remains fully conversant with the flying scene. Most flying clubs will not allow their members to use their aircraft if they have not flown during the previous three months. However, as long as a private pilot notches up his five hours in those months, he will continue to possess his licence and be entitled to fly.

That position does not exist in America, although there is much more private flying there. In America, private pilots must have a check-up with a qualified instructor every two years before they can continue to fly. That seems to be a sensible procedure that I suggest we should follow.

I have already referred to the medical examination that every would-be pilot must have before being given a student pilot's licence. When he obtains his PPL, assuming he is under 40 years of age, he will not be required to have another medical examination for five years. When he is between 40 and 50 years of age, he will have to have an examination every two years, and only when he is between 50 and 70 will he be required to have an annual health check-up.

Perhaps such wide intervals up to the age of 50 are acceptable and based on medical advice, but an annual medical when a licence is renewed would not seem to be unreasonable, particularly as 60 per cent. of light aircraft accidents are put down to pilot error, while only 30 per cent. are put down to mechanical failure, and the remaining 10 per cent. are put down to other reasons, of which attempted aerobatics make up a sizeable chunk.

Pilot error brings me back to the airmanship of the pilot, his knowledge of his machine and of the elements through which he will fly. Over and again, I was told that weather plays a crucial part in accidents and that, although pilots will have been through a meteorology and navigation test, too often they ignore weather conditions unless they are flying club aircraft. In that case, they can fly only if the chief flying instructor agrees; otherwise the decision to fly is the pilot's. He may or may not have an instrument rating. He may or may not possess effective information about the weather conditions into which he will fly, but if he decides to go, he may do so.

I have not seen a breakdown of accidents showing the extent to which weather is a contributory factor, but I know that icing on wings has caused several crashes. That leads me to ask whether the present meteorology exams are still enough and whether something more should be put in their place.

My hon. Friend the Minister knows that private aircraft are not required to be equipped with radio transmitters, although most modern aircraft, other than microlights, have them. It is a safety measure. Those to whom I have spoken seem to want to leave the situation as it is.

Club aeroplanes are maintained on a transport category certificate of airworthiness, which is to a higher standard than that required of a private pilot, who is allowed to do a certain amount of maintenance for himself. There are 50-hour checks and 100-hour checks. I said that club maintenance is to a higher standard than that which is required of a private pilot, but it depends on enforcement of the regulations.

Last summer, I flew to France in a club aeroplane. I was surprised to find that several instruments were malfunctioning. Our pilot, who happened to be my nephew, got us to Abbeville and back safely. When we arrived home at the club, another pilot and his family were waiting to fly the aircraft somewhere else. Nobody checked the instruments. Presumably that pilot, too, handled an aircraft with malfunctioning instruments. It illustrated the point that perhaps the CAA does not police private flying as scrupulously as is required.

It is inevitable that, in a short debate such as this, I shall have overlooked certain points that also contribute to aircraft safety. I have not referred to drunken flying, yet there is no doubt that it is a contributory factor to accidents. It is reasonable to ask whether we use our air space to ensure maximum safety for commercial aircraft and privately owned small aircraft, and whether club airfields are properly equipped with radar. Perhaps, as our air space becomes more widely used, the time has come to consider a measure of re-regulation, and to take a searching look at the general safety of light aircraft and those who fly in them.

11.13 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Peter Bottomley): The House will be grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) for introducing this subject. I pay tribute to his work as deputy chairman of the air safety group. He rightly said that commercial aircraft safety is at a welcome, high level. The general problems of those using light aircraft, often referred to as general aviation, deserve as much attention as those of us who fly as commercial passengers. Obviously, the regulatory regimes are different. I am glad that my hon. Friend acknowledged the role of the Civil Aviation Authority. Again, its competence and responsibility deserve praise. It does a good job on behalf of the people of this country.

My hon. Friend drew attention to the increase in the number of fatal accidents. In 1987, the number rose to 25. From 1981 to 1986, the number fluctuated between 13 and 20. The significance of the increase has been considered by the civil aviation study group.

I shall tell the House about the CAA's present views on light aircraft safety. Parliament has entrusted to the CAA all aspects of aviation safety regulation. It is for the authority to determine what steps are required to ensure safety in this important sector of aviation. The Government wholeheartedly support the CAA. Regulatory experience and expertise rests with the authority. I am grateful to it for providing me with factual material for today's debate. I shall arrange for the authority to respond to any points that I may not be able fully to answer in the available time.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: May I press my hon. Friend the Minister a shade further on third party insurance? If there were to be such a requirement, would it entail legislation, or could the CAA make such a request to him?

Mr. Bottomley: That is exactly the sort of point to which my hon. Friend may get a detailed response later. The owner or operator of an aircraft is strictly liable for injury or damage to people or property on the ground. That is covered by section 76 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. As my hon. Friend said, there is no legal requirement for an owner or operator to have insurance. It is for an owner or operator to decide the level of insurance for third party purposes.

It is worth noting that most owners and operators are fully insured. All United Kingdom airlines take out insurance to cover all risks. The vast majority of general aviation is also covered. It is believed that most sporting aviators and private pilots have cover. We shall be grateful to see any evidence that people can provide to the CAA or to the Government. It is the type of issue that Parliament should consider.

Towards the end of 1987, the mounting total of United Kingdom light aircraft accidents began to cause concern in the aviation community. The CAA set up a study group to investigate the scale of the problem and to decide whether there were common causes. The group was required also to identify regulatory and other measures that could be expected to halt and reverse the undesirable trend. I may have to double-check the number of fatal accidents in 1987. I am not absolutely certain whether the total is 25 or 29, but I shall clear up that point. The difference may be the four microlight and helicopter accidents.

My hon. Friend referred to one microlight accident. The CAA investigation concentrated on the major group of powered fixed-wing light aircraft. It was considered that the operating environment and handling characteristics of helicopters and microlight aircraft differ from the main group in so many fundamental ways that their inclusion would hinder analysis. The analysis set out to determine the precise scale of the problem and to relate the significance of the relevant 25 accidents to past records. I shall pass over some of the details of that, but it will be in the CAA report that will come out shortly.

A statistical analysis was applied to the observed variations in accident counts in specific areas, such as technical and weather factors. No individual factors were found to be significant. In summary, the CAA's statistical work at the end of 1987 suggested that the rise in accident figures for the year may have been significant. The CAA's interpretation was that, based on previous data, the figures were somewhat higher than what one might expect. Satisfactory analysis to verify or to refute the interim interpretation would require accurate figures on hours flown.

The study group found no grounds for complacency. Other major aviation countries, such as the United States of America and Canada, have significantly reduced their general aviation accident rates during the past 10 years. In the same period, the United Kingdom's rate has remained at a fairly constant but higher level. It might be expected that figures for the United Kingdom would, at worst, mirror international levels. There is a clear implication that positive measures to reduce the future United Kingdom accident rate must be implemented.

The group agreed that, irrespective of the final, accurate trend determination, there was a need at present to continue the search for significant accident causes and to develop proposals for remedy. I am sure that the group will be grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury for raising the issue in the House.

Four major activity problem sectors have been identified and examined in detail—multi-engined aircraft accidents, weather-related accidents, accidents attributable to technical causes and private — non-club — accidents. Those problem sectors matched the concerns that my hon. Friend mentioned and I am sure that the House will appreciate the research that went into his speech and the way in which he raised the issue.

The selection filter for those areas was simply the fact of their relatively high frequency of occurrence in the 1987 statistics. Specific remedial action might logically be expected to be the most cost-effective.

In all those investigations, the most common recurring theme was "error of judgment." The group felt that general and particular issues should be addressed in the search for improvement. That implies an examination of the pilot error aspects of accidents, with particular emphasis on the need to improve the general level of decision-making made by light aircraft pilots. It also takes account of the four main problem sectors and calls for more specific examination of the factors affecting them.

The CAA concluded that additional general aviation regulation was not likely to be effective in the pursuit of improved decision-making because strict adherence to existing regulations would have eliminated a high proportion of the accidents. The basic problem is determination of the causes of lack of adherence to regulations and the development of remedial proposals. Without them, the imposition of additional regulations would be irrational and probably nugatory.

When pilots fail to adhere to existing regulations they do so either because they have personality problems prompting them to disregard constraints or because they are unaware of the existence or significance of the regulations. In either case, the remedy lies primarily in better training and education and only partly in a more vigorous application or policing of existing regulations.

Despite some concern that has been expressed by the general aviation community, no correlation was established between the weather-related accident count and recent changes in the aviation meteorological services in the United Kingdom. It was accepted that the service can provide all necessary information for safety operations. There is a recognised need to ensure that all general aviation pilots are made aware of the details of the modified service. Action already taken by National Air Traffic Services should largely cover that need. Many pilots operating outside club environments are not easily accessible for information distribution services, but a solution to this problem is needed.

The development of an effective system for preparation and dissemination of appropriate further education material requires more attention. It is improbable that such a programme could be effected without additional cost, and that may be difficult to justify in the face of current debates about the CAA's regulatory responsibility for non-commercial aviation activity.

There is a body of opinion in the sporting and recreational aviation community that supports the concept of self-regulation for such activities. It is argued that such flying is a sport, with no more or less inherent risk than others such as motor cycling, mountaineering, skiing or sailing, and that light aviation should be subject to no more regulation than is applied to those sports.

The view of the CAA is less sanguine. Aircraft in flight over land are regarded by many on the ground as a noisy, physical threat. They share the United Kingdom air space with growing numbers of public transport aircraft, so uniformity of regulation is essential for the continuing safe conduct of flight operations. There is no possibility that this necessary uniformity could be achieved by the fragmented system implicit in the self-regulation concept. The CAA retains the responsibility for aviation affairs right across the spectrum. Included in that responsibility is the duty to establish and sponsor such aviation safety promotion activity as is deemed necessary for a reduction in the accident rate.

The authority cannot provide services for nothing; it is responsible for the health of the whole industry. If it is accepted that recreational flight is a foundation for the commercial structure, it must follow that the limitations of possible cost recovery from general aviation cannot justify a reduction in involvement. The cost will have to be recovered from the industry as a whole.

The further education need also became apparent in the study of accidents to pilots operating outside the flying club environment. Identified causes for 50 per cent. of accidents to the non-club set were miscalculation of aircraft capability and navigation-weather problems. These same problems accounted for only 25 per cent. of the accidents in the club-associated set. The conclusions to be drawn from that disparity must be tempered by the smallness of the sample. It is reasonable to infer that in some respects the non-club set is more at risk than the club-affiliated set. The distribution of safety promotion material must be adjusted accordingly.

The analysis of multi-engined aircraft accidents showed yet again that errors of judgment lay at the root of most of the accidents. Some seven of the 11 pilots involved were professionally licensed and, consequently, subject to regular periodic performance testing. The further examination of the causes of this apparent professional inadequacy will be dealt with by the CAA flight operations inspectorate. There is a suspicion that the current aviation boom has already caused a reduction in the mean experience level of pilots at the air taxi section of the industry, and that may be becoming apparent in accident levels. Consideration is being given to reappraisal of approval and checking requirements to allow for those reduced experience levels.

In the remaining non-professional sector, it was felt that lack of checking was unsatisfactory. As my hon. Friend said, a twin-engine aircraft rated pilot may remain continuously rated-licensed with only five hours flying per year, including one twin-engined aircraft flight. Under such undemanding circumstances, it might be expected that the impact of the original training lessons would be reduced by the passage of time and the shortage of continuous experience. Nor is it likely that such a regime could provide sufficient opportunity for refresher training in sectors such as asymmetric flight. Within the club environment, there may be reasonable continuous performance monitoring, but the private aircraft operation outside the club is under no constraint except self-discipline.

The group felt that the number of loss-of-control-after-engine-failure accidents was strong evidence in support of a requirement for a more positive and formal system for verification of continuing performance adequacy. Proposals will be made for the introduction of such a system, and this is the only sector in which new regulation rather than further education has been seen to be desirable. Those words will provide some reassurance to my hon. Friend and they show that he has put his finger on one of the more practical issues in which change is likely to be made.

Absolute safety is unachievable. There will always be an element of risk in flying. The aim of the safety regulations must be to attempt to reduce that risk to an acceptable level. Legislation by itself will not improve safety unless it reinforces what is generally agreed and accepted as being good practice. The most effective way to improve flight safety is through better education in its broadest sense. It is also the most expensive solution.

The CAA report on general aviation accidents is more comprehensive than can be outlined here. At present it is on CAA internal circulation for comment and should be made more widely available by the end of next month.

Anyone reporting this debate would be well advised to recognise the distinction between "General Aviation" and "general aviation", as most of us as fare-paying passengers would regard it. Many involved in the light aircraft world apply their skills in an acceptable way. The relatively small number of accidents is welcome. It was the increase in the level of accidents in 1987 that caused concern. It is right to pay attention to any trend that appears to be out of line and I am sure that the House will agree that our aim should be to make the United Kingdom one of the safest countries in the world in light aviation, in the same way that we are on the roads.

AIDS

11.29 am

Mr. Gavin Strang (Edinburgh, East): It is hardly possible to exaggerate the seriousness of the threat of AIDS to our society. It is undoubtedly the biggest crisis in public health for over half a century. It is true that, according to Government figures, only 749 people have died of AIDS and only 1,344, at the last count, were identified as suffering or having died from AIDS. However, as we all know, this is only the beginning of this tragedy and many thousands of people are already infected with the AIDS virus and will develop AIDS and, like all AIDS sufferers, will subsequently die from that illness.

The AIDS syndrome was described only in 1981, and it was in 1983 that the human immunodeficiency virus which is responsible for AIDS was identified. Since that time, a great deal has been learnt about the virus, and we certainly know a lot about the methods of transmission. The virus does not survive easily outside the human body; that means in practice that there are three methods of transmission — sexual, blood to blood and maternal/foetal. It is certainly the case that in England the vast majority of people who have died from AIDS or are suffering from it are homosexuals, but it is wrong to see the problem of AIDS as one that is solely, or even largely, related to the gay community.

I am glad that a Scottish Office Minister is here to reply to the debate, as the position in Scotland is different. Whereas in the coming years the vast majority of AIDS sufferers in England will continue to be homosexual, in Scotland that will not be the case. There is nothing unique about Scotland. The position in Italy and Spain is similar, in that over half the cases of AIDS there are related to drug abuse.

In Scotland the problem is concentrated, to a large extent, in the south-east. It is well known that the situation in Edinburgh is serious. It has been known for a long time that more than half the injected drug misusers are carriers of HIV. It would be helpful if the Minister could confirm the last figures that I have, which show that in Glasgow 5 per cent. of injected drug users were HIV positive.

It is vital that we recognise the enormous importance of tackling the spread of this virus, either within the drug-injecting community or between the drug-injecting community and the rest of society. This is important, first, because there are thousands—in Edinburgh alone there are more than 2,000—of people who misuse drugs and who are HIV positive.

Secondly, it is important to understand that the drug takers are a transient group; they are not a fixed population. People give up drugs and move into general society and, sadly, people, usually younger people, move into that community or habit. It is also the case—again, there has been some misinformation about this, but the research in Edinburgh makes it quite clear—that these drug addicts travel all over the country, so that the infection is spread from major cities, whether Edinburgh or Dundee, to other parts of the country.

Fourthly — this is particularly important — the infection among the drug-taking community will for some time be the main source of transmission into the heterosexual community. The evidence is clear, but it is unfortunate that we still find people writing in the popular magazines suggesting that the virus cannot be transmitted by normal sexual intercourse. A paper was published recently by a group of Edinburgh workers based on research into partners of HIV-positive drug abusers and one can be fairly confident that the vast majority of these partners have not been injecting drugs themselves. It is clear that a number of them are already infected by HIV as a consequence of a heterosexual relationship with an HIV-positive drug-injecting partner.

Another reason why we attach such great importance to this issue is that the vast majority of the babies who are born HIV positive — of 65 such babies born in the United Kingdom, 40 have been born in the Lothian area — are born to mothers who have contracted AIDS or the HIV virus through the misuse of drugs.

How can we tackle this enormous problem? One approach is to eliminate drug misuse, because if we could do that, we would eliminate this source of infection. We all want to eliminate drug misuse, but we shall not achieve that, certainly not within the time scale that is necessary if we are to avert an enormous increase in the spread of HIV throughout our society. We cannot allow ourselves to get hooked on to that approach. We will want to try to ensure that the measures that are taken to tackle HIV within the drug community are complementary to measures to reduce drug abuse, but one of the mistaken approaches, which I hope that the Minister will reject, is the suggestion that the solution is simply to tackle the problem of drug misuse.

It has been spelt out time and again that the threat of HIV to our society is much greater than the threat of drug misuse. We must fully recognise that fact, which means that we cannot wait until we have tackled the drug problem. We have to persuade drug injectors to alter their habits. How best can we go about doing that? The best information that we have had to date on how to do so is the document of the Government's advisory council on the misuse of drugs, which was published earlier this week. That document represents a valuable statement on how we should go about tackling this problem.

The report emphasises — this is how we see it in Edinburgh on the basis of our experience — the importance of making contact with these drug misusers. We must educate them, and that cannot be done through television or public education programmes. We have to do it by making direct contact with them and, as a consequence, the advisory council has come out strongly in favour of the development of a community-based drug service. We have some experience of this in Edinburgh, where there are a number of drug groups. Historically, partly because of the lack of provision by the public sector, these are voluntary groups which were originally directly funded by the Scottish Home and Health Department but which are now being funded by the local health boards.

These groups are already making a valuable contribution, but they need more resources. The people who are working in the front line are able to relate more effectively to drug injectors than some of the professionals, and they need more resources. They can provide advice and counselling. The most important thing is to make contact, and contact is not made with many drug misusers. The report suggests that so far only a third have been contacted.

The conditions of service of workers in the drug groups should be improved, and this applies to both national and local government funding. Better facilities are needed. To make these workers wait for three years on temporary contracts before telling them that there will be an extension of the programme is wholly unsatisfactory, and I hope that something can be done about that. We need to allow these dedicated people security of employment, because we know that we shall need them for a long time. We also need more provision in the public sector. We need better hospital-based facilities to back up local drug groups and more back-up, in particular, for general practioners who have a high number of HIV-infected individuals within their practice.

It is crucial that we provide additional resources to back up the facility for that kind of contact with injecting drug misusers. Once a dialogue is taking place, we are able to have some influence over them. There is evidence that that influence is already beginning to reduce the risk of their picking up the virus, if they do not already have it, or of transmitting it to other people.

We know that the main method of transmission among drug takers is the sharing of dirty needles. Edinburgh's history in that respect is well summarised in last Session's report of the Select Committee on Social Services into AIDS, which pointed out that during the epidemic of heroin taking — particularly among young people — in Edinburgh in the early 1980s, the practice of sharing dirty needles was very prevalent. That practice was probably contributed to by the police effort to clamp down on the drug problem by virtually eliminating the legal sale of clean syringes. As a consequence, there was a tremendous explosion in the number of people infected over that period.

It is well known that that was the main method of transmission. It was clearly documented in a paper produced by Edinburgh professionals in February 1986. The Scottish Office commissioned a report from a committee chaired by Brian McClelland published in September 1986, which recommended decisively that the Government should bite the bullet and provide clean syringes at an exchange centre, where drug injectors would be able to obtain free needles and syringes.

The Government's response to that call has been so inadequate as to be positively irresponsible. They sat on the McClelland report for months. Eventually, they announced 15 pilot schemes, 12 in England and three in Scotland. Of course such projects involve problems—the Minister may wish to comment on them—but we must make the projects work. It is not sufficient to say that, because there has been a problem in Dundee, such a project will not be possible there. The Edinburgh example shows that the schemes can be made to work. In the long term, the only test of their success is the extent to which they reduce the spread of HIV. But we will not know that for many years. In the short term, the only test can be the number of clients who have been contacted and provided with clean needles, with whom a relationship can be developed and who can be given advice.

Edinburgh has one centre open for half a day a week. We want many more centres throughout the area that are open for much longer. The Government's response to the recommendation in this area in the report by the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs is profoundly disappointing. The Minister for Health states:

> "While the evaluation points to some promising features of such schemes, we do not consider that we yet have sufficient evidence to recommend an expansion of schemes in England."

[Mr. Gavin Strang]

The Scottish Office is marginally more positive in its response. The Under-Secretary of State, who will reply to today's debate, states:

"So far as further needle exchange arrangements by Health Boards are concerned, we are not yet in a position to reach general conclusions on whether any extension of the existing arrangements would be appropriate. However, if any Health Board considers that, notwithstanding possible developments in the pharmacy-based field, there is a need for such facilities in their area, we shall be prepared to consider specific proposals." — [Official Report, 29 March 1988; Vol. 130, c. 406.]

I hope that the Government will think again.

Of course we support the provision of free needles through community-based pharmacists. I welcome the Under-Secretary's statement in his response to the ACMD report that he will enter into discussion with pharmaceutical organisations in Scotland with a view to encouraging them to sell clean syringes. Indeed, there is a good example of how that can work in Glasgow.

In some instances, individual general practitioners may also have an important part to play in the provision of clean needles and syringes. However, they are not a substitute for needle exchange centres. The counselling, advice and education that can be provided in a well-established needle exchange centre, where effective dialogue with drug injectors is possible, may well be more effective than a pharmacist could ever be. That is not to detract from what the Minister is trying to do, but his proposals must not be seen as an alternative to support for such centres.

When we had our only major debate on AIDS, in November 1986, the then Secretary of State made the point that the Government wanted this to be an all-party issue. Of course we are all united on the need to tackle the problem. But, as I said in that debate, if the Government want it to be an all-party issue, that can be sustained only if they are prepared to provide the level of resources that the community—the electorate—considers adequate. We are approaching the point — if we have not already reached it — at which the Government are failing to do that.

In some health authorities and health boards in London —and certainly in Lothian and other parts of Scotland —the provision of facilities to look after AIDS sufferers is already a significant proportion of their budgets. I welcome the Government's specific capital allocation for AIDS units in Edinburgh, Glasgow and Dundee, and I have no criticism of the level of that allocation. I feel, however, that the Government have fallen down on the expansion of resources to tackle the problem before it reaches the stage at which people suffer and die of the disease.

We need a much larger investment in projects to provide counselling and advice for drug users. Of course, some of the money must come from social work departments. The Minister will know of the disappointment, particularly in Lothian, in the Government's response to the joint officers committee of local government and civil servants which reported jointly to COSLA and to Ministers. The Minister accepted the report's recommendations, and said that the increase already provided for social work would cover the requirements. But that is not really adequate, especially in Lothian, which has a special problem. While I welcome the additional money that is being provided, particularly on the capital side, we need additional, specific resources, not only to support the projects to which I have referred, but also for the social work departments' functions in this area.

There was all-party support for the funding of £500,000 by the Lothian regional council, even in its current difficulties. I believe that Lothian may have to make great sacrifices to find money to tackle the problem. The money should come from central Government.

Lothian is lucky—as the Minister, who has taken an interest in the matter, will probably confirm—in that a number of very able people are working on the subject, some highly qualified professionals and other dedicated workers with the voluntary groups. It is striking that so many people have come forward, including senior public sector professionals, to tackle the problem with such commitment, but we need more resources.

Tragically, Lothian is an archetypal authority in that we are having to tackle a problem of major significance to the entire United Kingdom and other European countries. I believe that we can become a model of how best to tackle the problem if the Government give the funding we need, but that will not be done in a few months.

Although it is not only a question of resources, I must stress that we do need more resources, particularly in Lothian, so that we can set an example that will benefit not only Scotland but the rest of the United Kingdom and Europe.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Michael Forsyth): I congratulate the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on securing this Adjournment debate and on choosing this important subject. I assure him that the Government take the problems of AIDS and drug misuse very seriously. We know that they are of considerable concern in Scotland.

Of those who have chosen to be tested for HIV infection, more than 50 per cent. are intravenous drug misusers, whereas the corresponding figure for the United Kingdom as a whole is only 7 per cent. In Scotland, more than 20 per cent. of those infected are women, the great majority of whom are intravenous drug misusers. In other parts of the United Kingdom, the AIDS epidemic manifests itself in risk groups such as homosexuals, but in Scotland it is predominantly associated with intravenous drug misuse. As the hon. Gentleman rightly emphasised, that carries with it the danger of spreading the infection, through sexual contact, to a wider population.

The hon. Gentleman asked me to confirm figures for the extent of infection among drug misusers in the east, as opposed to the west, of Scotland. He has obviously studied the ACMD report, which in paragraph 7.4 estimates that between 40 and 50 per cent. of intravenous drug misusers in the east of Scotland are infected with the HIV virus, whereas for the west of Scotland the estimate is between 2·5 and 5 per cent.

The hon. Gentleman asked me to acknowledge the imperative that the fight against the spread of AIDS should take precedence over the Government campaign to end drug misuse. I am happy to assure him that it is indeed the predominant priority, and our policies are geared towards that. The main message of the Government's public education campaign is that drugs should not be injected, but that those who persist in doing so should not share needles or other equipment.

If the spread of the virus among those who inject drugs is to be slowed it is vital that they understand the dangers of sharing syringes and needles, and they should act on that knowledge. The evidence is that that message is getting across. Indeed, one reason for the high level of HIV infection in Edinburgh and the east of Scotland was the injecting culture, where people deliberately shared needles. That resulted in a rapid spread of the disease.

The hon. Gentleman suggested that our response on needle exchanges had been inadequate. The experimental needle exchanges have provided a wealth of useful information about the behaviour of drug misusers and about the ways in which they can be encouraged to change to safer practices. The Dundee scheme was closed because of disruption by some of its clients. The Glasgow and Edinburgh schemes were more successful, although, on the basis of the hon. Gentleman's test of take-up, the Glasgow scheme was a little disappointing.

On 29 March I said that we had informed Lothian and Greater Glasgow health boards that, although central funding would not continue after 1 April, they could continue to operate their schemes if they considered that to be appropriate to local circumstances. The two boards have decided to do so. The drug misusers who have availed themselves of the services of those two boards can therefore continue to do so during the foreseeable future.

The hon. Gentleman emphasised the importance of funding local drug misuse services and voluntary groups that are in touch with drug misusers, and I agree with him. I am sure he knows that central Government funds are not intended to finance every worthwhile drugs-related project throughout Scotland. However, our programme makes a substantial contribution to the encouragement and assistance of such services. We announced last year that we were making an additional £300,000 per year available for a further expansion of drug misuse servies in recognition of the additional demands placed upon them by HIV infection and intravenous drug misuse. To encourage the development of local plans, we asked the health boards to co-ordinate proposals and to submit bids for a share of the additional resources.

We have taken on board the hon. Gentleman's plea that we recognise the special problems faced by Lothian and Greater Glasgow. The additional resources were specifically targeted at the three health boards most affected—Lothian, Tayside and Greater Glasgow. In total, £1·1 million has been set aside in the current year's health programme specifically for the support of drug misuse services, and a similar sum will be made available next year.

The hon. Gentleman asked about resources for social work and rightly pointed out the responsibility that falls on local government. A joint working group of Government and local authority officials estimated that in 1988 social work expenditure to deal with the effects of the AIDS virus would be just over £1 million for Scotland as a whole, probably rising to about £3·5 million in 1990. Those are not the Government's estimates; they were made by those involved in the provision of services. We have taken account of that in our rate support grant settlement for 1988-89 through a 1·5 per cent. increase in real terms, which is in excess of £3 million in 1987-88. Therefore, it is difficult to accept that the Government have done anything other than provide the resources required.

Dr. David Owen (Plymouth, Devonport): Will the Minister provide any additional resources as a result of the report, or is it simply a continuation of existing programmes?

Mr. Forsyth: The right hon. Gentleman knows that in answer to a question on Wednesday I made it clear that the Government would take careful cognisance of the report's recommendations. The thinking behind the report has been very much a part of our developing strategy. For example, we said on the same day that we would look to the retail pharmacist as a way to increase the supply of needles, and the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East paid tribute to that decision. It runs very much in line with the thrust of the report's recommendations.

The report also pointed to the importance of finding informal ways to reach out and make contact with drug misusers so that we could get across to them the necessary information that might encourage them to change their behaviour. That aim has been part of our funding strategy for voluntary organisations and support groups, through the health boards.

The hon. Gentleman said that the number of clients of needle exchanges was a test. I cannot help but observe that when I visited the needle exchange at Ruchill it was dealing with about 65 people, whereas around the corner the pharmacist was selling more than 1,500 sets of injecting equipment every month.

I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for having raised this subject. I assure him that AIDS and drug misuse have far-reaching social and economic implications which present challenges to the Govermment and the community on several fronts. We intend to meet those challenges. We are grateful to him for the support that he has given us and for the action that he has taken in the House in pursuing the matter.

Rover Group

11.59 am

Mr. Hal Miller (Bromsgrove): I should make it plain at the start that this is in no sense an attempt to pre-empt the debate that is to come. I applied for this Adjournment debate before the statement on Tuesday was public knowledge.

With your permission, Madam Deputy Speaker, I should like to leave a little time for my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) to join the debate. He and I share the Longbridge works and most of the workers live in our constituencies.

I welcome the Under-Secretary of State for Industry, who has had a long connection, in his constituency and now in his official duties, with various forerunners of the Rover Group and who triumphantly concluded the recent deal for the sale of Leyland Bus on which I congratulate him. It is singularly appropriate that he has also had close experience of British Aerospace. He is in a unique position to advise the House on the benefits of the deal, so I do not apologise to him for the inconvenience of bringing him back to London for the debate, because he will welcome the opportunity to expand on the remarks of the Chancellor of the Duchy on Tuesday which, necessarily in responding to questions, were slightly disjointed.

The agreement between British Aerospace and the Rover Group is a great coup. Certainly it is a political coup. It is no wonder that the Opposition are asking for a full-scale debate, as they made such a sorry fist of the questions on the statement. They could not understand that limiting the tax losses was of benefit to the taxpayer. Indeed, they started burbling about child allowances in the context of what most of us concerned with the motor industry would regard as a most significant development and opportunity.

The political aspects certainly reflect the cracking pace that the Department of Trade and Industry under Lord Young has set in moving towards an enterprise basis and in returning to the private sector in a state of health the industries that have been in its charge.

It is worth emphasising that the Rover Group agreement is not just a political coup. It is a commercial coup because the speed with which the agreement has been reached has done a great deal to ease, if not end, the uncertainties that might otherwise have affected suppliers, dealers, customers and those who work in Rover. That confidence is very important.

We should not overlook the fact that while Rover has been in public ownership there has had to be each year full Government consideration of the corporate plans, with a great deal of discussion in the media and elsewhere about whether such plans were being funded in full and whether they responded to the capacity of the industry or its competitive prospects. All that discussion, which was necessarily spread out over some months each year, did a great deal of damage to the certainty that suppliers, dealers and workers in industry naturally expect to enjoy. I am glad that they will no longer be exposed to such intense scrutiny and the expressions of such doubts, whether or not they were justified.

The agreement also marks the care that the Government have taken with the Rover Group. It is not a question of getting rid of it at any price, as the Opposition have been trying to suggest. The Government have sustained it almost at any price, and certainly at great cost to the taxpayer. Therefore the Opposition are in some difficulty. On the one hand they suggest that Rover is being got rid of at any price, and on the other hand the say that the Government are doing too much to help it. The Opposition will have to make up their mind which path they wish to pursue.

Conservative Members certainly take confidence from the progress that Rover Group has made under Mr. Graham Day and his management team to improve the margin on its vehicles, to improve the quality of those vehicles, to develop markets for them, to return the company to a trading profit and enable it to resume its rightful place in the private sector. That is a mark of the progress that has been made. It is not a sign of defeat or failure; it is a very strong signal of confidence in the progress and viability that the company has achieved.

Part of that confidence comes from the collaboration with Honda. In the days of the Ryder report—if we can remember those gloomy days—I said in the House that the future for the company, as it then was, rested in collaboration with other companies. At that stage, we had not envisaged the collaboration with Honda which has been most fruitful in terms of shortening the design cycle, bringing forward new models, sharing the experience of such a skilled engineering company as Honda and developing remarkable products which now enjoy success in the market place.

The additional collaboration with British Aerospace marks another step in the same direction. I welcome the fact that collaboration with a British company is about to start, thereby giving further confidence to dealers that there will be no hiccups in the marketing of vehicles, and that customers may retain their traditional loyalties and continue to support the product.

I wish to make one or two further points that would do a great deal to buttress the confidence of those in the industry and the all-important customer. I refer to the Metro in particular. I shall question the Minister in a moment, but I believe that we already have an assurance that the next model jointly to be produced with Honda will be continued—it is now codenamed the R8.

However, I want to look a little further ahead. If the Metro model is to be replaced, the necessary steps will have to be taken now for it to be produced in 1990. If we were to have the R8 in 1989, we must have the new Metro in 1990. That means that work must be undertaken. That vehicle is clearly important, and not only for those who have the interests at Longbridge at heart. As two of every three vehicles sold by Rover are Metros, and as it is the only model on the best selling list, it is vital for the work force that suppliers and dealers should be able to sustain their businesses.

Is my hon. Friend the Minister able to say anything about the outcome of the discussions in Japan between Lord Young, Professor Smith and Mr. Day? Was there any discussion of models after the R8? Did Honda say anything about its future intentions? Did it say whether it wished to go it alone on a green field site, or is it looking forward to continuing its collaboration with Rover and British Aerospace?

I appreciate that it may be difficult for my hon. Friend to give an open answer to a very important question, but it leads on to my next point. My hon. Friend the Member for Northfield and I believe that it is important to retain volume car and engine manufacturing at Longbridge, not just for constituency reasons but for west midlands reasons and state of technology reasons.

Never let us forget that at one stage the Longbridge plant accounted for over 50 per cent. of all the robots installed in this country. It is at the cutting edge of technology. That is why it is important to be able to look forward to continuity, so that further development similar to that which is being undertaken in association with Warwick university may proceed.

If there has been any suggestion that Honda may not wish to proceed other than on a model-by-model basis and that it may have long-term plans to proceed independently, why, oh why, should a condition be imposed that British Aerospace must not divest itself of its cars division for five years? It would be foolish to preclude another manufacturer that might wish to take advantage of the excellent K series engine that is being produced at Longbridge, because it would add considerably to economies of scale and would enable the company to send some of its models down the assembly line, thereby reducing costs. What is the reason behind the imposition of that condition?

We have nurtured the Rover Group to the point at which it may at last be returned to the private sector. The agreement is a mark of success. It prepares the ground for the further progress and development to which I am glad to note that British Aerospace is committed.

12.12 pm

Mr. Roger King (Birmingham, Northfield): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Miller) for allowing me to say a few words in this debate. I warmly support all that he said. He put the case extremely well.

Broadly speaking, I welcome the Government's decision to merge British Aerospace and the Rover Group. I make no comment about price, but it ought to be placed on the record that only two years ago the management was interested in purchasing Land Rover for about £250 million. At that stage, Land Rover was not even in the black. British Aerospace has negotiated a substantial bargain.

The Rover Group is not confined solely to Land Rover and Austin Rover cars. It still retains a 40 per cent. shareholding in Leyland Daf, which is now in profit. My hon. Friend the Minister has an immediate interest in that company. The Rover Group also retains a 25 per cent. holding in Unipart, the spare parts distribution and manufacturing section of the original BL cars group. It is trading very well indeed — as is Istel, the computer software and services subsidiary. The Rover Group is more than just a car manufacturer.

I welcome the deal and the price that has been paid. It has pleased many because of the resultant increase in the industrial strength of the new company. The House will recall that we sought to achieve that in the late 1960s. It was said that we had to be big to be beautiful and that we needed big muscle to succeed, but we learnt that we can be too big and that we can have the wrong muscle. I very much hope that the synergy of this arrangement is correct and that particular parts of this greater organisation will not disappear and wither away.

We hope that the industrial strength of the new company will be great, but we must ensure that there is a commitment to the maintenance of the car industry. It is essential that where the Rover Group is to find its market within the European Economic Community should be clearly defined. The group has at last pulled itself out of the financial quagmire and is now trading in the black. By all accounts, it should be doing a great deal better during this financial year.

I am encouraged by what Mr. Graham Day said in his circular to all employees. He said that the company has made great progress and is determined to maintain it. There could be no better signal of that determination than an announcement that the company intends to retain its present volume of car production at around 500,000.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove referred to the commitment to the new Metro project, which represents two fifths of current production. It is essential that distributors and dealers throughout the world should have such a car in their inventory. If they do not have a supermini car, they cannot face competition from all over the world. The Metro is consistently in third place among the top 10 cars in this country. It accounts for a substantial components input at the Longbridge works, where there are hundreds, if not thousands, of components suppliers. We look forward to the new management endorsing its determination to remain in that market by announcing that the new Metro will go full steam ahead.

If there is to be a change of direction, the £95 million that was spent on developing the K series engine and fitting out a new gear box factory, which the car will use in conjunction with the forthcoming R9 model, will have been largely ill spent. It can be justified only by large-scale production of new engines and gear boxes; 300,000 units a year are needed for the new Metro and the R8 car that is to be manufactured next year. Large-scale production is needed to justify the expenditure that has already taken place and that is still taking place. I look forward to a commitment on that scale.

I recognise that it is impossible for the company to publish confidential details of its forthcoming models. That information is rightly kept secret. However, we are living in unusual times and it is not unreasonable to ask for such a commitment. The Rover Group has the ability to prove that it is a worthy part of the car industry. Enormous strides have been made in productivity and quality. This last outpost of a rich British motoring legacy can deliver the goods and it is doing so. It deserves more than a lingering decline into obscurity. I am sure that the new management will grasp the opportunity to make a great success of it.

Not long ago, Austin Rover ran a slogan, "Now we're motoring." Unfortunately, it did not. Perhaps the smile on Professor Rowland Smith's face shows that he has thought of another one: "Watch us fly." This time it really must.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry (Mr. Robert Atkins): I am particularly pleased to be answering the Adjournment debate initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Miller). It gives me great pleasure to congratulate him on raising this subject; whether by accident or by design, he finds himself in the front line as a result of the announcement made earlier this week.

The House will be aware that my hon. Friend is one of the authorities on the motor industry. He is chairman of the all-party motor industry group, and he is heard on these matters with respect. So it is, too, with my hon.

[Mr. Robert Atkins]

Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfields (Mr. King) who in his past incarnation—and in his present incarnation as the hon. Member for the constituency that includes Longbridge—knows much about the importance of Austin Rover.

This is an ideal opportunity for the three of us—saving the presence of the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke)—to discuss the excellent news of earlier this week. I know a little about the Rover Group, as I represent the constituency that includes the town of Leyland, where it all started. Up there, they still talk about "Spurrier" or "Leyland Motors". I am very much involved, too, on the British Aerospace front and, incidentally, that company is still known as English Electric. The traditional names that abounded have changed.

I know from my experience of Leyland DAF and Leyland Bus, which featured in the press only yesterday, as well as of British Aerospace, just how important and ideal the combination of the Rover Group and British Aerospace will be. To add weight to the success story that is British Aerospace and will be British Aerospace and Rover, let me cite the acquisition by BAe of Royal Ordnance in my constituency, which has been extremely well run by BAe's managers, building on a very good work force.

In engineering terms and in a variety of other ways, the combination is excellent news. I very much agree with my hon. Friends the Members for Bromsgrove and for Northfields that the Opposition have been slightly wrong-footed on this; I put it no higher than that. We shall view with a great deal of interest their contribution to the debate that they have requested, and which I understand we are likely to have. We are very proud of the achievement that this spectacular deal represents in both political and commercial terms. It is an achievement for which my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State should be congratulated. We shall welcome the investigation that the Public Accounts Committee has suggested it may carry out, as well as the close examination of the deal by the Opposition, because we believe that it is an excellent deal that will stand the test of time.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove asked about the commitment of British Aerospace in general terms. I am in no doubt at all that British Aerospace has taken on the company because it wants to develop and build upon it. BAe is keen to ensure that the work put in by Graham Day and his team is properly developed. BAe has said that it wants to abide by the terms of the business plan that Graham Day has produced. While there may be changes as time progresses—I hope that my hon. Friend will be watching for them and will give us the benefit of his advice—the company has told us that it looks on its acquisition of the Rover Group as a long-term investment and that it is committed to the maintenance and development in the longer term of the group's present business. Obviously BAe will address itself to the future well-being of the business and the shape of the product range.

While it would clearly be wrong for the Government to impose constraints on the management of the group, I should draw hon. Members' attention to BAe's own press release, which states that BAe believes that Graham Day and his colleagues have done an excellent job of repositioning Rover Group for the future and is keen to support his future plans for the Rover Group. The company has told us that it is conscious of the importance of Rover as a British-owned manufacturer of cars and four-wheel drive vehicles, not simply in terms of direct employment—to which both my hon. Friends referred—but in terms of Rover's significance to its supply industries, distributors, dealers and customers.

We have had a number of letters from component manufacturers and some from dealers saying how pleased they are that the deal originally suggested would be a British solution. The Opposition underrate the importance of that at their peril. The House will recall that in past discussions we all sought a British solution. British Aerospace further said that its purpose in acquiring Rover was to hold and develop its principal businesses and sees no reason to disturb these. British Aerospace's commitment is there, declared for all to see, and we can look forward to the result with confidence.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove referred to Honda. Honda made it abundantly clear to my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State, on his visit and in our earlier brief discussions, that it welcomed the continuity of Rover Group's British management team, which would be assured by British Aerospace's ownership of the company. Honda said that it is keen to be involved in the discussions, which may well go wider than the motor industry because of Honda's close involvement with a wide variety of activities connected with electronics and related matters.

My hon. Friend referred specifically to the Metro. My hon. Friends are right to suggest that the Metro has played a substantial part in the achievements of the Rover Group in recent years. As my hon. Friend said, about two fifths of the sales have been Metro sales. British Aerospace recognises that fact. I cannot give my hon. Friend an absolute assurance—I know he understands that—that the Metro as such will continue, but it would be foolish of British Aerospace not to recognise the importance of the Metro and of building on its success in the market place. I am sure that British Aerospace will look to the future along those lines.

Another point that needs to be reiterated, although my hon. Friends did not deal with it in detail, is that, although we have achieved much, we need to ensure that the European Commission hastens its progress in giving its support to the deal. My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State has done much work already with officials in trying to persuade Commissioner Sutherland that much needs to be done. Commissioner Sutherland has said, rightly and properly, that an investigation will have to be carried out. We hope that he will be able to undertake it quickly and efficiently to ensure that the deal gets the go-ahead in the time scale that we seek for it.

It is a source of great satisfaction to me, as the hon. Member for the constituency that includes Leyland, to join my hon. Friends, whose experience is well known to the House as well as to their constituents in welcoming a deal that will do an enormous amount to resolve some of the difficulties faced by the Rover Group over the years and to build on the obvious commitment that the Government have shown to the Rover Group by virtue of the investment of about £2·9 billion since 1976.

The agreement will provide a good deal for the taxpayer and for the shareholders of the companies concerned and, most important, an excellent deal for both British Aerospace and the Rover Group in their many and various guises the length and breadth of the country. I am pleased to be able to give my support and encouragement to an interesting and exciting future for both companies.

Community Care

Mr. Tom Clarke (Monklands, West): Community care is in crisis. The plight of the elderly, the mentally ill, the mentally handicapped, the physically disabled and the frail, and the millions—mainly women—who care for them tells us something about our society. For it is right that we should be judged on how we treat the most vulnerable of our fellow citizens.

All the evidence suggests that most community care is provided by a member of the family, a whole family or close friends. Community care should therefore not be considered a marginal policy for a marginal group of people. It involves mutuality — the responsibility of people to each other — which creates the fabric of a society that is worth being part of. There is a clear role for Government nationally and locally.

I hope that we can today examine the Government's record and, perhaps more important, their intentions in these matters, especially following the plethora of reports from Griffiths, to Wagner, Firth and the Social Services Select Committee in the previous Parliament. Almost all of them have met a deafening silence from the Government. Deafening silence is not something that we normally associate with the Under-Secretary of State, so perhaps she will correct that today.

The hon. Lady may be able to tell us why the Griffiths report on community care has all but disappeared. Time and again, when Ministers were pressed on social services, they said that the report would deal with such matters. They advised the House and voluntary organisations to wait for Griffiths. What happened? In contrast to the Griffiths report on the Health Service, the report on social services was quietly published on the morning after the Budget. There was no ministerial statement and no press conference. If ever there was a case of shooting the messenger and attempting somewhat clumsily to hide the message under the carpet, this was it.

The Government may be disappointed with the Griffiths report because it emphasises the role of local authorities. We ought not to be too surprised by that. The former Secretary of State for Social Services, as long ago as 27 December 1986, gave us a hint that, because the Government do not give community care a high priority, and because Sir Roy might feel that there was a role for local government, the Government might not say too much about his report. The Guardian of 27 December 1986 reported as follows:

> 'Mr. Fowler has become the odd man out in a Cabinet so plainly contemptuous of local government. He has actually been heard to praise the work of council social services departments, which he knows are pivotal to the success of community care."

The fact that Sir Roy Griffiths may have reached the same conculsion may be the reason for the Government's remarkable silence. I hope that the Minister will correct that silence today.

The Minister will also be aware that Sir Roy Griffiths gave a great deal of attention to the quite staggering report on these issues by the Audit Commission, which found that Government policies were "in disarray". It accused the Government of trying to muddle through in the hope that community care would somehow materialise as long-stay hospitals were closed.

[Mr. Tom Clarke]

If there were not problems in community care, the Government's social security review and their intentions for what is to happen after April have added considerably to the difficulties of many communities and people. There has been a collapse of any recognisable strategy for community care. I should like to give the Minister some examples. If time allowed, I could give many more. I am sure that she is in the same position.

The Edinvar housing association in Edinburgh has written to the Secretary of State for Scotland explaining that six mentally handicapped persons who had moved into a excellent community care project are in danger of losing housing benefit to the extent that their position in community care is in jeopardy. The director, Mr. Robin Burley, recently wrote to the Secretary of State for Scotland. I understand that he will await a reply. He wrote:

"Not only will the April changes compound the perversity of the incentives which encourage residential care but in this small scheme six people who last summer moved from hostels to their own homes may have no alterntive but to move back to residential care."

If that happened, it would be an absolute scandal. I regret to say that it is not a isolated case.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) has written to the Secretary of State for Social Services about elderly persons who will have to sell their homes if the property is thought to be worth more than £6,000 before they can even be considered for income support for residential care after 11 April.

Yesterday I received a letter from Age Concern telling me about funding for emergency alarm systems which will cost many of our most vulnerable elderly people about £5 a week. That simply will not be recognised by housing benefit, income support or even the social fund.

Most worrying of all is the problem of school meals and milk for the mentally handicapped and special school pupils. The Minister is rather fond of lecturing the nation about nutrition. It would be a scandal if such vulnerable young people were not thought to be deserving of decent nutrition through meals and milk as of right. I am delighted to learn from my colleague, Councillor Charles Gray, the leader of the Labour group on Strathclyde regional council, that the Scottish Office appears to be taking a civilised view in its interpretation of the measure. I welcome that, and I would welcome still more the hon. Lady's confirmation that the same will be true for meals and milk for mentally handicapped children in the rest of Great Britain.

Hospital discharge and bridging funds worried Sir Roy Griffiths. The Minister must be aware of the many problems which are commonly called the "revolving door syndrome." In the absence of assessment, proper bridging funding and proper arrangements, many people are being discharged from long-stay hospitals to community care which simply does not exist and then find themselves back in hospital. The hon. Lady will be aware of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities' letter to the DHSS about the withdrawal of funding from regional health authorities to local authorities, especially in the north-west and the northern region. She will also be aware of the letter from the Association of Directors of Social Services to my hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), who is the Chairman of the Social Services Select Committee, expressing its anxiety on these issues.

On 15 March the hon. Lady gave me some replies when I tried to find out whether information on these important matters was kept centrally. She told me that she did not have that information. That is an indication of Government priorities. After all this time we ought to know what the problem is, why there are variations from one part of the country to another and why people are suffering. When people are forced to leave hospital — sometimes after a short stay — they are often thrown into a community which is not prepared to receive them. The hon. Lady must know that relevant legislation exists in the shape of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

I was happy to note that Sir Roy Griffiths went a step further on this point. That certainly does not allow the Government to sit back and do nothing at all. It is a scandal that should be dealt with and we cannot claim to be giving priority to community care when there are so many people leaving hospital without proper assessment or arrangements. It is a disgrace by modern civilised standards.

Some aspects of the Act would and should apply to any reasonable strategy for community care. That represents true consumerism. When the 1986 Act, which has not by any means been fully implemented, dealt with the right of advocacy and with representation, when it recognised the needs of carers — for example, women in this country who are saving the Chancellor of the Exchequer about £6 billion a year and whose dedication should not be exploited — when it dealt with the issue of hospital discharge and when even the title referred to consultation, we were attempting to establish that people in the care of the social services were entitled not just to be considered as consumers, but to be treated by society in a way consistent with their rights as fellow citizens.

The Minister may agree that that is not always possible in the absence of resources. Although I disagree with many of Sir Roy Griffiths' recommendations in respect of YTS, competitive tendering, vouchers, and the social fund, I do not see that as any reason for not having a full debate on his recommendations, especially in the light of the cost of producing his report. When he said that we considered that community care was the distant relation and nobody's baby, that reflected his view of successive Governments' attempts to pursue a policy, while not being absolutely clear about resources. Of course local authorities are often concerned that they are asked to carry out duties and responsibilities without the resources being made available. There are wide geographical variations of provision. I have never believed that community care should vary from region to region. There should be national standards based on the local knowledge of councils and of those who deal with those matters, principally the consumers.

I find it difficult to understand why, for example, in Devon, 8,000 people in residential homes receive supplementary benefit compared with 1,000 in the Lothian region, although the population is about the same. Perhaps the Minister will be able to explain the wide variation in home help provision, respite care and occupational therapy. Surely, as a society still rich in resources, we are not prepared just to dismiss the problems of the mentally handicapped and send them into families which are unable to cope, and to leave the elderly to deal with the appalling problem of loneliness unassisted. We should act as a genuine community in response to those problems.

I do not regard this as the major debate on the Griffiths report, but it is a start. In the Audit Commission's withering indictment of Government policies on these matters it said:

"The only option that is not tenable is to do nothing".

I hope that the sheer volume of concern about community neglect and human suffering will shame even the Government into doing something.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): I congratulate the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on his success in the ballot and on raising this debate about community care. He has raised many questions and I shall endeavour to answer him in what is inevitably a short debate. I may need to write to him later on some of the topics particularly in respect of detailed examples.

I can answer two of the hon. Gentleman's questions very quickly. First, we do not collect national statistics because we believe firmly in local arrangements. If the hon. Gentleman stays to listen to the next debate on the East Yorkshire health authority, he may hear how that authority is tackling the problems that he has outlined. Secondly, fewer people in Lothian may be obtaining supplementary benefit for care than in Devon because people in Lothian are much better off. The average income in Scotland is the second highest in the United Kingdom. It lags behind only London and the south-east. It is much higher than in my constituency of Derbyshire, South.

Mr. Tom Clarke: The hon. Lady has just confirmed the need for a national survey and for information to be made available on a central basis. She has displayed an appalling ignorance of the problems of Lothian region and of Scotland. If that information were made available nationally, perhaps she would be better informed.

Mrs. Currie: The hon. Gentleman did not call a debate on the problems of Lothian region. I propose to answer his points.

The hon. Gentleman asked particularly about the Griffiths report. As he knows, we asked Sir Roy Griffiths to "review the way in which public funds are used to support community care policy and to advise . . . on the options for action that would improve the use of these funds as a contribution to more effective community care."

Sir Roy presented his report on 12 February and we published it shortly afterwards. We have made it clear that we regard it as a basis for discussion, along with the other recent work mentioned by the hon. Gentleman, such as Lady Wagner's report on residential care, the proposals drawn up by Joan Firth in my Department and the timely comments made by the Audit Commission in 1986. The hon. Gentleman also mentioned the Select Committee on Social Services, which reported in the 1984-85 Session on community care for the adult mentally ill and mentally handicapped. He may recall that I was privileged to be a member of the Committee at that time.

The Government are not suffering from a lack of advice. Sir Roy drew attention to the findings of the Audit Commission to the effect that better value could be obtained from extra resources. We shall take careful note of all that has been said, including the points raised by the hon. Gentleman, and we shall make our views known in due course.

I can report progress on the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, which the hon. Gentleman piloted through the House and which received a great deal of support on both sides of the House, not least from myself. Following the successful outcome of discussions with the local authority associations, sections 5 and 6 of the Act, which relate to the assessment of needs of disabled young people leaving school and which many of us regarded as being very significant, were implemented with effect from 1 February 1988. We implemented sections 4, 8(1), 9 and 10 on 1 April 1987 and we propose to implement section 11 as soon as possible. Discussions have already opened with local authority representatives on section 7, as part of a continuing dialogue on implementation of the Act. My officials intend to resume discussions shortly with the aim of determining costs and a timetable for implementation. Health authorities and the voluntary sector will also need to be consulted. Section 7 is likely to be the next section to be implemented.

As for the sections relating to Scotland, sections 12 and 14 were implemented on 1 June 1987, section 15 was repealed by the National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1986 and section 13 was implemented on 1 February this year. That is the Scottish equivalent of the English sections 5 and 6. Technical sections 16 to 18 were implemented on 16 April 1987.

Further discussions are planned with the local authority associations on the cost of other outstanding sections of the Act, and implementation of those will take place as and when the necessary resources can be made available. I should just remind the hon. Gentleman that some of the sections of the Children Act 1975, which was passed at the beginning of the previous Labour Government, took many more years than that to be implemented.

Mr. Tom Clarke rose—

Mrs. Currie: I would be grateful if I could get on, as the hon. Gentleman has asked me many questions.

The hon. Gentleman knows that community care is the special brief of my noble Friend Lord Skelmersdale. As I read through the voluminous literature and papers on this matter, I was struck how often I came across phrases such as "Our aim is to provide better services." Our aim is to do all that we can to strengthen and support a competent and responsible society. The aim should be to help individuals achieve their potential within such a society. That means putting our hospitals, homes, doctors, care-workers, services and so on into some kind of context. They are not the aims but the means by which we achieve our aim.

As the hon. Gentleman has said, most people who need help and care live at home. Most are cared for by their families. Children, particularly mentally handicapped children, are now overwhelmingly at home with their families. As we go up the age scale, that gets harder, as the number of old people now match the numbers in the younger age cohort, which would be the caring cohort, so it becomes relatively more difficult for caring families to manage.

I can offer an example from my own family. My mother was one of 10 siblings. They had little difficulty in caring for their parents. My mother and her brothers and sisters, of whom eight now survive, are all aged between 65 and nearly 90. Between them, the eight produced only seven children. That problem is not just common to Britain but to the western world. The whole pattern of demography in the free world has changed dramatically and some aspects of patterns of care will also have to change.

But other changes are more positive. Elderly people are fit, active and, in large numbers, play a far bigger part in society now than ever before, perhaps not always with a pay packet attached, but with their time and experience. We particularly undervalue the role of such people, particularly in the caring services.

We also forget that elderly people are not a separate species and they expect the same degree of choice and control over their lives as they had when they were younger. The elderly, and those who are mentally ill or handicapped or disabled, are not a separate species but citizens. For them, as for everyone else, the job of the state is to enable them to live their lives to the full and make their contribution to society, whether they are able or disabled, frail, failing or as fit as a fiddle. That is the aim of policy and everything else is a means to that end.

Nor should we forget that the part played by the state, particularly in the provision of services, is much smaller in the overall context than we all imply. We have mentioned the family. We should mention friends and neighbours, particularly in constituencies such as mine, a scattered rural area. We should mention what is called the voluntary sector — that always sounds like a product on a supermarket shelf — and the more formal carers' organisations, many of which existed long before the welfare state was established some 40 years ago.

The state's role is to provide and pay for a great deal of care. Roy Griffiths rightly pushes us to think how that might be organised in future. But the state side is only a small part of the considerable, often unseen, network of care. Let me quote someone who described that far better than I can nearly 200 years ago. It was Tom Paine in "The Rights of Man" who said:

> "Society performs for itself almost everything which is ascribed to Government."

I hope that the hon. Gentleman, who has a distinguished record as a Socialist mayor of a great city, will not mind too much if I offer him the words of the philosopher-founder of Socialism as an example of what I am getting at.

The hon. Gentleman particularly mentioned hospital closures and discharges. He knows that the aim of policy is not closure, but the development at a local level of a comprehensive range of well co-ordinated health and social services, matching the range of needs of mentally ill and handicapped people, the elderly and their families. When such local services exist, some hospitals will no longer be needed. The pace of closure is entirely conditioned by the pace of provision of local services. Quality matters more than speed. We say this repeatedly to the health authorities and I hope that the hon. Gentleman recognises that we mean it.

During the past 30 years most mentally ill patients who were well enough to leave hospital have already left and are now in the community. So far, we share the view that not enough resources have followed the patient out of hospital into the community. The 31 planned closures of large hospitals will help to put that right, and the remaining 70 or so traditional hospitals are becoming much smaller and are playing an important part in their own district services. Further discharges are not in themselves an aim of policy. It is for the consultant in charge and his colleagues to decide whether an individual will benefit from discharge.

A similar position applies to the mentally handicapped. The pace of contraction of the large mental handicap hospitals depends on the development of appropriate short, medium and long-stay provision for the residents. We have advised health authorities to aim to accommodate people in small, homely units based in their local communities. None of that should require the establishment of large hospitals, but some might need units with special facilities.

Again, the scale of future NHS residential provision for mentally handicapped people depends on local estimates, particularly of the number of severely and multiply handicapped people or of behaviourally disturbed or mentally ill people. We also need to learn from experience new ways of meeting the needs of such people for medical and nursing care in small NHS and other settings.

However, I am satisfied with — indeed I am pleased to see — the progress being made. For example, the number of mentally handicapped children in NHS hospitals and hospital units fell from over 7,000 20 years ago to barely 490 in 1986. In October 1986 we stated that provision should be made so that no mentally handicapped child receiving long-term care should need to live in a large mental handicap hospital.

Mr. Tom Clarke: The hon. Lady will recall that I asked her a specific question about school meals and milk for mentally handicapped children and those in special schools. I would be grateful if she would reply to my point.

Mrs. Currie: The hon. Gentleman will know that some aspects of those policies are under discussion, but, broadly speaking, our overall policy has been and is to ensure that people receive benefits in cash rather than in kind. That has been the policy for a long time on both sides of the House. As I recall, it was also the policy of the previous Labour Government. However, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman to deal with his point in detail.

The problems of the mentally handicapped are now much better understood in our community. There has been a sea change in services for those people and their families in recent years. I used to be a regular visitor to Monyhull hospital, which was in my ward in Birmingham and which I represented for 11 years. As we made steady progress, one of the porters remarked to me that he could tell the difference because the doctors now had to clean their own cars. It struck me then with great sadness how much we had unwittingly restricted the personal development and happiness of so many thousands of our fellow citizens simply because they had been dubbed "slow" or "in moral danger" decades before in childhood.

The contrast was shown for me up the road outside Collingwood school in Birmingham for children with special needs when I was chairman of the governors. One day, as I chatted to the then headmaster, Bob Dunn, we were shyly approached by a former pupil. She told us that she was working, and, with great pride, showed us her payslip. The headmaster, with great presence of mind, told her gravely that she was clearly earning more than he was. In another age, in another time, she would have languished all her life in hospital. The alternatives are so much better.

We do have far more difficulty with mental illness. Apart from anything else, the numbers are so much greater. After heart disease, mental illness is the second biggest expense in the Health Service. By 1985-86 the total hospital and community health service cost of mental illness was well over £1 billion, and that does not include, for example, the cost of drugs and care through the family practitioner committees.

I had the figures for mental illness analysed recently and I was surprised to discover the extent to which mental illness is a female problem. In every age group, looking at admissions to hospital for mental illness, women outnumber men. Among men, the commonest diagnoses are schizophrenia and alcohol-related problems, although obviously alcoholism can be an effect of mental illness as well as a cause. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will welcome the setting up of a ministerial group on alcohol misuse with membership from 11 Departments, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House. We hope to make progress on a wide range of services and policies that will help that group of people.

Among women, the major group is the elderly and the commonest diagnosis is not, as I would have expected, dementia, but depression. The archetypal mental patient in Britain is a depressed old lady and much of that clinical depression may be postponable, if not preventable. At least we can aim to minimise its effects. Therefore, it follows that the pattern of services in the community and the way in which we treat our old people may need to shift to reflect those new patterns of need.

I am satisfied that we are making progress and I share the hon. Gentleman's feeling that we shall continue to need our hospitals and improvement in our community care for many years to come. We will need our hospitals for sanctuary, respite, teaching and training, research and ultimately, of course, for long-stay care.

In the past there has been tension about the relative contributions of the different providers of care. Most notably, there was tension between the hospital or institutional provision and provision in or by the community at large. I do not believe that that conflict is necessary or real. The whole spectrum of care provision is complementary. In our 1987 election manifesto we said:

"Elderly, disabled, mentally ill and mentally handicapped people, should be cared for within the community whenever this is right for them.

In the past some people who should have been cared for in other ways have remained in hospitals, sometimes for years. That is changing . . . This changing pattern has already brought a better life to many thousands of people. It has the potential to do so for many thousands more."

I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will join me in reiterating those words.

East Yorkshire Health Authority

Mr. James Cran (Beverley): I am extremely grateful for the opportunity to raise two problems that affect the East Yorkshire health authority. I know that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security is well aware of them, as I am pleased to say that she visited the authority a week or so ago. The first problem does not necessarily particularly affect any other district health authority. However, I am convinced —unless my hon. Friend can tell me otherwise—that the second problem will certainly affect other district health authorities, and that is why I am raising it now.

The East Yorkshire health authority has not always been successful. It would be silly of me to claim that it has. However, I have no doubt that it is successful now. It delivers services to my constituents and to people in neighbouring constituencies in a way that would draw a certain amount of acclamation from my hon. Friend and her Department. We would be entitled to believe—and I thought that I was entitled to believe—that a successful health authority, like the divine Greta Garbo, has a right to be left alone. I am sorry to report that that is not the case. The East Yorkshire health authority is not being left alone.

The first problem that I want to address to the House involves successive proposals to reorganise health services on the north bank of the Humber. If an attempt at amalgamating East Yorkshire health authority with the Hull health authority had occurred once, I might be entitled to make a small protest. If it had happened twice, I might be entitled to make a rather larger protest. In fact, as my hon. Friend is aware, attempts at amalgamation have not occurred once, twice, or thrice. As far as I can understand from the record, five attempts have been made. Indeed, there might even have been six attempts, depending on one's definition of an attempt at amalgamation. The last attempt occurred this year. The problem is therefore not old. It is still a current issue, or seems to be.

My hon. Friend will be aware of my views on this matter, as they are fairly well known. I lobbied against an amalgamation because I did not see evidence to suggest that the delivery of resources and care for patients would be any greater as a result of amalgamation. A more important consideration, and one that I have applied to local authorities, is that the closer we can get the provision and delivery of services to the consumer, the better.

With that background, my hon. Friend would have been as delighted as I was to receive a copy of the letter that I received on 5 February from the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority, who said:

"Dear James,

Whilst we decided not to proceed with the merger"—

now, that was wonderful—

"we did see the need for increased co-operation and collaboration in a number of areas. For this reason we shall be undertaking a full option appraisal on the optimum long term pattern of general hospital services on the North Bank of the Humber for the total population."

I want to reassure my hon. Friend that I am not prepared to argue with that, as that is perfectly legitimate. On the one hand there is an assurance that there will be no merger, and on the other the letter states that an examination must be made of the two health authorities to optimise the services.

[Mr. James Cran]

However, I received another piece of paper with that letter, which was a recommendation dated 28 January 1988 from the Yorkshire regional health authority. That did not seem to be consistent with the chairman's comments. The recommendation was

"that no action be taken at the present time in respect of possible unification of East Yorkshire and Hull Districts."

I am bound to draw the attention of the House, my hon. Friend and you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to the fact that after six attempts at amalgamation we are entitled to know what "at the present time" means. I am entitled to construe that perhaps it means that someone else will have yet another go at amalgamation. We would be forgiven for thinking that perhaps that would happen not in five or 10 years' time, but in five or 10 months' time. There is therefore a certain lack of consistency in the signals coming from the Yorkshire regional health authority.

With regard to that inconsistency, I have the minutes of a meeting held on 21 March between the regional health authority and the East Yorkshire district health authority and Hull health authority. The minutes state that the chairman of the Hull health authority

"indicated that as far as Hull was concerned, the districting issue was finished."

The regional health authority chairman, Mr. Brian Askew, said that it was "time that the districting issue was forgotten."

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): Districting?

Mr. Cran: Yes.

If ever I had a confused set of signals, it must be those that I have described to my hon. Friend. Although I may have been entitled to a certain amount of levity on this subject, the serious point is that the regional health authority and my hon. Friend have responsibility to clear up the issue. In saying that, I am not ruling out the fact that we will not look at the whole of Yorkshire or any other part of the country to find a better system of organising the Health Service in future. We may do that, but I am wholly against this piecemeal organisational tinkering which leaves my constituents not knowing which health authority will be in place at any given time.

That also means that the managers within the health authority do not have much confidence in their jobs and how to do them, because they do not know who they are working for. If the authority was a business, the company involved would have a continual takeover threat hanging over it. With such a sword of Damocles hanging over it, how can we possibly expect managers in the East Yorkshire health authority to deal confidently with their jobs and manage the health authority properly?

I humbly submit that under the laughable circumstances that I have outlined, they cannot be expected to do their jobs properly. The managers are doing their best, and they are doing their jobs well, but I would not be surprised if some of them were beginning to wonder what was happening. I therefore want a little clarification of the Government's view of the lack of direction from the regional health authority.

Problems seem to come in multiples for East Yorkshire health authority. The second one relates to the fact that it has with a vengeance got on and done its job. As my hon. Friend knows, it started with 12 inefficient and poorly utilised hospitals, which resulted in a waste of resources. Having established that that was the case, the chairman, the general manager and the board set about considering how to use their resources better and, with everyone's co-operation, reduced 12 inefficient hospitals to seven more efficient hospitals, which is exactly what my hon. Friend, the Government and the community want.

That move freed a large amount of revenue which the authority believed, perhaps naively, it could use to improve its resources. Its property sales during the past three years having been worth £2·5 million, which is a considerable sum, it intended to use the money to transform Castle Hill hospital in Cottingham into a district general hospital, which was an eminently sensible decision. That has only partially been implemented.

The nub of the problem is that that which you have is not necessarily yours, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because, at a regional health authority meeting, decisions were made on what is called resource allocation, and the minutes state:

"It is therefore recommended that the planned reduction of allocation to East Yorkshire be commenced in 1988-89 by a reduction of £1 million."

All this is a week or so before the new financial year starts, so the problems have been compounded. The minutes continue:

"This then creates the sum"—

it certainly does—

"of £1 million for redistribution within the Region and the RHA is recommended to agree to the following proposals."

The proposals are that East Yorkshire should get back £250,000 of its own money for improvements to be agreed in cardi-thoracic services. It is also fortunate enough to get back a further £250,000 to be held for mental health bridging purposes as proposed by the authority. Details of the programmes are to be agreed by the regional health authority.

That is all right thus far, but the third recommendation is that £500,000 should go to Hull health authority in recognition of its overall RAWP position. There it is, Mr. Deputy Speaker. A district health authority creates £2·5 million by getting rid of unused and inefficient resources and it then thinks, "How shall we use those resources for the benefit of our patients?" It then decides to create a district general hospital and embarks upon the project but, all of a sudden, part of the resources are taken away from it and given to someone else. If ever there was an example of banditry at work, I am entitled to say that this is it. East Yorkshire health authority may be forgiven for thinking that it had acted in accordance with the Government's policies. I believe that it has, and if it has not no doubt my hon. Friend will tell me, but it certainly seems to have struck the wrong chord with the Yorkshire regional health authority.

As I am sure my hon. Friend will be aware, at least two other district health authorities in Yorkshire which are also significantly above their RAWP allocations have not had a reallocation of resources in the bandit-like manner that I have just outlined. I suspect that there is a pretty good reason for that: they did not have the foresight of East Yorkshire health authority to divest themselves of resources that they did not want and use the money to improve patient services, which is what they should have done.

The message is that district health authorities must beware of selling assets which they do not require. Any district health authority that decides to sell its unwanted assets should beware, because there may be a robber somewhere — in the form of another district health authority—ready to nab that money if it has the ear of its regional health authority. It follows that I do not understand the logic of the decision made by Yorkshire health authority. That is not to say that I do not recognise the problems of Hull district health authority. It would be silly of me to say that. The authority has resource problems, and it must cater for patients who originate from the area of the East Yorkshire health authority. But that problem will diminish by allowing East Yorkshire to keep its cash and build its district general hospital. Then it will have the facilities to cater for its own patients. That, not the reallocation of resources, is how to reduce the problem.

It would idle of me not to suggest to the House and to everyone who is fair-minded — I have no reason to believe that my hon. Friend is other than fair-minded— that it will be exceedingly difficult to motivate not only East Yorkshire but any other health authority to divest itself of assets that it does not need when it cannot be sure of keeping those resources. It does not make good horse sense, and I repeat that other district health authorities should beware of what happened in East Yorkshire.

I am also entitled to question the figure of 6·1 per cent. above RAWP target for East Yorkshire for 1988-89. All the figures available to me from the health authority show that there has been a rapid increase of between 20 and 30 per cent. in the number of patients being treated. The regional health authority is using historical figures, and the clear message is that the authority should use more up-to-date figures. It is ludicrous to reduce the allocation while activities are increasing.

After that endless parody of a case that I would not have believed unless I had seen it in action, I wait with bated breath to hear my hon. Friend's comments.

1.17 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on winning a place in the ballot. In the short time that he has been in the House he has shown a keen interest in health and welfare matters. I do not know whether he realises it, but so far he has written me 35 letters and tabled 10 questions, and now he has taken up the cause in debate. He is one of the most active of the new intake, and I commend to his constituents, whom he represents so well, his persistent but courteous approach to Ministers, which I am sure will bear fruit.

East Yorkshire health authority covers most of the area known by the old and much-missed name of the East Riding of Yorkshire. It includes the hinterland of Hull, but not the city itself, which has its own health authority. We expect the East Yorkshire and Hull health authorities to work closely together, with Scarborough to the north and York to the west, to plan and provide services for the people of the entire neighbourhood. I am sure that my hon. Friend would agree with that, although I understand his misgivings about formal mergers. I hope that he can support the co-operation that I have just mentioned, since we hope to provide a high standard of cost-effective service to the people of Yorkshire. I note that he is nodding in assent.

I take up with my hon. Friend the word "districting", which I believe he used when quoting from a health authority document. I hope that our friends in Yorkshire, whatever else they may be doing so brilliantly, will be careful about the surgery that they are performing on the English language. I think that they meant the discussion of mergers or boundary changes.

As my hon. Friend will know, the funding of the NHS has increased substantially. This year we will be spending £21 billion on the NHS, and next year we will be spending £22 billion. For the hospital and community health services in England, for which I have responsibility, funding has increased from £8·1 billion in 1982-83 to £11·5 billion this year. This is an increase of 38 per cent. in cash and 11 per cent. in real terms over a five-year period. We might use that to reflect on the 2 per cent. per annum growth that some critics will call for. We have already been getting that level of growth.

Funding for Yorkshire regional health authority has risen from £583 million in 1982-83 to £818 million this year. This is an increase of 40 per cent. in cash and 12 per cent. in real terms, which is slightly more than the national average.

This year East Yorkshire health authority will be spending £40 million. It has also received £80,000 under the waiting list initiative for two of its projects, and it has added to that from its own resources, as my hon. Friend described. Its costs improvement programme amounts to some £820,000, which is 2·1 per cent. of its budget. According to my figures, it also has available £1·25 million this year from land sales.

Those are substantial figures and they reflect considerable credit on the health authority. Indeed, they would reflect credit on health authorities twice its size. I hope that some of the bigger health authorities, including those elsewhere in Yorkshire, to which my hon. Friend referred, whose performances are, shall we say, more sluggish, will take due note of what they have been up to in East Yorkshire health authority. If they are not taking due note, we are. I assure my hon. Friend of that. I take seriously his point about incentives.

Many health authorities have developed a good record of improvements in service—quality, quantity and cost-effectiveness — under the guidance of the Government. East Yorkshire has a much better record than many, particularly in the vigorous examination of patterns of work, which have often been long established, the release through planned change of additional resources — through its own efforts — and the intelligent re-application of those funds to improve local health care. In 1986-87 East Yorkshire achieved cost improvements of £1·36 million, which was just under 3·5 per cent. of the budget. In 1987-88 it will, as I have mentioned, achieve improvements of £818,000, which is 2·1 per cent. of its budget, and next year it hopes to achieve £865,000, or 2·2 per cent. It has achieved that by careful scrutiny of, for example, domestic support services, portering, transport and energy conservation measures, which released £116,000 in 1986-87 and will release a further £55,000 in the year to come.

As my hon. Friend said, I saw all that myself last week when I visited Castle Hill hospital at Cottingham to open the new cardio-thoracic wards. The new wards form part of the major upgrading of the cardio-thoracic facilities that serve the four Humberside health authorities — East Yorkshire, Hull, Grimsby and Scunthorpe —and part of north Yorkshire. It is a magnificent development and demonstrates the commitment of the Government, the Yorkshire regional health authority and the district health authorities to improving the services for patients suffering from coronary heart disease.

[Mrs. Edwina Currie]

I greatly enjoyed my visit. The sun shone and everybody was dancing around like lambs with two tails. They were so pleased with the new facilities. I would be grateful if my hon. Friend would pass on my appreciation to all his constituents and to Mr. Hooper, the chairman of the East Yorkshire health authority, Mr. Nichols, his district general manager, Mr. Nair and Mr. Moghissi, the consultant surgeons and all the staff and patients for their kindness and hospitality during my visit.

The food that I had was some of the best I have ever tasted. Indeed, I asked for the recipes. It was the first health authority lunch that I have attended in recent times where non-alcoholic drinks were served throughout, and I suspect that the conversation was all the better for it.

The darker side of British life, particularly in Yorkshire, was also brought home to me a little later when, in one of the wards, I met a young girl not yet 30 who was being treated for lung disease. She had been a cigarette smoker since childhood. I was moved that day, as I always am, at meeting so many people suffering from what we now know to be preventable diseases. The Yorkshire regional health authority and the local district health authorities in Yorkshire are taking those matters seriously and have increased their health promotion budget in ways that we hope will bear fruit in years to come.

The new cardio-thoracic wards are not the only capital developments at Castle Hill and in the East Yorkshire health authority. For example, in January work was started at Castle Hill on a major project to build a new surgical unit that will comprise four operating theatres, four wards and a day ward. I could see that work proceeding apace during my visit. In addition, on 5 March the new Bridlington community hospital, which is managed by the East Yorkshire health authority and which was built at a cost of about £16 million, took its first patients. I well remember my hon. Friend's question to me about the new hospital on 27 October, when he reminded me that it was completed ahead of time. That hospital will provide 200 beds for acute elderly and maternity patients, a 60-place day hospital, an operating theatre suite, out-patient departments and support facilities. It is a splendid development and it will clearly make a major contribution to improving health services in East Yorkshire.

I refer now to my hon. Friend's point about the £1 million reduction in the allocation. As he will know, the distribution of resources to district health authorities is a matter for the regional health authority concerned—in this case, the Yorkshire region. Clearly, regional health authorities must take into account the balance of resources between districts and ensure that there is a fair and equitable distribution. What we do as Ministers is allocate money to regional health authorities. They then send it out. The RAWP formula is intended only to assist us in sending money out to regional health authorities. It is not intended to be any more than the vaguest guide for allocation between districts. Indeed, as my hon. Friend knows, we are currently looking at the RAWP formula. There may be some amendments which, perhaps, will take into account changing patterns of population growth in many parts of the country.

The money does not, however, belong to the regional health authority. It does not belong to the district health authority — East Yorkshire or otherwise. It does not belong to any of us. It belongs to the taxpayer. Eventually, we have to account to the taxpayer — him or, more likely these days, her — for every penny that we have. There is total homogeneity about the money. It does not acquire a different colour the moment it is allocated to East Yorkshire. I am afraid that it is exactly the same money, and it is raised and accounted for in exactly the same way.

I understand that East Yorkshire has had its revenue allocation, which it controls, reduced by £1 million for 1988-89. That is because, since 1985-86, East Yorkshire had been treating fewer of its own local patients than had been expected and planned for. This has created additional pressures on the neighbouring authority in Hull. In particular, although East Yorkshire health authority is treating cardiac patients from neighbouring health authorities, large numbers of psychiatric patients are crossing the border into Hull, where resources are being stretched to meet their care.

The pattern of revenue funding that we have had so far has enabled East Yorkshire to transfer considerable sums of money every year from revenue to capital, which does not lead one to feel that the revenue side of its budget has been under enormous strain. I am advised that the adjustment will not adversely affect patient services, although I can well understand that the management of East Yorkshire health authority, which naturally had all sorts of plans for spending that money, could feel somewhat troubled.

We should look at it this way: the NHS money has been redistributed to the benefit of NHS patients. As my hon. Friend said, of the £1 million, £250,000 will be used to improve the super district cardio-thoracic services at Castle Hill hospital. This means that services are available for patients from more than just one district. Thus, that handing back of £250,000 will reflect the movement of patients into East Yorkshire. A further £250,000 will be earmarked by the region as a bridging fund for mental health services in East Yorkshire.

If my hon. Friend was able to hear any of the debate that immediately preceded this one, he will know that we have difficulties in creating the kind of community care services that we all want to see, so that people do not have to travel a long way from home for their care and, particularly, in the case of the long-term chronic sick and mental illness, they can expect to be cared for closer to home. The remaining £500,000 will be allocated to Hull, in part to reflect the cross-boundary flows that I have already mentioned.

This is not a cut, and it is not banditry either. I assure my hon. Friend that spending in his constituency and in the vicinity is still tending to go up, not down. Neither the Chancellor nor the taxpayer will see that £1 million again. I suspect that it will be joined by many more millions of pounds in years to come, as I have already said. People from the north bank of the Humber, including my hon. Friend's constituents, will continue to benefit from this money. It has been earmarked for specific services within East Yorkshire, rather than giving the DHA an entirely free hand with spending, and it will provide services from which East Yorkshire's residents will benefit. The continuing capital development at Castle Hill should not be affected.

As my hon. Friend said, a full-option appraisal will be undertaken on the optimal long-term pattern of general hospital services on the north bank of the Humber for the total population. Further, the two district health authorities have been asked to report within six months on the opportunities for the management of services for mental illness and mentally handicapped people. Perhaps the report will be made by one authority on behalf of both. The revenue allocation in respect of other services will be reviewed. It will have regard to the most recent information on the cross-boundary flow and it will be monitored thereafter, which should pick up some of the points that my hon. Friend mentioned.

We look forward to further co-operation in the health care of local people, which will benefit everyone, including my hon. Friend's constituents.

Crown Prosecution Service

1.30 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I am grateful for the opportunity to initiate this Adjournment debate and I am grateful to the Attorney-General for attending to respond to it.

It is unusual for me to be able to debate legal matters because I act as spokesman on environmental matters for my party. I am grateful to take a break from that activity, particularly as it is Maundy Thursday, which is one of the days in the legal year when the Attorney-General, I and others scan the newspapers to see who have been made Queen's Counsels. We congratulate those who have been appointed.

I entitled my application for a debate "the prosecution policy of the Crown Prosecution Service in cases involving death." The cause for my concern dates back to when I was elected to the House, and is coupled with my experience as a practising member of the Bar. My concern was how decisions to prosecute in the name of the Crown on behalf of the public were taken in particularly important cases.

The three cases that have specifically come my way relate to three young men from south London who were killed or died in dubious circumstances as a result of which criminal proceedings were considered. The first case concern a young man called David Sibun, who was assaulted on 1 January 1984. He was a neighbour of mine in Lynton road, Bermondsey, and I knew him and his family. He died in hospital having spent a short period in a coma. Criminal proceedings flowed from the incident. Pleas were accepted by the Director of Public Prosecutions to charges of assault and affray, and two young men were convicted. At that time the Attorney-General was the Solicitor-General. He did me the courtesy of allowing me to see him about the matters arising from that case, such as whether more substantial charges should have been brought, which was what I was seeking to persuade him about, so that, as a Law Officer, he could direct the DPP to prefer more substantial charges, given that the young man died following the assault and would not have died had it not been for that assault.

The second case concerned another young Bermondsey man, Mark Hogg. On 5 October 1985 he died in hospital in Exeter. He had been a prisoner in Exeter prison and had escaped while being transferred to that prison from Yeovil. He subsequently became ill and died in strange circumstances. His case was the subject of the longest inquest in the history of English criminal law and the result was an open verdict. That raised questions whether charges should have been preferred, although matters are still being considered by solicitors and proceedings might yet be taken, but they will probably be private proceedings.

The third case concerned the death on 29 June 1986 of another young man from south London called Robert McHayle. Last Saturday, a private summons was issued. The case is now sub judice, so it would be wrong for us to debate the issues and evidence until the matter has been resolved. Therefore, I will try to steer well clear of those matters while raising the general concerns that flow from the three cases and from the policy as a whole.

I think that I can rightly give the facts of the case concerning this young man, to complete the picture. Robert McHayle, who was 20 years old, was stabbed to death on 29 June 1986. A charge was brought by the police in respect of another young man from south London. After the investigation, the charge was not proceeded with, the inquest was reopened and, as a result of the inquest, a verdict of unlawful killing was reached. The unusual factor was that the coroner asked that the police re-examine the case with a view to proceeding with a charge. I do not propose to go any further. The matter is now potentially back before the courts, with the prosecution being taken privately and not by the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Attorney-General will no doubt remember that there was a substantial public interest, and almost an outcry, at a case in Scotland when the hon. and learned Member for Perth and Kinross (Mr. Fairbairn) was a Law Officer. He decided not to prosecute in a rape case, but a private prosecution, which secured convictions, was taken out. That caused substantial public interest because it raised the same issue. Does not the need for a private prosecution, and the fact of a subsequent conviction, suggest that there should have been a public prosecution and that people guilty of serious offences should have been prosecuted? These three cases of young men from south London all resulted in deaths and the debate is limited to that issue.

The rules, as far as they exist, are clear, in the sense that there is, and has always been, a code governing prosecuting on behalf of the Crown and it is now governed, as the Attorney-General will no doubt confirm, by section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. Section 10(2) provides that a code should be attached to the annual report of the Director of Public Prosecutions to the Attorney-General. One such report was produced last August.

I wish to examine not the way in which the evidence in any of the three cases was considered, but the way in which decisions are generally made about such matters. Does the Attorney-General agree, as many much more learned members of the legal profession than I have argued, that there should be an opportunity for debate, annually or biannually, in the House on the code and on another document, which is not in the public domain in the same way — the manual of policy and practice governing Crown prosecutions?

We often have the opportunity to debate such codes of practice — for example, that for local government. A substantial public interest would be served if the House periodically debated these matters, so that concerns about the way in which prosecutions on behalf of the public are carried out can be subject to scrutiny here and we can helpfully advise Law Officers of the Crown, officers under them and holders of public office, such as the Director of Public Prosecutions and the head of the Crown Prosecution Service, of the view of the legislature. That is my first specific request. That would be beneficial, and there is considerable demand for such a move.

My second request is to ask the Attorney-General whether he can help the House to identify the level at which decisions about whether to prosecute are made in cases involving death. I would argue that it is right and fair, and is seen to be so, if decisions on such cases are made at the highest level — by which I mean that, after advice has been sought in the normal way from the Treasury counsel, the DPP himself reviews the case. Cases that result in death are potentially in the category of the most serious crimes, and should be treated with appropriate seriousness by those to whom we entrust responsibility. It would be helpful if the Attorney-General could tell us about the level at which decisions are made in different types of case.

Thirdly, there is the ability to review initial decisions. That, I suggest, can be done in either of two ways: when there is specific cause for review, they can be put into the public domain — when, for example, a coroner asks for that to be done in his statement, summing up or comments after an inquest verdict; or the police can ask for it to be done. There are, of course, provisions for discretion to take account of the public view, but I ask for a specific procedure whereby it can clearly be seen that a review is taking place. That would be either at the instigation of the DPP, the Attorney-General or the Solicitor-General, as the code would provide, or by application to the courts from someone who considered that the proper way to proceed. It would be a form of judicial review. That, I think, would alleviate the concern of my constituents, the family of the deceased David Sibun, that the case had not been heard.

I should like briefly to explore a fourth issue: the tests that are used. There are two tests — the test that the evidence is sufficient, and the test that the matter is in the public interest. It is clear from the code that the Crown prosecutors have substantial discretion, and I do not quibble with that. There must be a realistic prospect of conviction. But paragraph 8 of the code states:

> "The factors which can properly lead to a decision not to prosecute will vary from case to case, but broadly speaking, the graver the offence, the less likelihood there will be that the public interest will allow of a disposal less than prosecution, for example, a caution."

I feel that there should be a possibility in the second test —the public interest test—that, when death has resulted, the balance of the moment — generally a better-than-evens prospect of a conviction, in the public interest and on the evidence—should be reviewed to ensure that the public interest is served. The fear of possible additional evidence — especially after an inquest — or a feeling by the family of the deceased that there has not been enough inquiry into matters that concern them should be brought before the courts and seen to be reviewed.

One of the problems is that in any criminal case dealt with by the police and the Crown Prosecution Service the prosecution is by definition out of the hands of private citizens, be they family or other. Those personally affected feel excluded, and often are excluded in practice.

I feel that if, after the series of events that I have described, a decision is made to issue a private prosecution and a summons is sought and granted—as in the case that has prompted me to speak today — specific consideration should be given by the Attorney-General or the Solicitor-General to whether the case should be taken over, as is perfectly permissible, on behalf of the public, so that the prosecution becomes a public prosecution. There are practical reasons for that; not least the cost of pursuing a private prosecution, which can be considerable and often prohibitive. Once it has been decided that a summons is acceptable, and the summons is issued, the matter should normally go into the public domain, subject to clearly certified exceptions.

I ask the Attorney-General to consider whether he or, by direction, the head of the Crown Prosecution Service will consider taking the McHayle case into the public domain and prosecute on behalf of the public for the convenience of both the public and of the family of the deceased.

1.45 pm

The Attorney-General (Sir Patrick Mayhew): I congratulate the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on his success in the ballot, and especially upon the careful and reasonable way in which he dealt with such important and difficult subjects. In some cases, they occasion deep anxiety and strong feelings among our constituents, and they need to be ventilated. They must always be addressed with the greatest care and sensitivity by those who have jurisdiction over them.

Three questions are relevant to my reply. First, what criteria does the Director of Public Prosecutions and, through him, the Crown Prosecution Service apply in deciding whether to institute or to continue criminal proceedings? Secondly, when, in the public interest, should cases be brought before a court by the prosecuting authorities—notwithstanding that they reckon that there is no realistic prospect of conviction? Thirdly, in what circumstances and on the basis of what criteria should the Director of Public Prosecutions intervene and assume responsibility for the conduct of a private prosecution?

The hon. Gentleman referred to the code for Crown prosecutors, and in recent months I have referred to it on a number of occasions in answer to parliamentary questions. As it states in its introductory paragraph, it is:

"A public declaration of the principles upon which the Crown Prosecution Service will exercise its functions."

That code reflects the guidelines published by my predecessor, now Lord Havers. He was the first Attorney-General to publish the criteria upon which prosecuting decisions were taken by him, and which he recommended to all prosecuting authorities.

That code is now issued pursuant to section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. It is included in the annual report which the director makes to me under the Act, and which is laid before Parliament. There is a copy of the code in the Library. It makes it perfectly clear that the Crown prosecutor must ask himself two basic questions, as the hon. Gentleman correctly said, before deciding whether to institute or to continue criminal proceedings. The first is, is the evidence sufficient? Secondly, does the public interest require a prosecution?

It is important to note the order in which those questions are posed. It is fundamental to our system of criminal justice that a person should not be made to stand trial unless there is a sufficiently strong case against him before the proceedings are commenced. It is an important rule of fairness and of practice that someone is not made to stand trial merely because, for example, some might like to see him in the dock, no matter how much sympathy that feeling might reasonably attract. Prosecutions are not, and should not be, instituted simply to clear the air.

The sufficiency of evidence criterion has long been part of our criminal process. It has been explained and described in different ways at different times. In recent years it was expressed thus:

"Whether a reasonable jury, properly directed in the law, would be more likely to convict than to acquit."

In layman's terms, that was sometimes described as the "51 per cent. rule".

The test is now expressed another way, and again I quote fom the code:

"A prosecution should not be started or continued unless the Crown Prosecutor is satisfied that there is admissible, substantial and reliable evidence that a criminal offence known to the law has been committed by an identifiable person. The Crown Prosecution Service does not support the proposition that a bare prima facie case is enough, but rather will apply the test of whether there is a realistic prospect of a conviction. When reaching this decision the Crown Prosecutor as a first step will wish to satisfy himself that there is no realistic expectation of an ordered acquittal"— that is ordered by the court—

"or a successful submission in the Magistrates' Court of no case to answer. He should also have regard to any lines of defence which are plainly open to, or have been indicated by, the accused and any other factors which in his view would affect the likelihood or otherwise of a conviction."

The code expands on this, in setting out a number of matters to which the Crown prosecutor should have regard when evaluating the evidence. They all go towards that first essential decision: is there a realistic prospect of a conviction?

Having satisfied himself that the evidence can justify proceedings, the Crown prosecutor moves then — and only then — to the second question: does the public interest require a prosecution? I have already this year had cause to remind the House of the universality of that test. The code rightly pays great attention to that important question. It sets out a number of factors that might properly be taken into consideration in a list that is exemplary but not exhaustive.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey referred to offences resulting in death. It is hard to conceive of circumstances in which it would not be in the public interest to prosecute a defendant for murder, provided that there was a realistic prospect of conviction. As I understand it, that matter is not in issue today. The real question is how that first test is satisfied.

The Crown Prosecution Service was set up to ensure that decisions in the great majority of criminal cases were taken by qualified lawyers, independent of the police. Members of the service are charged with the duty to ask themselves those two essential questions to which I have referred. The hon. Gentleman asked whether there should be circumstances in which prosecutions might be allowed to go ahead notwithstanding the fact that the Crown prosecutor is not satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction.

I do not think that that would be compatible with the purposes for which the Crown Prosecution Service was established. We have a Crown Prosecution Service to ensure that all cases are properly evaluated and that only those likely to result in a conviction are allowed to proceed. The exercise of the power to bring criminal proceedings against someone can be highly invasive of the citizen's liberties. It is not to be undertaken lightly; it must be undertaken upon the application of established principles by a trained mind, and never merely in response to clamour.

I am coming to the specific questions that the hon. Gentleman asked. First, he asked in what circumstances the service would intervene and assume responsibility for the conduct of proceedings that had been started privately. There is no straightforward answer to that question. Each case, inevitably, must be judged on its own facts. The director has the power to take over the conduct of such proceedings at any time, should he think it appropriate, but, at the same time, section 6 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 expressly reserves the right of private citizens to institute criminal proceedings.

There may be circumstances where, even though there would appear to be a realistic prospect of a conviction, it would not be in the public interest for a prosecution to proceed. In such circumstances, the director might well assume the responsibility for those proceedings and discontinue them. Examples of such circumstances are set out in the passage of the code to which I have referred. Moreover, in rare circumstances I might myself enter a nolle prosequi and bring such proceedings to an end.

However, I do not think that the hon. Gentleman is concerned with such cases today. Where the director's decision not to prosecute or to discontinue proceedings is based solely on the sufficiency of the evidence, it would be highly unlikely that he would intervene so as to discontinue a subsequently instituted private prosecution. There may be cases of such prosecutions where examining justices consider that there is a case on which the defendant should be committed for trial at the Crown court. In such circumstances it would not be unusual for the director to assume responsibility for the conduct of those proceedings and to prosecute them in the Crown court, notwithstanding his own earlier decision not to prosecute.

The hon. Gentleman asked whether, in a case where death has resulted and a private prosecution has been instituted, the almost invariable rule ought to be that the director should take over the proceedings. In those circumstances, the question whether the prosecution should be taken over by the director is always very carefully considered. There are substantial advantages in the director taking over such a prosecution, which I do not need to spell out here; in many cases, they are obvious. However, there may be rare occasions when the director, having taken the decision that the evidence is insufficient, will not wish to take it over. Therefore, I cannot accede to the proposal that it should be an almost inevitable rule, but I assure the hon. Gentleman that most careful consideration is given to that question in the circumstances that he posed. It is quite right that that practice should continue.

The hon. Gentleman asked whether there ought to be an opportunity for an annual or regular debate on the application of the code. I am always happy to be given an opportunity to give the facts about the performance of the Crown Prosecution Service. The hon. Gentleman knows that the allocation of parliamentary time is for my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, not me, but when an opportunity is offered I always find it valuable to tell the House about what the Crown Prosecution Service has been doing and to draw a much better picture of it than is portrayed by the media. I should be happy to have an opportunity to explain the operation of the code, but that does not rest with me.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the level at which decisions are taken to prosecute when offences have resulted in death. It is taken at a high level. One of the advantages of the Crown Prosecution Service is that decisions have been decentralised. Decisions that were taken in almost every case by the Director of Public Prosecutions in London are now taken at chief Crown prosecutor level in the regions. It affords a better opportunity to take into account local considerations, and that change is therefore to be welcomed. It would always be at chief Crown prosecutor level that a decision of that kind would be taken, and in a particularly difficult or sensitive case it would properly be taken by the director, sometimes in consultation with one or other of the Law Officers.

I was asked about the ability to ask for a review of a specific decision if a coroner or the police asked for such a review. That can best be done without referring to me or to the Director of Public Prosecutions. There is no inclination to hold to a decision simply because it has been reached at a certain level and in certain circumstances. In all reasonable circumstances, there is complete readiness to review a decision, not least because everyone concerned recognises the importance of retaining public confidence in the Crown Prosecution Service.

Lastly, I was asked about the tests applied in relation to the rule about sufficiency of evidence and the rule in relation to the public interest. The hon. Gentleman suggested that where death has resulted there ought to be a review always to ensure that the public interest has been served. I think that I dealt with that at the beginning of my reply when I said that it is universally recognised within the Crown Prosecution Service that a case where death has taken place in potentially criminal circumstances needs to be treated with special care and particular sensitivity. Not every case that results in death, however, can properly be prosecuted if the rules are to be adhered to. It is important that we exercise the power of prosecution with care because, as I have already said, it is a highly invasive power with marked effects upon the liberties of the citizen.

I hope that I have replied satisfactorily to the points raised by the hon. Gentleman about this extremely important subject.

Exercise Fire Focus

2 pm

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend (Bexleyheath): I am grateful for this opportunity to initiate a debate on exercise Fire Focus and, in particular, on its diplomatic consequences. I was present when the Minister of State for the Armed Forces told the House on 11 February during the debate on the Royal Air Force:

"Next month we intend to hold the first full-scale reinforcement exercise, known as Fire Focus. The exercise will be directed by HQ RAF Strike Command at High Wycombe, and will take place between 7 and 31 March. It will involve the reinforcement of the garrison's air defences and an airlift of troops to the Falklands, followed by unit exercises to take advantage of the excellent training facilities in the islands." —[Official Report, 11 February 1988; Vol. 127, c. 532.]

It is possible that the phrase "full-scale" gave the impression that the exercise was to be bigger than was in fact intended. The Ministry of Defence press release mentioned

"significant numbers of troops and quantities of equipment."

As my hon. Friend the Minister knows, the announcement caused a considerable diplomatic flurry — greater, I suspect, than had been envisaged by the Foreign Office. Air Chief Marshal Sir Peter Harding, no less, told an international press conference on 8 March that the announcement had created "enormous ructions around the world."

In the Argentine, according to the Financial Times of 9 March,

"Political groups from the far-right and far-left held separate demonstrations in the capital, condemning not only 'British imperialism', but also the Argentine Government for its supposed weak posture and its seeming lack of clear military contingency plans."

That Government, in a statement put out on 3 March, said of the exercise:

"In addition to violating the sovereign rights of Argentina, such action is in direct contradiction to the United Nations and OAS resolution on this question . . . In case of need the relevant defence plans shall be put in operation."

The armed forces were put on what was described "defensive alert".

On 17 March Senor Danie Caputo, the Argentine Foreign Minister, told a special meeting of the United Nations Security Council that the exercise created tension and insecurity and threatened international peace. The Organisation of American States officially condemned the exercise, as did the Andean foreign ministers. The Group of 8 — the Contadora group — called for it to be cancelled. Brazil asked my hon. Friend the Minister to postpone his visit. A Foreign Office spokesman described bilateral relations with this increasingly important country as "awkward". United States' concern was clear. The Latin American editor of The Independent wrote on 18 February:

"The British exercises have caused a diplomatic flurry in Latin America, and irritation in the US State Department, where officials make no secret at their annoyance with what they see as Mrs. Thatcher's intransigence over the Falklands. The United States has been anxious to reduce tensions in the South Atlantic and restore its relationship with Argentina. Their frustration with Britain is exacerbated by specific differences of policy and interests between the two countries. Some US officials, for instance, wish to help Argentina to re-equip its armed forces".

Other countries saw the exercise as a demonstration of force. In Britain, there was a surprising number of hostile comments in the press, and not just in The Guardian. The Times said that the Foreign Office was left "with some catching up to do—and at a time when Britain is anxious to raise its trading profile on the South American continent. One must question therefore whether the ground was well enough prepared through Britain's embassies in Argentina's Latin neighbours . . . Britain should act to repair this damage quickly."

The Daily Telegraph headlined its editorial, "Act of Folly". It described Fire Focus as "an insensitive piece of sabre-rattling".

It went too far. The exercise has undoubtedly restored the issue of the Falklands to international prominence and a number of points and questions arise from that fact.

I have no hesitation in saying that exercise Fire Focus, which finishes today, was a sensible and legitimate military measure and that there was an over-reaction in Argentina and some other Latin American countries.

The garrison in the islands has been reduced from some 5,000 to about 1,500—the figures are not made public. The other side of the coin is that rapid reinforcement by long-haul troop transport aircraft must be possible, and be seen to be possible, through practice. If such exercises do not take place, the Chief of Defence Staff would be right to call for a larger garrison. That is clearly not in the interests of Britain or of Argentina and certainly not in the interests of the islanders.

Exercise Fire Focus, which had been planned by the Ministry of Defence for several months and which involved a battalion of my old regiment — the Light Infantry—and did not involve the Royal Navy, had, I presume, been timed to coincide with the islands' summer, such as it is. In diplomatic terms, however, the timing was unfortunate. The United States has been mediating to try to avoid incidents between fisheries patrol vessels of Argentina and the United Kingdom and, it is hoped, perhaps to obtain a multinational fisheries agreement.

In Argentina, twice in the past year President Alfonsin has had serious problems with elements of the Argentine military which, according to today's papers, are still not completely over. Without doubt, the impression has been given at home and abroad that our Foreign Office played an insufficient part in the planning stages of the exercise. Perhaps its views were not sufficiently pressed home and taken into account. It had inadequately prepared the ground in Latin America—that is clear.

What advance notice was given to the Argentine Ministry of Foreign Affairs by the Swiss ambassador acting on our behalf? We have complained in the past that Argentina has not given us sufficient notice of important developments. How much discussion took place with the United States' State Department beforehand? We clearly had a duty to keep our allies well briefed, and one wonders why it was necessary for the US Deputy Assistant Secretary for Latin American Affairs to make an unscheduled visit to Argentina after our official announcement. I trust that the exercise was a success in defence terms.

What is my hon. Friend doing to repair that diplomatic damage and to tidy up the diplomatic debris? Has a new date been agreed for his visit to Brazil? Where does that leave United States mediation on the fisheries regime? Are there draft plans for any such exercises in the future and, if so, how will the Foreign Office improve its performance next time around?

The events of the past few weeks also remind us, if any reminder is needed, that, although the guns stopped firing in the south Atlantic one cold morning almost six years ago, depressingly little progress has been made in patching up our historic quarrel with Argentina, a democratic pro-Western, potentially friendly nation. The Government have not yet achieved the restoration of diplomatic links, even at the most lowly level. How right was a previous Select Committee on Foreign Affairs, which had a Conservative majority and Chairman, when it told the House, following a visit to the islands in January 1983:

"Your Committee do not believe that present policy, however necessary it may be in the short term, offers a stable future for the Islands. Not only are its material and political costs burdensome, but the policy itself is reactive and inflexible, and carries with it unfortunate implications for the wider conduct of foreign policy both now and for the future."

The passage of time has made the shortcomings of that policy even more apparent. Starting from a position of real moral and military strength, we are now on the defensive and find ourselves over this exercise — and, for that matter, every year in the United Nations General Assembly—widely criticised, even by our European and Commonwealth partners. The world does not support us over the question of the islands. It votes against us. The diplomatic initiative has been passed to the Argentine, which has also been inflexible.

The total cost for the financial years 1983-84 to 1987-88 is about £3,340 million, or about £160 per taxpayer. To put it another way, over four years, £3·3 billion was spent on behalf of the 400 families who make up the islands' population, when expatriates and their families are discounted. That was during a time of financial restraint at home.

Some 8 per cent. of the total efforts of the Royal Navy's dwindling number of destroyers and frigates is committed to the south Atlantic. In this country, the opinion polls suggest that, even among Conservative voters, the Government's policy is out of step with public attitudes. The public clearly want to see diplomatic relations restored and do not have a hang-up over the future of the region.

That part of the world is crying out for the diplomatic skills that the Government have been able to deploy and display over Rhodesia, now Zimbabwe, and Hong Kong and over negotiations with Spain on Gibraltar. That part of the world is well suited to a timely, vigorous and well-prepared intervention by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister so that we can move on in this Parliament to a new, profitable and, above all, peaceful period of co-operation with all the countries and people concerned with the future of the south Atlantic.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Does the hon. Gentleman have the consent of the hon. Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) and the Minister to speak?

Mr. Townsend indicated assent.

2.14 pm

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): My hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) considerably overrates the damage that the exercise has done to Britain's relationship with Latin America. It is well known that Latin American solidarity is based on a different scale of priorities in considering its diplomatic position.

The only real tangible reaction that we have seen to the exercise has been the postponement of my hon. Friend the Minister's visit to Brazil. We should note carefully the reaction in Brazil to that decision to postpone his visit. The three major Brazilian newspapers based in Rio de Janeiro strongly criticised the cancellation of that visit and referred to what Brazilians and the Brazilian business community felt was the powerful relationship between Britain and Brazil.

My experience of Latin America is that the solidarity between Latin American countries is as wide as the River Plate, but it is only ankle-deep. Far more important to the individual countries of Latin America is their relationships as individual countries with Britain as one of the leading economies of the western world.

2.15 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Tim Eggar): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) for raising this subject and to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) for joining in.

A great deal has been said in the press and in international fora about exercise Fire Focus. Sadly, much of the speculation about its purpose and scope has been inaccurate and exaggerated. Perhaps, as a result, some of the international reaction has been ill-judged and inappropriate. Therefore, I particularly welcome this opportunity once again to set the record straight.

Let me begin by putting the exercise firmly in context. The Government are pledged to the defence of the Falkland Islands. Everybody recognises that. It is not a pledge that we take lightly. Our strategy for the defence of the islands depends crucially, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath has said, on an ability rapidly to reinforce our military presence there. We made that strategy absolutely clear in the White Paper in 1982.

Mount Pleasant airport was completed in 1985, allowing wide-bodied transport aircraft to land in the islands. Since then we have halved—I repeat halved—the size of the garrison. The garrison is now at the lowest minimum level consonant with a realistic defence capability.

Of course, that major reduction in force levels has been possible only because of the knowledge that we could, and would, be able to fly in reinforcements at short notice. But we cannot take that reinforcement capability on trust. We have to test it regularly. We hope never to have to reinforce the garrison in earnest, but that is an eventuality that no responsable Government can lightly leave to chance.

Many other nations conduct similar, routine reinforcement exercises. Those exercises are accepted as a normal part of the process by which we work to maintain our security. That is well understood. No one can seriously suggest that the holding of such exercises brings us somehow to the brink of hostilities.

Accordingly, let me emphasise that exercise Fire Focus was not in any way a response to an increase in tension in the area. It was not conceived abruptly, or with any provocative intent. On the contrary, as I have already said, we made it clear in 1982 in a White Paper on the Falklands campaign that reinforcement exercises would be carried out as and when necessary—a fact which, I have to say, some commentators, and even hon. Members, seem conveniently to overlook. I exempt my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath from that.

Following the completion of Mount Pleasant airport, the austral summer of 1988 was timely for operational, logistical and weather reasons. As my hon. Friend has said, my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces announced the exercise in the House on 11 February. He made it plain that the exercise was routine. He also pointed out that, by its very nature, it contributed to an overall lowering of tension in the region as an integral part of a policy of maintaining a reinforcement capability, and, hence, only a minimum permanent garrison in the island.

My hon. Friend has claimed that a decision to hold the exercise shows a lack of co-ordination at the very least between the Foreign Office and the Ministry of Defence. I want to assure my hon. Friend that the Foreign Office was consulted about the exercise at an early stage. I cannot for one moment agree that the responsibility for maintaining our commitment to the Falkland Islands is incompatible with maintaining and developing our good relationships in the region as a whole.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath asked whether we had informed the Argentine Government in advance about the exercise. The Swiss ambassador informed the Argentine authorities on the morning of 12 February, the announcement having been made in the House the previous evening. My hon. Friend would have been surprised if the Argentine Government had been informed before the House of the decision to hold the exercise. We must remember that the Argentines have been aware for many years of our policy of practising exercises for the reinforcement of the garrison.

Fire Focus was conducted deliberately with the smallest number of troops and aircraft required to provide a realistic test of reinforcement capability. Fewer than 1,000 men and only a small number of aircraft were involved. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath said, the exercise was concluded today. The garrison has now returned to its former size. There has been no permanent increase in force levels. I am happy to say that Fire Focus has been a success and we have shown that we can and will honour our commitments to the Falkland islanders.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath referred to the reaction in Argentina to the reinforcement exercise. Following its announcement, the Argentine Government called for the cancellation of the exercise. They sought to apply pressure in the international ora and through third countries. They tabled a resolution before the Organisation of American States and called for a debate in the Security Council. That was a quite unjustified reaction to a purely routine and defensive exercise. The exaggerated nature of the Argentine response was reflected in their public statements. The Argentines spoke of the involvement of 5,000 troops and large numbers of aircraft, figures which frankly were simply plucked out of thin air and did not bear any relation to reality.

Accusations were also made that the exercise was contrary to the spirit of the United Nation's resolution creating a south Atlantic zone of peace. That resolution was instigated by Brazil and we, of course, supported it. Yet the resolution in no way limits the right of states to take adequate precautions to defend their territory.

The exercise was not the result of any increase in tension in the area. We welcome statements by the Argentine Government that they will seek to resolve differences between Britain and Argentina only by peaceful means. We wish Argentina's democratic Government well. We look forward to the day when the Argentine Government will recognise the democratic right of the Falkland islanders to live in peace and security under a Government of their own choosing. However—and this is a very important point—we must recognise that the Argentine Government do not recognise that democratic right at present. So long as the Argentines maintain their claim to the Falklands, we shall have to retain a capacity to deal with the unexpected. The House would rightly criticise us if we shirked that clear national responsibility.

We fully recognised that exercise Fire Focus would arouse interest and perhaps concern in Latin America, even though our policy of carrying out such exercises was already well known. We took considerable care to explain our position to some Governments most closely concerned with the exercise. If some of the public statements from the Organisation of American States failed to reflect what we said to it, of course we regret that. However, I must tell my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath that some of the speeches came as no surprise to us.

My hon. Friends referred to the decision by the Brazilian Government to postpone my visit to Brazil. We have already made clear our attitude to that postponement. Personally, I very much regret the postponement, especially in view of our good bilateral relations and because I wished Brazil to be the country of my first visit to Latin America. It was unfortunate that I was denied an opportunity to explain clearly and to discuss our policies on the Falklands and a wide range of other issues, but I am confident that the overall quality of our relations with the countries of Latin America will not be affected. Other opportunities for interchange will be found in the not-too-distant future.

Mr. Townsend: Looking back on it, does my hon. Friend agree that it would have been better if the initial statement had spelt out the small size of the force taking part?

Mr. Eggar: Of course, my hon. Friend has the benefit of hindsight. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces made it clear in his statement that it was a limited, routine exercise, and there was an overreaction to that statement. I believe that my hon. Friend recognises that.

Finally, since 1982, we have sought ways of restoring more normal relations with Argentina. We see no contradiction between improving our bilateral relations with Argentina and defending the rights of the Falkland islanders to decide their future. To the Argentines, negotiations on sovereignty mean simply the transfer of the islands to Argentina, irrespective of the wishes of the islanders. But the search for more normal relations with Argentina has always been our aim, and it will remain so. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has repeatedly made it clear that the desk of the Argentine Foreign Minister is groaning under the weight of our proposals. I regret that the Argentine Government's response has been so disappointing.

Let us consider the facts. In September 1982, we agreed with Argentina to abolish the financial restrictions that both sides had introduced at the time of the conflict. We honoured our undertaking immediately and in full. Argentina has implemented that undertaking only partly, and there are still restrictions against British companies in Argentina. In 1983, we proposed the resumption of air links, but the Argentine Government have yet to reply. The Argentines have failed to respond to our frequent demonstrations of readiness to return Argentine military dead to Argentina. Nor have they taken up our offer to accept a bona fide visit to the islands by Argentine next-of-kin. Further, in 1985, we unilaterally lifted all trade restrictions on Argentina. Once again there has been no reply.

If my hon. Friend wishes to effect an improvement in Anglo-Argentine relations—that has been his objective for several years and he has pursued it assiduously—he should direct his efforts to encouraging a more positive attitude in the Argentine Government. They must respond to the many initiatives that we have taken.

I end on a more positive note. My hon. Friend mentioned the exchanges that have taken place, via the Americans, on fisheries. He knows that more than a year ago we began to exchange ideas with Argentina on how both countries could co-operate on fisheries conservation in the south Atlantic. That exchange stemmed directly from an initiative that we took at the Food and Agriculture Organisation in Rome because we were concerned about the conservation of fish stocks in the south Atlantic. I am happy to say that that exchange on fisheries with Argentina continues. I can assure the House and my hon. Friend that we shall do all we can to help that exchange succeed. We very much hope that the Argentine Government will respond positively.

We hope that six years after the Falklands conflict the Argentines will recognise that the only realistic way to improve relations is through co-operation on practical measures of benefit to both our countries.

The Executive (Powers)

2.30 pm

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): I welcome the Minister of State, Privy Council Office. I understand that there has been some difficulty in rustling up a Minister to respond to the debate and that the buck has been back and forth between the Minister of State, Privy Council Office and the Minister of State, Home Office and has finally come to rest with the right hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) in the Chamber. In the absence of the Prime Minister, I welcome him.

The "Powers of the Executive" is a title that I alighted upon after sound advice from the Table Office. My preferred title would have been, "The drift towards a one-party state". I understand that that would not be entirely in order. I am seeking to draw attention to the growing trend towards authoritarianism in the government of this country over the past 10 years. That has become a matter of concern to people of all political persuasions, including some Conservative Members, and was recently the subject of a debate in the other place.

There is concern that the Government have used their office to dismantle or neutralise legitimate opposition to them and that respected institutions have been reduced to instruments of the state or, in some cases, instruments of the Tory party. There is also concern that the interests of the state and the Tory party are, to some extent, becoming synonymous. There is a growing tendency among persons in office to denounce dissenters as mad, loony or the enemies within, without addressing the issues that such people raise. That is an unhealthy trend and it reverses the long, but by no means complete, journey to democracy in our country over the past 200 years.

Contrary to what has sometimes been alleged, democracy in this country was not a gift from the Conservative party. Indeed, it was seized from long periods of Conservative government after a lengthy period of popular uprising. I and others are under no illusion. We know that the power of the ruling power party in this country is unmatched in the industrial world and probably unmatched outside the countries of the Stalin system. Most of us recognise that, although hon. Members come up for re-election every four or five years, our ruling class does not come up for re-election, any more than does the ruling class in the Soviet Union.

Although from time to time the Conservative party is obliged to concede control over the House of Commons, Tory control over most other institutions in this country is permanent and overwhelming. I do not seek to be controversial but that is a statement of fact which probably would not be disputed, at least in private, by many Conservative Members. Our judiciary, senior levels of the police force, the officer corps of the armed forces, leading elements in industry and finance, many senior civil servants and diplomats, the media, the board of governors of the BBC and, of course, the other side of the House are dominated by persons whose political persuasions are those of one party. That is how it has always been for as long as anyone can remember. It has become more so rather than less so in recent years, despite the appearance of several accountants and estate agents on the Conservative Benches.

Regardless of who is in control in the House of Commons at any given time, the commanding heights of our society have always been run by people whose loyalty to their class has taken precedence over their loyalty to the elected Government. I accept that there are exceptions and that there are persons of integrity in all walks of life. As I said, I do not seek to be controversial because, privately, many Conservative Members would recognise what I say.

Despite all their rhetoric about their love of democracy, many Conservative Members have a deep distrust of the democratic process. When the electorate fails to deliver, they never hesitate to call upon the vast array of extra-parliamentary forces that are always at the disposal of the Conservative party. Labour Governments have been tolerated as long as they posed no threat to the class interests of those who have ruled us since time immemorial. Anti-democratic forces have never been far below the surface. For example, all of us can remember the attempted coup by Cecil King in 1968 to set up a business men's Government, presided over — I am sure reluctantly, in the face of his objections — by Lord Mountbatten. We can all remember, during the time of the 1974-79 Labour Government, General Sir Walter Walker's efforts to set up some kind of private army, and the rather more sinister operation by, I believe, the founder of the Special Air Service, Colonel David Stirling, and a organisation called GB75. Although General Walker was the subject of some ridicule at the time, he was, after all, a former commander of NATO forces in northern Europe. Of course, more recently, we have learnt from the memoirs of a former senior member of the intelligence services of an attempt by up to 40 members of the intelligence services to destabilise the Government of Lord Wilson.

I and others of my persuasion are under no illusions. The anti-democratic forces that have always been present have at least, on the whole, been kept below the surface. Over the past two centuries the trend has been towards making this country more democratic, more open, less authoritarian and more tolerant. That was the case until seven or eight years ago. The Government have reversed that trend. They have gone over and above what any of their predecessors in our lifetime have done, and are systematically undermining the means by which legitimate opposition and dissent can function. They have shamelessly degraded our democratic institutions. We have a Prime Minister who talks not of defeating the Opposition, but of eliminating the Opposition.

That has happened most in local government. Vigorous local government was one of the hallmarks of our democracy. Very often, the parties in power in the town halls and civic centres in the country were different from the one that was in power in Government. That remains the case. Some local authorities are good, some are bad, but all are accountable to the electorate that put them there.

Since the Government came to power, they have waged a continual war against local government. That war has been cynically targeted against local authorities controlled by the Labour party. Spending figures have been gerrymandered to penalise local authorities controlled by Labour. Perhaps the most cynical example was the abolition of the metropolitan authorities. It was the first time this century — certainly during my lifetime — that any Government had seen fit to abolish elections. All those seven metropolitan authorities were controlled by the Labour party. If just one had been controlled by the Conservative party the exercise might have been a little more credible. It was impossible to avoid concluding that it was merely an attempt to stifle effective opposition because the Government could not rely on the electorate to do that.

One of the more depressing sights of recent times was Lords — many of whom were feudalists, never mind Conservatives — being summoned from their stately homes and castles to abolish elections in London. I have seen members of the other place lecturing the Soviet Union about the need for greater democracy and openness. That was rather rich coming from people who were in the other place because of hereditary title or appointment. Our masters are nothing if not unembarrassable.

The other major sector in which the Government have abused their power against sources of legitimate dissent has been the trade unions. Any student of history knows that the trade unions have not fared well from Tory Governments or Tory judges over the years. But until 10 years ago, trade unions were accepted within the Tory party as being legitimate and as having legitimate functions. We are now beginning to see a return to the days of effective trade unionism becoming illegal.

The political fund ballots rather backfired on the Government because they were intended — this is what made them different from previous trade union legislation — to undermine the source of the funding of the Opposition party. What undermined the Government's rhetoric at that time was that those ballots applied only to trade unions and what they should do with their political funds. There was no hint of any similar obligation on corporations that donated funds to the Conservative party. That was widely regarded as an attempt to bankrupt the Opposition.

Secondary picketing has been outlawed. In so doing it has struck at one of the fundamentals of trade unionism, because solidarity between persons who are not necessarily directly affected by a dispute is fundamental to British trade unionism. It is interesting to note that the judges are increasingly placing a narrower interpretation on what constitutes secondary picketing, with the result that effective trade unionism is becoming very difficult.

At GCHQ, trade unionism has been banned — perhaps on instructions from the other side of the Atlantic. For whatever reason, that was the first time for many years that a Government had seen fit to outlaw trade unionism. It is unusual in the industrial world for such a thing to happen.

Strike ballots have been introduced. No one objects to fair ballots, which, if properly carried out, strengthen and legitimise an industrial dispute. In the past few days the National Union of Seamen has been taken to court and threatened with sequestration of all its assets.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker) rose

Mr. Mullin: I am aware that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are probably about to mention the sub judice rule.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was not only about to mention that but to remind the hon. Gentleman that the subject to which he has chosen to address himself is "The Powers of the Executive". I fear that several times he has wandered well away from it.

Mr. Mullin: I shall do my best to keep to what you say is the point, Mr. Deputy Speaker. However, we have seen in the past few days the remarkable spectacle of a trade union being threatened with sequestration of all its assets if it held a ballot, and that exposes the false rhetoric behind the Government's legislation.

In many industrial workplaces today there is a climate of fear similar—I do not pretend that it is the same—to that which prevails in some eastern European countries. With a number of my hon. Friends, I received yesterday a delegation from the train drivers at King's Cross railway station. They spoke of their members being afraid even to distribute leaflets advertising the ballot that they wanted to hold for fear of the sack. There was a recent unexplained break-in into their trade union office, and such incidents have become more frequent. This is an unhealthy trend, which is getting worse.

Many people not necessarily of my persuasion fear that recently the Government have grossly misused the police. Many police themselves are unhappy. They are in the unenviable situation of having to enforce unjust laws. They have been turned, on some occasions, into the paramilitary wing of the Tory party and I know that that is deeply resented by many policemen. Some six or seven years ago, police were obliged, as the result of a court order, to surround an engineering works in Manchester while the work force stood by and watched machinery being evacuated by helicopter to be sold off in Spain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I find it difficult to see what relevance these matters have to the subject that the hon. Gentleman has chosen for the debate.

Mr. Mullin: The subject that I have chosen to debate is the concentration of power in the Executive and I am alleging, and no doubt the Minister will respond——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is referring to disputes between employers and trade unions and workers. It is difficult to see how the hon. Gentleman can raise these matters, particularly events that happened several years ago.

Mr. Mullin: They arise from legislation passed by the House and I am alleging, although I am sure that the Minister will respond robustly, that the Government have accumulated to themselves many powers which were unusual by the standards of previous Governments, both Conservative and Labour. We saw the use made of the police during the recent coal miners' strike when fantastic violence was unleashed in the coalfields. All of us were struck by a picture that was not published widely in this country, although it appeared abroad, of a mounted policeman attacking an unarmed civilian woman. As far as I know, no action followed that incident, which would have been inconceivable several years ago. After the coal strike, there were mass trials of 80 or 90 people at a time in Mansfield and massive perjuries were committed. Those charged were acquitted, but no charges were laid against those who committed the perjuries. Meanwhile, away from the picket line, crime soared.

Another aspect of the Government's exceptional concentration of powers has been a misuse of the courts, which has undermined the credibility of the judicial system. All of us remember that during the miners' strike a member of the Conservative party, or at least a supporter of it, Mr. David Hart, persuaded a number of working miners to take action under the Government's legislation against the National Union of Mineworkers and the judges moved in immediately with massive penalties, including sequestration of property. This has induced a fear of, but not respect for, the courts, which is regrettable. In 10 years, we have gone back beyond Taff Vale to the Combination Acts and many people now feel scared of becoming involved in union activity. That is an unhealthy development.

The manipulation of the news media has been another hallmark of the present Government. As I think is commonly understood, this country has a uniquely servile media, although there are many honourable exceptions. I recollect that the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd)—who is not a member of my party—described the media as the Hallelujah chorus, and I cannot improve on that description. In many instances, they seem to be here not to protect our liberties, which are under unprecedented threat, but to be used as an arm of the ruling party to trivialise, distort, lie and distract people from the realities of life with a diet of television soap opera and stories about the royal family.

Two of our newspapers are now featuring massive headlines with words like "rats" to describe their enemies. That is unfortunate; it has the ring of Fascism. The newspapers are used remorselessly, and at times cynically, by Ministers to hound enemies of the ruling party.

The BBC has always paid lip service to impartiality, which many Opposition Members regard as phoney. At times of rejoicing or national crisis, it has often become an arm of the state—for example, during the Falklands war or at royal weddings. It has always been possible, and still is to some extent, for dissenters to be heard without a Government health warning such as "hard Left", "extremist", or "terrorist" prefixed to their names, but that is now coming under serious threat. The BBC board has been blatantly stacked with supporters of the ruling party. There was a coup against the director-general, Alasdair Milne; there have been raids on the BBC in Scotland; we have seen pictures in our papers of members of the special branch kicking down——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. Gentleman that it is a convention of the House to allow the Minister time to reply.

Mr. Mullin: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I shall wind up my remarks.

I do not wish to be melodramatic. I acknowledge readily that in this country we enjoy liberties that are unknown in many parts of the world. I merely wish to draw attention to what has become an unmistakable trend over the last 10 years. I thought it right to identify that trend while time remained, and while it was still permitted.

2.52 pm

The Minister of State, Privy Council Office (Mr. Richard Luce): Let me start by congratulating the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on choosing the powers of the Executive as the subject of the debate. That, however, is as far as my congratulations can go. The rest has been thorough entertainment.

I have noted down some of the language used by the hon. Gentleman. He referred to the development of a one-party state; to authoritarianism; to servile media; to extra-parliamentary activities; to anti-democratic forces; to degraded democratic institutions; to a climate similar to that in East European countries; to paramilitary wings; and to the misuse of the courts.

I have been looking at the hon. Gentleman to see how sincere he is. I believe that he is very sincere. I think that he believes what he is saying, and that, to my mind, is the most extraordinary thing of all. My only suggestion to the hon. Gentleman is that he is in need of a very long holiday, and I therefore wish him a very happy Easter. He deserves a holiday after a speech like his. He is living in cloud-cuckoo land if he believes what he has just been saying.

I accept that opponents of the Government are looking desperately for ammunition, which often takes the form of what might be described as hackneyed and mindless campaigns to suggest that the Government of the day—and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister—do not care about democracy, are becoming more authoritarian and dictatorial and are taking more power unto themselves. The hon. Gentleman has fallen into that trap—in so far as I could understand any of what he was trying to say.

For the remaining few minutes allowed to me, I should like to show the hon. Gentleman exactly what we have achieved in the past nine years—and I shall do it in five minutes. It is the very opposite of what the hon. Gentleman suggested.

I shall cite two examples that show that we are not concentrating power in the Executive. First, there are fewer central controls and, secondly, we have dispersed more power to individuals. The hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) is longing for examples, so I shall give him some. There has been a real bonfire arising from the elimination of central Government controls. We have ended the price and dividend controls, a whole range of controls in planning and industrial development, and exchange controls. We have pursued a sustained policy of deregulation. We have removed unnecessary restrictions on business to the particular benefit of small businesses. We have removed taxes that hamper enterprise, such as the development land tax.

During the past few years, all our policies have been geared towards disposal of central Government control over the individual—[Interruption.] If the hon. Member for Newham, North-West would listen, he would hear even more examples. It is all very exciting. We have been doing a great deal while he has been concentrating on other issues during the past nine years.

There has been a diffusion of power away from the Executive and towards the people. Our privatisation policies have removed 16 major businesses from central control—that is a dispersal of power from the centre. The state-owned sector has been reduced by almost 40 per cent. There has also been a dispersal of power to individuals through the introduction of employee share ownership schemes that allow the individual to participate in business. The number of individual shareholders has increased from 3 million in 1979 to more than 9 million—20 per cent. of the adult population.

There has been dispersal of power to the individual in housing matters. More than 1 million householders have had the opportunity to buy their council homes. We are currently strengthening the rights of occupiers of rented property.

The hon. Member for Sunderland, South mentioned the trade unions. Our legislation has strengthened the powers of the individual trade unionist. There must now be elections of union officials, which gives more power to the individual member. Legislation is going through the House to establish a commissioner for the rights of trade union members.

Our education legislation will strengthen the position of parents who are concerned about their children's education. It will bring more autonomy to schools. We are dispersing power and authority to schools, parents and individuals.

The hon. Gentleman, in his quite extraordinary speech, mentioned local government. The abolition of the tiers of local government does not concentrate power at the centre, but rather gives more power to local authorities, such as borough councils, and makes them more accountable to their electorates.

The Civil Service has a policy of devolution of managerial authority, so that managers can take decisions — although Ministers should, of course, remain responsible.

What did the Government do first when they took office in 1979? They established a stronger Select Committee system that allows the legislature to challenge the Executive of the day. That is yet another example of this Government's interest in and concern for the right of a democratic society to challenge the Executive. As for the hon. Gentleman's views about the judiciary, there is clear evidence of our commitment to an independent judiciary which is at the heart of our system. Much has been done to strengthen that. Altogether, the hon. Gentleman lives in a world of his own, because everything that has happened in the past year has been in the opposite direction to that which he has alleged.

Planning in Towns and Cities

2.59 pm

Mr. Graham Riddick (Colne Valley): I am very pleased to have the opportunity to introduce a short debate on the subject of planning in towns and cities. I am delighted that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier) is here. As he is a conscientious and diligent Minister, he will be delighted to be here at this late hour on the last day before the recess when many of our hon. Friends are jetting away to the sun or the slopes in Switzerland.

I have not initiated a debate on the issue of planning per se because the issues surrounding planning in the countryside and in rural areas are complicated, difficult and contentious. I do not wish to get involved in the great debate about how far we should encroach on the green belt and how far we should allow house building into the countryside, but I should point out that it is not only the south of England which is under pressure to provide more houses in green field sites. Areas such as the Holme valley in my constituency are also increasingly sought after and popular. My concern is specifically about how the planning system relates to towns and cities in Britain.

Despite the fact that economic prosperity is increasing and spreading rapidly under the present Government, there is clearly a major problem of deprivation and decay in many of our cities and towns. As we all know, the Government have embarked on a number of significant programmes to reverse that trend. Clearly, the Government, with their many schemes, are doing all they possibly can to improve the fabric and conditions of those areas of urban decay.

There are many reasons for the rundown in inner cities and certain parts of the towns. The decline of the old traditional industries and the appalling municipal housing policies of the 1960s created so many social problems such as increasing lawlessness.

A number of factors are hindering the resurgence of those areas. Not least is the fact that the vast majority of them are dominated by Left-wing Labour councils which spend more of their resources on the policies of social engineering and less on essential services such as road repairs. Included in the factors holding up progress are the planning regimes which do so much to decide the future of developments within those areas. My experience of talking to industrialists and entrepreneurs is that the planning regulations and restrictions cause them more problems than practically anything or anybody else when they are trying to set up new enterprises or expand existing ones.

My hon. Friend is aware of my interest in this matter as I have raised it in the House on a number of occasions. I make no apology for raising it once again. While planning is not a particularly exciting or sexy subject, particularly when compared with setting up a new enterprise zone or a new urban development corporation or handing out millions of pounds in urban development grants, I believe that planning plays a vital part in the regeneration of our inner cities and towns.

Good, imaginative and helpful planners who do not stick rigidly to the regulations will certainly help to oil the wheels of economic progress. By the same token, however, inflexible planners can do more than probably anything or anybody else to hinder economic development, to stop enterprises getting off the ground and to stop the process of urban regeneration.

I included "towns" in the title of the debate because towns such as Huddersfield have problems similar to those that are to be found in the inner cities, yet they do not enjoy the benefit of urban development corporation, enterprise zone, or assisted area status. The Colne valley is another example. That old industrial valley has taken something of a hammering because of the decline of the textile industry over the last 20 years. Huddersfield and the Colne valley are good examples of the fact that not all Britain's problems are confined to the inner cities. Unemployment is still in double figures—10 per cent.—in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area.

When I referred in my maiden speech last July to planners impeding progress—and what a long time ago that now seems to be—I was stongly criticised by a few local Labour councillors. It appears that I had touched on a raw nerve. A number of other people, particularly business men, congratulated me on voicing sentiments that they had never ventured to express. I acknowledge that it was perhaps unfair of me to single out Labout councils alone as having been responsible for creating planning obstacles. There are restrictive planners in Conservative councils and there are progressive planners in Labour councils. For example, Conservative-controlled Harrogate council harassed the marvellously innovative dairy farm in Weeton when it started to be too successful at producing an alternative product, ice cream. Another example is a small vilage shop in Killinghale, where I have lived for many years. It was told to remove a sign outside the shop that simply said, "News." The fact that it had been there for at least 15 years and had drawn the attention of passing motorists to the fact that newspapers were on sale was wholly irrelevant to the bureaucrat who decided that the sign should come down. The proprietor of that village shop appealed to the Department of the Environment and won his case but not before he had suffered a great deal of worry, hassle and expense.

I know of a brewery in Manchester that wanted to expand one of its pubs. It made an appropriate planning application but then had to wait two years before it could get any sense out of the council. The lesson to be learnt is that eventually the brewery decided that it was not prepared to put up with the hassle. It said, "To hell with this development" and dropped the proposed extension to the pub. The jobs that would have been created by building that extension and increasing the bar staff were never created, not to mention the increased social amenities that were lost to the local people.

Such problems can arise all over the country, but it is natural that I should talk about the ones in my constituency and in the surrounding areas. I referred in my maiden speech, all that time ago, to a small printing company that had been refused planning permission to move into larger premises because its application went against the local plan that specifies that any change of use of existing buildings for office purposes will not be allowed unless the buildings are in the town centre. That was despite the fact that those premises had been used for commercial purposes, though not as office space, for more than 20 years. I regret that the Department of the Environment also refused permission on appeal.

The firm is still in its cramped offices looking for somewhere to move to and unable to expand and develop its business as it would wish. Who knows how many jobs might have been created by now had that firm moved into larger premises and had it been able to chase the extra business that it would undoubtedly have needed to survive in its expanded form? That is just one example of planning regulations having stopped a firm expanding.

One cannot directly blame the planners for sticking strictly to the local plan, although one would wish them to show more flexibility. My concern is that the planners want to be too involved with development at times and that they sometimes impose conditions that can reduce the effectiveness of the enterprise. Let me give an example. A garden centre in my constituency was granted planning permission, but with the proviso that the majority of the products that it sold had to have been grown on the premises. On the face of it, that may seem a reasonable enough request, but it was a direct and unnecessary interference in the commercial life of the enterprise, and it could have seriously jeopardised the firm. The proprietor is extremely unhappy that he has to abide by the conditions.

On the subject of garden centres, it seems extraordinary to me that the Colne valley local plan should say:

"garden centres will be acceptable within rural locations and on land not allocated for development only if retailing is ancillary to the main activity of plant production".

That is a wholly unnecessary bureaucratic restriction. The plan further states:

"retailing of goods from farm shops, mill shops and similar establishments"— the very sort of activity that we need to encourage to develop new jobs——

"will only be permitted if the goods are produced wholly or mainly on the premises, and if the area devoted to sales is small."

That seems to me an unnecessary interference in a company's commercial life, which should be a matter entirely for its manager or owner.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will reconsider the drawing up of local plans. Perhaps there is an argument for the Government's laying down that unnecessary restrictions which interfere with the commercial running of an enterprise must not be included in the local plan.

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): Does my hon. Friend agree that all too often planning is looked upon as a professional discipline in itself, rather than as a means of serving local communities?

Mr. Riddick: My hon. Friend makes an excellent point, and I fear that that is true in many areas of the country. Clearly that needs to change. The planners must realise that they are part of the economic process: that is one of the important lessons to be learnt.

I hope that I have explained why I am concerned about the planning regulations. I have mentioned only a small number of the problems that people have brought to my attention. I could have cited many more. In all the cases that I have described business men, enterpreneurs and industrialists are having unnecessary bureaucratic obstacles placed in their way, which either completely halt new developments or slow them down.

Having outlined the problems, let me suggest some solutions. I fully recognise the Government's efforts to simplify the planning process. The circular issued to local planning authorities by the Department of the Environment in 1980 clearly recognises the important part that planning has to play in economic development and calls for efficiency and speed in decision-making. That is wholly admirable, and I agree with practically everything that the circular says.

The Government have taken a number of initiatives to reduce planning obstacles still further. Firm planning policy guidance on development and employment was given to local authorities in 1985 and the Housing and Planning Act 1986 tried to simplify and improve the planning system.

The Government have recognised that there is a problem. More changes are needed. Planning restrictions are still too great. One of the key components of an urban development corporation or an enterprise zone is an enormously simplifed planning system. That demonstrates that the Government are aware of the problems.

Neither Huddersfield nor the Colne valley is designated as a special area, so they have to live under the full panoply of planning regulations. I welcome the introduction of simplified planning zones, and I strongly urge Kirklees council to consider whether it would be appropriate to turn some of its area into SPZs.

The problem with all these designated areas is that they apply only to certain areas. The advantages of a simplified planning system are not enjoyed by other areas. My hon. Friend the Minister should consider how we can make planning law, especially that which affects built-up areas, more relevant, responsible and positive in terms of the development of enterprises.

Planning authorities should be stopped from making any commercial judgments or imposing conditions on how an enterprise is run. They should not be allowed to impose conditions that relate to how an enterprise takes commercial decisions.

We must put the onus on planning authorities to justify refusals and the conditions that they impose when they grant permission. I realise that reasons have to be given already, but it should be for planning authorities to justify each negative decision.

We must reduce non-essential and petty regulations and change the environment in which decisions are made. We must make planning officers and councillors realise how important they are to the economic development of their area. They should feel more responsible for economic development. Perhaps an authority which refuses a permission should have to calculate and publicise the number of jobs that have been lost because of the refusal.

Councils with economic development departments—most have them in some form—should put their planning departments under the direct responsibility of the economic development people. We might thus encourage a more responsible and positive attitude.

Planning is an immensely complicated subject. Having put a bit of work into the subject this week as a result of getting this debate, I have come to realise just how complicated it is. The fact remains, however, that the application of planning law will continue to play an important part in the country's economy. In my experience, entrepreneurs are good at saying what can be achieved and why new jobs will be created. Planners can be just as good at saying why something cannot be done, perhaps because a plan does not comply with a certain regulation.

If today's planning controls existed 150 years ago, Britain would never have enjoyed the industrial revolution. We cannot have a development free-for-all, but the restrictions have gone too far and planners have too much power. Although the Government have made excellent endeavours, more must be done to free entrepreneurs so that they can create the extra wealth and employment in areas such as Colne valley which we all want.

3.20 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. David Trippier): I am delighted to respond to the matters raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) and I congratulate him on obtaining this Adjournment debate. I know, both from his maiden speech last July and from the questions that he has put to me in the House, that he takes a close interest in this topic. He has quickly earned himself a reputation as a first-class constituency Member and a powerful advocate for those whom he represents.

I set the scene for my response by emphasising that the Government are committed to lifting the burden of regulation on industry. My hon. Friend mentioned several times the importance of small businesses or enterprises and I hope that it will be a comfort to him that, in the four years preceding the general election — when, I am delighted to say, he was elected to this House—I was responsible for small businesses and for deregulation. I am delighted to say that I played quite a part in the two White Papers introduced by the Government, "Lifting the Burden" and "Building Businesses . . . not Barriers". Given my present responsibilities for inner cities, it is important that I should recognise that development has an important role to play in regenerating our inner cities through providing offices, factories and homes and in creating an environment in which people will want to invest.

I also stress that there is no conflict between that objective and our equal concern to conserve the environment of urban and rural areas alike. It is the responsibility of local planning authorities, when they determine proposals for development, to achieve a reconciliation between the twin aims of enabling development and protecting the environment.

On one hand, there is a general presumption in favour of development. That has come with this Government and my hon. Friend has acknowledged that. That has been inherent in the system of town and country planning since the Town and Country Planning Act 1947, but has been emphasised in the White Papers to which I referred. It was included in a Government circular to local planning authorities as far back as 1949. We reiterated it in a planning policy guidance note issued in January this year.

On the other hand, it has long been recognised, and the Government fully accept, that the presumption in favour of development does not give developers carte blanche. It is subject to a proviso that development should not cause demonstrable harm to interests of acknowledged importance.

What does that mean in practice? It means that those who decide whether to grant planning permission — whether local authorities or my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on appeal — have the important and critical task of weighing various factors before they reach a conclusion. They have to consider what weight to give to local policies in development plans, which may be several years old, or may have been adopted or approved only recently. They have to assess the importance to attach to relevant national planning policies. Against this background, they have to appraise the intrinsic merits of the particular development proposal because the courts have held that every planning application must be determined on its merits in the light of all material considerations.

I hope my hon. Friend will agree that in some respects the judgments which have to be made about individual development proposals are very daunting. It is pithily, if not glibly, said that one man's development opportunity is another man's chance to raise an objection. That may be true in some instances, but I believe the beneficial effect of development is generally acknowledged, especially, as I have said, when it brings investment and jobs to a deprived area.

I should like to deal with the specific points raised by my hon. Friend. He said that he would like to see every planning application form contain a space to show how many jobs would be lost if the proposed development does not proceed. That is an interesting idea which, I am sure, local authorities will consider. The Government have considered a standard application form in the past. We want to avoid imposing uniformity just for the sake of it, but there could be advantages to large developers and we are continuing to consider that.

My hon. Friend also mentioned urban development corporations. Although I understand the point that he is trying to make in regard to UDCs, I have only a limited budget. As he well knows, there are now 11 UDCs, one in Cardiff bay and 10 in England. The Government are supporting the UDC programme with funding in excess of £200 million in 1988-89, but there is a limit to how much we can spend effectively in this way. Alternative approaches are necessary. I shall turn to one of them in a few moments.

I recognise that the developer and the local planning authority will not always agree about the merits of development proposals. Often, that can be a failure of communication. The developer may not have discussed his proposal with the local authority. If he had done, he might have been able to modify it to meet points to which the authority attached considerable importance and which the developer regarded as mere trifles.

Equally, the authority may operate a policy which discriminates in favour of one kind of development and against another. I know that some authorities are seeking to restrict office development because they want to preserve sites for industry. That may be understandable in some parts of the country, but in general the Government believe that the planning system should reflect the reality of the national economy in 1988. That is why we introduced a new business use class in the Use Classes Order 1987. It means, broadly, that a developer can change between general office use, use for research and development, and use for a light industrial process, without obtaining planning permission. My hon. Friend will welcome that.

Inevitably, there will be some weak spots in the way in which policies are translated into practice. Some local planning authorities may be slow to come to terms with the reality of economic life in 1988 — my hon. Friend touched on that and what he said was right — just as, no doubt, some developers will obstinately withstand reasonable argument and refuse to accept that the development control system cannot, by its nature, say yes to each and every development proposal. But to be fair to my hon. Friend, he was not suggesting that. He did not want a free-for-all.

Urban development corporations have successfully encouraged, physically, the redevelopment of large tracts of land in inner-city areas. I have already mentioned that there are 10 in England and one in Wales. Six UDCs are already under way in England and we have announced proposals for another four. Obviously, other initiatives will be coming forward which will contribute considerably to inner-city development.

Three weeks ago further initiatives were announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I am sure that my hon. Friend will welcome those. In particular, I am sure that he will welcome the new city grant within the Department of the Environment, which streamlines the grant mechanism and gives easier access to the private sector, particularly those in the construction industry—the developers—and cuts out much red tape, very much in line with what my hon. Friend would wish.

We are also stepping up our drive to bring on to the market unused and under-used publicly owned land—not just that of local authorities but of some of the large public organisations which are part of the Government. We introduced the land register system in 1981. Since then, some 50,000 acres of publicly owned land recorded on the register have been sold or brought into use. But the new proposals announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will, I hope, speed up the process and bring land that is currently not in use on to the open market.

My hon. Friend mentioned simplified planning zones. The measure we introduced to bring those about has obviously gone through and we are looking now to Derby as the first local authority to be granted SPZ. The Act places a duty on local planning authorities to consider as soon as practicable whether part or parts of their area could, with benefit, be designated an SPZ, to prepare schemes for those parts, and to keep the matter under review. It is important that Kirklees should comply with that Act. I have no doubt that my hon. Friend will make sure that it does.

However, my hon. Friend may not be aware that individuals or a private sector company can also apply for an SPZ. The Act provides specifically an opportunity for any person to request the local planning authority to make an SPZ. If the authority refuses to do so, or does nothing within three months of the request, that person can require the authority to refer the matter to the Secretary of State. Following proper consideration of the issues, the Secretary of State can direct the planning authority to make a scheme. That might be appropriate in my hon. Friend's constituency. We shall have to see.

Criticism has been directed at the procedures which the statutes lay down for consulting the public, prior to designation by the local council, but those are necessary safeguards to protect the wider public interest in the absence of any requirement for approval of SPZ schemes by the Secretary of State. After all, SPZs provide planning permission for 10 years.

The SPZ mechanism is a very flexible one. Authorities can choose to designate schemes at any time, unrelated to progress on their development plans. Alternatively, they can prepare SPZ schemes in tandem with the preparation of local plans and unitary development plans in metropolitan authorities.

I mentioned earlier the changes that we made in the use classes order last year. They were only part of many reforms that we have made to the planning system. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for referring to the progress that we have made.

I hope that my hon. Friend agrees that this is a useful, even an impressive, list of achievements. I want to reassure him that we are by no means complacent. We shall constantly, and with vigilance, look at all the proposals, including those that he has put forward in this excellent debate today. I thank him for once again bringing this important subject to the attention of the House with his customary skill.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at half-past Three o'clock till Tuesday 12 April, pursuant to resolution [25 March].

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 21 March 1988

ENVIRONMENT

Home Insulation (Stoke-on-Trent)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of people in Stoke-on-Trent, North who have ceased to be eligible for grants under the home insulation scheme which came into force on 1 February; and what percentage of those are on low incomes.

Mrs. Roe: The information is not available. For householders with adequate means, loft insulation is a very cost-effective measure which pays for itself very quickly. The new scheme provides a 90 per cent. grant, up to an increased ceiling of £137, to eligible householders on low incomes, that is, those in receipt of supplementary benefit, housing benefit or family income supplement.

Drinking Water

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which areas in England and Wales the maximum nitrate level in drinking water of 50 mg of nitrates per litre, set by the European Community, is exceeded; and how many people are affected.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 13 January to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) at column 279.

Local Authorities (Bartering Agreements)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has anything to add to his statement on 9 March, with particular reference to bartering agreements between local authorities and property developers.

Mr. Chope: It is my right hon. Friend's intention to table amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill to secure that where a local authority acquires properly, or where works or improvements are carried out to local authority property, in return for valuable consideration, prescribed expenditure will be scored regardless of whether the consideration is or is not in money.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals his Department has to revise or update planning guidance on gipsy sites, including specifying the varying responses which local authorities should make to applications for (a) individual plots of land for use by a gipsy and (b) sites for gipsy encampments.

Mrs. Roe: My Department has no immediate plans to revise or update planning guidance on gipsy sites, though the matter is kept under review. In his statement to the House of 6 February last year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said that the need for gipsy sites would continue to be a material consideration in planning decisions.

92 Ormside Street, SE15 (Sale)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to when the London residuary body will complete the sale of 92 Ormside street, SE15.

Mr. Chope: This is a matter for the London residuary body.

Housing Starts

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing starts were made in each of the last 10 years in (a) the public sector, (b) the private sector, and (c) the housing association sector.

Mrs. Roe: In 1987, it is provisionally estimated that there were 197,300 dwellings started in England for the private sector and 24,600 for the public sector including 9,500 for housing associations. Figures for the earlier years appear in table 6.1(a) of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1976-1986" which is available in the Library.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give estimates for the total number of adults expected to register for community charge in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: I estimate that there are 38·3 million adults in England and Wales. About half a million of these are expected to be exempt from the community charge. As I said in my reply of 16 March to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) at column 82, I do not believe that evasion will be a serious problem.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will reconsider joint and several liability of spouses in respect of the proposed community charge, in the light of the planned changes to the income tax status of married women from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Ridley: No. The changes to which the hon. Member refers will affect married women with incomes. Joint and several liability for the community charge is designed to ensure that the charge is paid where a person (man or woman) has no income of his or her own and is married to or living with a person who has an income.

G-Mex Exhibition Centre, Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the total financial contribution made by his Department to the G-Mex exhibition centre in greater Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail his involvement with the G-Mex centre in Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My involvement with the G-Mex Centre in Manchester has been to provide urban programme funding of £8·9 million towards an estimated main project cost of £23·7 million and a further UP contribution of £0·9 million towards the cost of landscaping and other works on the site. I retain a continuing interest as there is a provision for grant to be paid back if sufficient income is generated.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the results of the English house condition survey will be available.

Mrs. Roe: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction on Wednesday 3 February 1988 at column 650.

Grant-related Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the studies into alternative or improved methods of calculating grant-related expenditure which have been funded by his Department since January 1980; and if for each study listed he will give (a) the name of the body or bodies undertaking the study, (b) the terms of reference of the study, (c) the names of other bodies tendering for the study, (d) the criteria by which the successful applicants were selected, (e) the cost of the study and (f) the outcome of the study.

Mr. Ridley: The following studies into grant-related expenditure assessment have been funded by my Department since January 1980:

1. (i) 'Grant Related Expenditure Assessment: A Review of the System and Potential Development In It'.
   (ii) Conducted by the School for Advanced Urban Studies at the University of Bristol.
   (iii) A comprehensive general review of the system seeking to clarify the objectives and underlying principles of GRE, and to evaluate how far the system developed in practice measured up to these objectives and principles. Followed by in depth case studies examining the case for, feasibility and implications of alternative methods of GRE assessment in relation to particular components of local authority expenditure. The four case studies dealt with recreation, adult education, capital finance and public transport.
   (iv) Cost: £38,300.
   (v) Outcome: Published Reports (1983-84) of the overall review of the GRE system and of each of the four case studies.
2. (i) The 'Measurement of Inter Authority Cost Differences'.
   (ii) Conducted by Cambridge Economic Consultants.
   (iii) The objective of the project was to investigate whether and how to extend and improve the existing system for unit cost adjustments such that it covered authorities outside the London Weighting area and inputs other than labour.
   (iv) Cost: £16,000.
   (v) Outcome: Unpublished Report (1983).
3. (i) Development of the Grant Related Expenditure Assessment for Personal Social Services for the Elderly.
   (ii) Conducted by the Centre for Health Economics, York University.
   (iii) The objectives of the research are to assess the feasibility of the main options for improving the method of calculating PSS GRE for the elderly; to then develop a more simple and comprehensible method of assessment whilst taking full account of the requirement to adequately reflect variations in needs between authorities; and to consider and report on the future stability of the new methodology as well as its effective presentation.
   (iv) Cost: £36,566.
   (v) Outcome: The research is still in progress.
4. (i) 'Review of Statistical Methods Used to Construct Indicators of Social Disadvantage'.
   (ii) Conducted by Professor Bartholomew, London School of Economics.
   (iii) The objectives of the research are to review the methods of constructing composite measures of disadvantage at present used in GREs; to examine the applicability of new developments in the construction of such indexes; and to recommend the most appropriate of these statistical techniques.
   (iv) Cost: £3,000.
   (v) Outcome: The research is still in progress.

Four organisations tendered for the second of these projects; the measurement of inter-authority cost differences. These were Cambridge Economic Consultants, Coopers and Lybrand and Associates Ltd, Peat Marwick Mitchell and Co. and the Public Sector Economics Research Centre at the University of Leicester. The contract was placed on the basis of price and of quality of tender proposal. The other three research contracts were placed on a single tender basis.

Local Authority Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for (a) each county council, (b) each metropolitan district, (c) each London borough and (d) each non-metropolitan district those services on which authorities spend below the national average; and by how much.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 15 March 1988]: I have today placed this information in the House of Commons Library.

Waste Disposal

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the disposal of potassium waste by France and Belgium in the English channel; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 17 March 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Malaysia (Waterworks)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department took to ensure the technical soundness of Biwater's project to equip 174 Malaysian villages with waterworks before allocating funds from his 1986 water sector budget to support it.

Mr. Eggar: Assistance for the rural water supply project in Malaysia was provided from the aid and trade provision in association with export credit finance. As in all such cases, approval of ATP assistance was subject to satisfactory appraisal of the economic, financial and technical viability of the project. In this particular case, assistance was approved in the light of the findings of an ODA appraisal mission to Malaysia.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why his Department approved a grant of nearly £60 million towards Biwater's Malaysia contract which was not subject to domestic competitive tendering.

Mr. Eggar: Within the aid programme, we seek to secure value for money for the taxpayer and for the recipient country. This is generally best achieved by competitive tendering. In the absence of competition, the ODA carries out value-for-money checks. In this case, the Malaysian Government wished to proceed with the project by negotiating a contract with a single contractor (Biwater). An independent check established value for money.

Cameroun, Chile and Thailand (Waterworks)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will submit to domestic competitive tender proposals which it is currently considering for water supply or sewerage projects in Cameroun, Chile and Thailand.

Mr. Eggar: Before deciding whether or not to provide aid and trade provision support for these projects, we shall consider how best to secure value for money for the aid programme in the circumstances of each particular case.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Polytechnics

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which polytechnics in England and Wales provide specialist non-advanced further education on a nationwide basis; what subjects are covered by such provision; and how he intends that such provision should be funded following the establishment of the Polytechnic and Colleges Funding Council.

Mr. Jackson: There is no settled definition of specialist non-advanced further education. The Government have said that it will be open to local education authorities, as part of their duty to secure the provision of adequate facilities for further education in their areas, to contract for the continued provision of non-advanced further education courses in polytechnics and colleges which, under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill now before Parliament, will transfer to the new polytechnics and colleges funding council (PCFC) sector. Local education authorities' will receive credit for such provision in that grant-related expenditure. The Government are also ready to consider, in consultation with the local authority associations, whether it would be desirable to put the PCFC in funds to support a tightly defined category of further education courses whose provision in PCFC institutions is essentially national in character.

Consultative Document

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this be not done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mrs. Rumbold: The treatment of responses to consultation documents will depend on the purpose and nature of the consultative process. In the case of the recent consultation carried out by the Department of Education and Science preceding the introduction of the Education Reform Bill, copies of all responses, other than those from individuals, were placed in the House Library.

Religious Instruction

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of primary schools and secondary schools in each local education authority are not adhering to the locally agreed syllabus of religious instruction for that authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected by the Department.

Education Reform Bill

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to amend the pupil register regulations for the power of holding ballots in relation to the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend intends to amend the pupils' registration regulations to ensure that all parents will be given the opportunity to have their names recorded in schools' admission registers.

Local Financial Management

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to discuss with head teachers the implementation of local financial management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Both Ministers and officials of my Department have had a number of meetings with representatives of the head teacher associations and with groups of head teachers about local financial management. My right hon. Friend will shortly be consulting LEAs, head teachers and others on preliminary guidance.

DEFENCE

Prisoners of War (Experiments)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about progress in investigating allegations of experiments on prisoners of war held by the Japanese at Mukden and elsewhere during world war 2; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 April 1987 at column 586. Since that date, the Ministry has received a further 16 inquiries. Of these two had been addressed to the Prime Minister and 14 to Ministers. During this period our inquiries have continued. But despite further and lengthy investigation we still have no proof that the Japanese experimented on Allied prisoners of war held at Mukden.

Low Flying (Wales)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received concerning low-flying military aircraft over Wales.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1 January 1988 and 14 March 1988, the Ministry of Defence received some 70 inquiries or complaints from Wales about low-flying military aircraft.

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this be not done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes, arrangements will be made for responses to formal consultative documents, such as Green Papers, to be available, provided that the respondent has not asked that his response should be kept confidential.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on future uses of RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 20 January at column 764.

RAF Wethersfield

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any limitations are planned on activities at RAF Wethersfield in the light of proposals for expansion of Stansted airport.

Mr. Freeman: RAF Wethersfield is a standby deployment base at which no regular flying activity currently takes place, aside from weekend gliding by air cadets. Therefore any question of the expansion of Stansted airport affecting base activities does not arise.

RAF Feltwell

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the rôle and function of the proposed satellite receiver dishes and ancilliary equipment at RAF Feltwell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Subject to the appropriate planning approvals, the United States Air Force proposes to site a deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell. This will be a passive facility for tracking man-made objects in deep space.

Montebello Decision

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current position with regard to SACEUR's 1985 proposals to implement the Montebello decision.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As part of the continuing process of reviewing NATO's nuclear force requirements, NATO Defence Ministers at the 1983 nuclear planning group meeting in Montebello examined the question of the future size and composition of NATO's theatre nuclear stockpile and agreed both to a reduction of 1,400 warheads from NATO's land-based nuclear stockpile in Europe and on the need for improvements to ensure the continuing effectiveness, responsiveness and survivability of remaining systems. SACEUR was asked to come forward with proposals for implementing this decision and his recommendations were presented to the nuclear planning group Minister at their meeting in Luxembourg in March 1985.

The reduction in warheads has been completed. Recommendations for improvements are being pursued by SACEUR with the nations concerned, and progress with implementation is being kept under review by the nuclear planning group. The details of the recommendations as they affect individual countries are classified, but in broad terms they include the deployment of a tactical air-to-surface missile, the deployment of a follow on to Lance, the introduction of improved nuclear artillery shells, and the continued modernisation of NATO's dual-capable aircraft. No decisions on the specific modernisation measures addressed by SACEUR to the United Kingdom have yet been taken.

Other measures called for by SACEUR involve the correction of some maldeployments of nuclear forces and improvements in their effectiveness, survivability and command and control. In this context the United Kingdom is withdrawing completely from the 8 in. nuclear artillery role in order to concentrate resources on the 155 mm dual-capable gun now in service, as explained by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 23 July 1987 at column 390.

NATO Heads of Government at the summit on 2-3 March reaffirmed the long-standing policy of the Alliance, that it should continue to maintain "an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces which will continue to be kept up to date where necessary".

The United Kingdom will play its full part in this process.

Armed Forces (Alcohol Abuse)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on measures to control alcohol abuse in the armed forces; whether non-alcoholic beers are stored in service bars; what is the ratio of alcoholic to non-alcoholic drinks stocked in service bars; and what is the price differential.

Mr. Freeman: Drunkenness is a specific offence under the service discipline Acts. If service personnel, whilst not committing actual drink related offences, become by regular heavy drinking a risk or burden to their service that is also regarded seriously.

A series of alcohol education programmes, making use of pamphlets, films and lectures has been produced to alert all personnel to the dangers of abuse. Where abuse occurs, the aim is to rehabilitate abusers where this is possible. Adequate facilities for medical treatment are available. A range of deterrent administrative and disciplinary actions are also available and persistent offenders may be discharged.

Stocking of service bars and the pricing of drinks are matters for mess committees or NAAFI managers and are not centrally directed by the Ministry of Defence, but non-alcoholic or low-alcohol beers and soft drinks would normally be available. The ratio of alcoholic to non-alcoholic drinks would depend on demand.

Exercises

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list Royal Air Force participation in Maple Flag exercises in Canada since 1979, giving the number and type of Royal Air Force aircraft involved and dates of the exercise on each occasion.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 4 December 1987]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Date	Aircraft involved
1979[1]	28 April—12 May	8 × Buccaneer
		2 × Jaguar
1980[1]	14 April— 7 May	8 × Harrier
1981[1]	14 April—16 May	8 × Buccaneer
1982[1]	14 April—17 May	8 × Harrier
1983[1]	12 May—27 May	8 × Buccaneer
		2 × Hercules
1984	28 April—26 May	8 × Harrier
1985	27 April—25 May	8 × Tornado
1986	27 April—24 May	8 × Harrier
1987	27 April—25 May	8 × Jaguar

[1] Precise central records are not available for the period before 1984 although the details given above are thought to be broadly accurate.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Violent Crime

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table depicting the percentage change in violent crimes, by category, in all regions of the United Kingdom from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: Statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police, by type of offence and police force area, are published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1979" (Cmnd 8098, table 32), and in the "Criminal Statistics Supplementary Tables Volume 3" (table S.3.1.) for each year from 1980 to 1986. Copies of these volumes are available in the Library. Recorded numbers of some types of violent offences are small and subject to appreciable year-to-year fluctuation so percentage changes calculated from them might be misleading.

Safe City Scheme

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which urban areas are to be initially targeted by the safe city schemes; and when they will commence.

Mr. John Patten: It is our intention over the next three years to establish some 20 "safer city" projects in areas selected from those which are currently urban programme areas. The participating areas will be chosen and announced after consultation with local interests in the areas concerned.

Seaside Promenades

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to approve new byelaws regulating the use of seaside promenades; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Last month, Thanet district council submitted five draft schemes of byelaws for provisional approval. We will reply to the council as soon as possible, but there are a considerable number of other applications awaiting attention.

Firearms

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firearms certificates are at present held by owners in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest available information relates to 31 December 1986 and is published in table 2 of the Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 2/88, "Statistics On The Operation Of The Firearms Act 1968", a copy of which is in the Library. Figures for the end of 1987 will be published in a similar bulletin later this year.

Dogs

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for the number of stray dogs reported to the police in England and Wales during 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No central record is kept of the number of stray dogs reported to the police. The information requested could, therefore, be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dogs were destroyed, annually, in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Dogs are destroyed by owners and by a wide variety of organisations and individuals. We have no information on the total numbers destroyed.

Hounds (Organised Packs)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make it a criminal offence to allow an organised pack of hounds to attack cats or dogs, with a range of fines and imprisonment available against the master of such hounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned about any unnecessary suffering which is caused to domestic animals. However, existing legislation — in particular the Dogs Act 1871, the Town Police Clauses Act 1847, the Metropolitan Police Act 1839 — provides for the control of dangerous dogs. We have no plan to introduce further measures.

Immigration (Entry Clearance)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex on 22 February, Official Report, column 4, whether the 130 outstanding entry clearance applications included applications which had been referred to his Department by entry clearance officers but had not yet been allocated to an immigration office.

Mr. Renton: The total of 130 outstanding entry clearance applications given in my previous answer referred to those cases which had been received from entry clearance officers abroad and had been passed to the immigration service to arrange interview. The number of applications made abroad which had not reached that stage is not recorded centrally under the location of the sponsors, and information in respect of the Birmingham area is therefore not readily obtainable.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ethiopia

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criticism the United Kingdom's representative at the 44th session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva made about the human rights record of the Government of Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: My hon. Friend the Paliamentary Under-Secretary of State drew attention in his statement at the Commission on 18 February to the particular problem of long-term prisoners in Ethiopia. In a subsequent statement under the agenda item dealing with human rights violations in any part of the world, the United Kingdom representative again expressed our concern about the continued detention of long-term prisoners in Ethiopia, some of whom have been held without trial since 1974.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Her Majesty's Government made no attempt to have Ethiopia included on the agenda of the 44th session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission recently convened in Geneva; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chalker: In 1986 the United Kingdom supported a draft resolution on Ethiopia tabled at the Commission by the United States which would formally have put the situation in Ethiopia on the Commission's agenda for its 1987 session. This resolution was defeated on a procedural motion. We have continued to raise the matter of long-term prisoners in Ethiopia in our statements at the Commission.

CND (Representations)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament since the Washington summit of December 1987.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1988, c. 589]: I should have said that we have received one direct representation from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament since the Washington summit of December 1987.

EMPLOYMENT

Deaf People (Training Schemes)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average number of hours of communication support required by a YTS trainee under the communication service for the deaf.

Mr. Cope: Information on the average number of communication support required by YTS trainees is not available. Communication support is provided for a maximum of 500 hours per trainee over a two-year scheme. Trainees' use of this resource varies according to their individual needs.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a regional breakdown of the number of people receiving payment under the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: The number of people receiving the enterprise allowance at the end of February 1988 is shown below, by region.

Region	Recipients
South East	11,951
London	10,085
South West	10,006
West Midlands	9,402
East Midlands	10,194
Yorkshire and Humberside	9,102
North West	14,330
North	5,118
Wales	5,863
Scotland	8,739
Total	94,790

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to increase the size of the payment under the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: No. Demand is buoyant and £40 per week remains sufficient compensation for the loss of unemployment or supplementary benefit that occurs when an unemployed person starts up in business.

Children

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to bring the pay of working children within the ambit of wages council legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

Youth Training

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current provision made for young people to undertake part-time study whilst they are on a YTS programme.

Mr. Cope: All YTS training programmes must include a minimum period of planned and directed learning away from the normal workplace and outside the day-to-day pressures of a job. Any study which is of direct relevance to a training programme may therefore be considered for inclusion as part of such "off-the-job" training. Trainees are also free to pursue additional studies outside YTS, and managing agents are encouraged to offer support by allowing time off to study and sit for examinations which would contribute to the training programme.

Midland Professional Cleaning Services Ltd., Wolverhampton

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if any applications for payments in lieu of wages from the insolvency fund have been accepted by former employees of Midland Professional Cleaning Services Ltd. of Stewart Street, Wolverhampton.

Mr. Nicholls: No applications are at present being considered. I understand the company is not formally insolvent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to make changes in the prices charged by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service for its commercial services.

Mr. MacGregor: I have instructed ADAS that the prices it charges for its commercial services should be adjusted from time to time taking account of changes in costs, the competitive position in the market place as well, of course, as the legal requirement that such charges must be reasonable. The first adjustments will be made from the beginning of the 1988-89 financial year.

The most familiar ADAS charges are perhaps those for advice. For these the hourly charge will remain at £28 (plus VAT) for up to two hours of advice which will help protect smaller farmers. However, if a contract necessitates over two hours of advisers' time, charges for the excess period over two hours will, from 1 April 1988, be levied at a rate of £30 (plus VAT) per hour.

Drainage Authorities

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to issue revised guidelines to drainage authorities on discharging their environmental and conservation responsibilities.

Mr. Gummer: The revised guidelines, issued jointly by the Minister and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales, are being distributed to land drainage bodies and conservation organisations today. Copies have also been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The guidelines have been completely revised in the light of a thoroughgoing review of the experience of the past five years and I should like to put on record our gratitude to the many organisations both in the fields of conservation and of land drainage whose assistance has been of such value in the drawing up of the new guidelines. My colleagues and I are confident that the strengthened and consolidated guidance that we are publishing today will serve to enable drainage authorities to proceed with their necessary work in ways that will further the conservation interest and enhance environmental features affected by these operations. Much progress has been made in this direction in recent years and we must see to it that we build on what has been achieved. The new guidelines are central to this. I commend them to drainage and conservation organisations alike.

Bass

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made towards the European Economic Community accepting a bass quota.

Mr. Gummer: There are no proposals for establishing an EC bass quota. The European Commission has been informed of the Government's proposals for the management of the bass fishery and if these are confirmed in the light of our consultations with the industry, we shall be asking the Commission to propose an increase in the Community minimum landing size for bass to 36 cm.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to ensure that the proposed bass regulations prevent the French from fishing the adult spawning stock in mid-channel.

Mr. Gummer: I have no plans to prevent fishing for adult bass.

Waste Disposal

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the disposal of potassium waste by France and Belgium in the English channel; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 17 March 1988]: From our contacts with the relevant authorities in France and Belgium and with the secretariat to the Oslo convention on sea disposal, it has been established that up to 750 tonnes of salt wastes from the potassium mining industry were disposed of at sea by France last month on an experimental basis, at a point five miles north of Dunkirk, and some 28 miles from the nearest United Kingdom coast. This disposal will be discussed at next week's meeting of the Oslo commission's standing committee for scientific advice when more detailed information on its likely environmental impact, and on any plans for future disposals of this nature, will be sought from the French authorities.

J. R. Perkes and Son, Brixham

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now reply to the hon. Member for South Hams' letter of 9 February asking him to deal, as a matter of urgency, with the matter of J. R. Perkes and Son, Brixham fishermen, and requesting a meeting.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 18 March 1988]: I have been giving very careful consideration to the matter of J. R. Perkes and Son about which my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams wrote to me on 9 February, and I hope to be able to reply to my hon. Friend very shortly.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will amend his recent regulations in relation to the community charge to give individuals who appear on the community charge register the option as to whether or not they would like their name and address to be sold;

(2) if he will amend his recent regulations in relation to the community charge so that individuals who appear on the community charge register will be told of the fact that their name and address may be sold without their knowledge or consent.

Mr. Lang: I refer to the answers I gave on 3 November 1987 at columns 550-51 on 28 January 1988 at column 325 and on 6 July at column 35. My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering these matters. Pending that consideration, I do not consider that formal notification to individuals of the present position is required.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to account for the problems of adult literacy, dyslexia or English as a second language when producing the regulations in relation to the community charge.

Mr. Lang: The notification and inquiry forms prescribed in the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) Regulations 1988 have been made as simple and straightforward as possible in the light of comments made on the draft regulations.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give his latest estimate of the number of males and females in Scotland who suffer from incontinence; if he will express this figure in percentage terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Inverclyde Initiative

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on Friday 8 March, Official Report, column 135, he will break down the figure for Scottish Development Agency expenditure of £8·75 million on the Inverclyde initiative, showing on what it has been spent.

Mr. Lang: The expenditure of £8·75 million by the Scottish Development Agency on the Inverclyde initiative is detailed in the table:

	£ million
Pre-project development studies and development grants	2·20
Factory Building	0·50
Environmental Improvements	2·55
Land acquisition	3·50

Solicitors (Code of Practice)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether it is his intention to introduce legislation to implement the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Legal Services in relation to a legally binding code of ethics and practice for solicitors in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. I understand that the Law Society of Scotland is committed to the preparation and early publication of guidance on professional standards and ethics.

Lay Observer

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases were referred to the Lay Observer in 1987; in how many of these she found some justifiable complaint against the Law Society in its dealing with complaints; and what were the comparable figures in 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Lay Observer for Scotland handled 248 cases in 1987 and in 62 of these she criticised aspects of the handling of the complaint by the Law Society of Scotland. The comparable figures in 1986 were 232 and 43 respectively.

Solicitors Discipline Tribunal

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases were heard by the Scottish Solicitors Discipline Tribunal in 1987; what were the results of the cases heard; and what were the comparable figures in 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

		Penalties imposed
Year to	Number of cases heard	Struck off	Suspended	Fined	Practising certificate restricted	Case dismissed (no finding)
31 October 1986	38	1	2	18	7	7
31 October 1987	31	1	2	14	6	3

The number of cases heard does not necessarily correspond to the total number of penalties imposed. More than one case may be dealt with by a single penalty.

Grant Thornton

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 384, what information he has as to when Messrs Grant Thornton were appointed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that Grant Thornton were engaged in December 1987 by health board general managers acting jointly.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 384, how much money from public funds has been paid to Grant Thornton; and in respect of what services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Grant Thornton were engaged by health board general managers acting jointly to provide assistance to boards in the preparation of tender documents and in the financial and technical vetting of major firms of contractors. The fee for these services is a matter covered by commercial confidentiality.

Radioactive Discharges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the non-nuclear industrial sites in Scotland making authorised discharges of radioactive substances into the atmosphere.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 March 1988]: The following are authorised by the Scottish Development Department to discharge low level gaseous waste to the atmosphere:

National Semiconductors (UK) Ltd., Larkfield Industrial Estate, Greenock.
Crowther Arts Display Ltd., 5 Hawbank Road, College Milton North, East Kilbride.
Ferranti Ltd., Dunsinane Avenue, Dundee.
Organon Laboratories Ltd., Newhouse Industrial Estate, Newhouse, Lanarkshire.
ICI plc in respect of the Brae B platform in the North Sea.

In addition the South of Scotland Electricity Board is authorised to burn, at its power stations at Longannet and Inverkip, waste oil contaminated with trace amounts of radioactivity; authorisations are held also by Aberdeen and Dundee district councils permitting them to burn combustible low-level radioactive wastes in their waste disposal incinerators.

In all the cases, the limits of discharge permitted by the authorisations are very low and the quantities of radioactivity being released to atmosphere are entirely negligible in radiological terms.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest comparative figures for levels of gross domestic product per capita in each of the United Kingdom regions, taking the figure for the United Kingdom as a whole to be 100.

Mr. Major [holding answer 18 March 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the November 1987 edition of Economic Trends. The latest figures are available on page 86 of that document.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures for levels of gross domestic product per capita in each of the United Kingdom regions, including the continental shelf.

Mr. Major [holding answer 18 March 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the November 1987 edition of Economic Trends which presents the latest available data. As the November edition of Economic Trends states, it is not possible to include the continental shelf in the calculation of regional GDP per capita figures.

Civil Service Redeployment

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update table 1(4) in annex A of the Hardman report, Cmnd. 5322, on Civil Service redeployment.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 18 March 1988]: Information on the division between headquarters and non-headquarters staff is no longer held centrally. The latest available figures for population by region and for non-industrial Civil Servants are as follows:

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the starting rates and top rates of income tax and the level of gross income at which those rates become payable in (a) Canada, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Japan and (f) the United States of America, for a married couple with no children.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1988, c. 566-68]: I regret that the figure for the level of gross income at which the top rate of tax becomes payable in the United Kingdom was wrongly given as £19,301. The figure is £23,396. The revised table is as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Judges

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Attorney-General how many judges in England and Wales are (a) from ethnic minorities and (b) women; and what is the total number of judges in England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: No records are kept of the ethnic origin of members of the judiciary. As at 16 March 1988, there were 20 women judges, comprising one Lord Justice of Appeal, two High Court Judges and 17 circuit judges. The total number of Court of Appeal, High Court and circuit judges in England and Wales is at present 500.

Magistrates

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Attorney-General what is the total number of magistrates in England and Wales; and how many are (a) members of ethnic minorities and (b) women.

The Attorney-General: At January 1988 there were 27,846 active lay magistrates, of whom 11,934 were women. There are currently 48 metropolitan stipendiary magistrates of whom eight are women and 14 provincial stipendiary magistrates, of whom none are women.

No records are kept of the racial origins of magistrates, but surveys conducted last year revealed that 528 lay magistrates were members of an ethnic minority.

Hunts (Trespass)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Attorney-General what is his prosecution policy in respect of alleged offences of criminal trespass by hunts on British Rail land.

The Attorney-General: The prosecution policy of the Crown prosecution service, in respect of all offences prosecuted by that service, is contained in the code for Crown prosecutors, which is issued pursuant to section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1985.

PRIME MINISTER

Education Testing (Leak of Letter)

Mr. Tam Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 14 March, she will set up an inquiry to discover the source of the leak of a letter from Mr. Paul Gray to Mr. Tom Jeffrey on educational testing.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 14 March, at column 425.

Biwater

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister on what assessment of Biwater's previous record in the supply of waterworks to Nigeria she gave Biwater her personal backing in the negotiations for a contract to supply Malaysia with similar equipment.

The Prime Minister: One of the main purposes of my visits abroad is to support the efforts of reputable British companies to secure contracts. The Biwater contract was therefore raised in discussion with Ministers on my visit to Malaysia in 1985.

ENERGY

South Normanton Depot

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will issue a direction to British Coal to name the consortium and the cost involved in the purchase of south Normanton depot and other transport undertakings including the mobile plants in the Nottinghamshire coalfield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No; these are management matters for the British Coal Corporation.

"Bribes, Brothels and Nuclear Waste"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to obtain a copy of the transcript of the Thames Television programme "This Week" entitled "Bribes, Brothels and Nuclear Waste" broadcast on 10 March for his departmental library.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Berkeley Nuclear Laboratories

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his plans for the Berkeley nuclear laboratories following plans for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for discussion with the industry.

Nuclear Power Stations (Decommissioning)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the Central Electricity Generating Board about withdrawal of funds from research into the decommissioning of nuclear power stations; and if he will take steps to prevent any delay in the Sellafield research project.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB's decision to withdraw its contribution towards the cost of UKAEA research into decommissioning of the Windscale advanced gas cooled reactor is a management matter for the board. The Department will be discussing with UKAEA the implications of the CEGB's decision in the course of negotiations on the authority's R and D programme.

Dounreay

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether Dounreay has been in receipt of any consignments of nuclear waste (a) before May 1979 and (b) since May 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 14 March 1988]: Since 1986, some 423 cu m of wastes arising from the development of fast reactor fuels at Sellafield have been moved to Dounreay. Prior to 1986 very small quantities of waste totalling less than 7 cu m and arising mainly from work undertaken in support of the Dounreay programme were transferred from other UKAEA sites to Dounreay. Small quantities of waste are transferred regularly to Dounreay from the adjacent Vulcan naval reactor test establishment.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards proposals by the Central Electricity Generating Board to build new nuclear generating capacity, in the context of the overall development of national electricity supplies.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to his reply 17 December 1987, c. 639-640]: It appears to me, on the information so far available to me, that the following economic, safety, environmental and planning matters are likely to be relevant to my consideration of the CEGB's application to construct a pressurised water reactor at Hinkley Point:

(1) the applicant's requirement for the power station (particularly in the light of Government policy as set out in the answer given on 17 December 1987 and in the White Paper "Privatising Electricity" (Cm. 322), in particular paragraphs 44-49);

(2) the safety feature of the design, construction and operation of the station, taking into account the conclusions on the safety of the Sizewell B PWR contained in the report of Sir Frank Layfield QC and the views of the nuclear installations inspectorate, as representing the Health and Safety Executive (the licensing authority);

(3) the on-site management of radioactive waste arising from the station and radioactive discharges from the station to the environment in the light of the views of the authorising Departments; and

(4) the implications of the proposed development (including construction, operation and decommissioning) for: (a) agriculture and fisheries; (b) the local economy including employment; (c) water supply and disposal; (d) transport requirements; (e) coast protection and sea defences; (f) housing and public services generally; (g) local amenities and in particular areas of special landscape value or nature conservation interest; (h) emergency arrangements.

I am pleased to announce that I have appointed Mr. Michael Barnes, QC, to act as inspector at the public inquiry. The inspector will hold a first pre-inquiry meeting, starting on 1 June 1988, at the Somerset college of agriculture and horticulture at Cannington near Hinkley Point and it is expected that a second pre-inquiry meeting will be held in the period 12-14 July 1988.

I consider it impracticable to open a major inquiry of this kind in a busy holiday area during the season. The inquiry is therefore expected to open on 4 October 1988, the earliest date I consider practicable. Further details about the second pre-inquiry meeting and the inquiry itself, including details of the times and places, will be announced at a later date.

The inquiry will also consider the CEGB's separate application for my consent to realign the final span of each of the Hinkley Point-Melksham and Hinkley Point-Taunton double circut of 400 kV overhead transmission lines.

The electricity generating stations and overhead lines (inquiries procedure) rules 1987 will apply to the inquiry. The code of practice "Electricity Generating Stations and Overhead Lines — Preparing for Major Inquiries in England and Wales" will also apply. I have placed a copy of the code of practice in the Libraries of both Houses.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Support for Design Scheme (Northern Ireland)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to replace the support for design scheme in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I am discussing the implications of the termination of the support for design scheme with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. An announcement will be made in due course.

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this not be done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Butcher: No. Frank expression of views could be inhibited if there were a presumption in favour of publication. But I continue to be ready to do so in appropriate cases and when the respondent has explicitly agreed to publication.

Film Industry

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the turnover of the British film industry in 1986-87, exclusive of overseas earnings.

Mr. Maude: I regret that this information is not available.

Company Registrations

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many new company registrations there have been in Yorkshire and Humberside to the nearest convenient date since 1983.

Mr. Maude: The number of companies which presently have their registered offices in Yorkshire and Humberside and which were incorporated in the period 1983 to 1986 is 15,096. To date 2,499 companies formed during 1987 have registered offices in Yorkshire and Humberside. This figure may change appreciably over the next few months as many companies are bought off-the-shelf from registration agents and their address in this early period is therefore the address of these agents.

Country of Origin Labelling

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he proposes to introduce any changes regarding country of origin requirements in the labelling of manufactured goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Provision is made in the Consumer Protection Act 1987 for the repeal of the Trade Description Act 1972 which is concerned with the origin marking of imported goods generally. I propose to introduce successor requirements, by means of an order under section 8 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 at the same time as effect is given to the repeal of the 1972 Act and to this end my Department is currently considering paper and draft order issued on 18 December last.

Departmental Accommodation

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the accommodation costs per square metre of his Department's buildings in London at (a) 1-19 Victoria street, (b) Allington towers, (c) Ashdown house and (d) Kingsgate house; and how many civil servants are employed in each location.

Mr. Butcher: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer, given on 2 March at column 584 by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment. Details of accommodation costs on leasehold buildings are treated by the Property Services Agency as commercially confidential. The numbers currently employed in the buildings referred to are:

Location	Number
1-19 Victoria Street	1,101
Allington Towers	259
Ashdown House	783
Kingsgate House	672

Airbus

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many aircraft have been firmly ordered and how many options have been secured since his Department announced official support for the A330 and A340 aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: As at 15 March 1988, the total number of commitments for the Airbus A330-340 was 145 aircraft. As the programme is still in its early stages, figures broken down between the A330 and the A340, and between firm orders and options, are not available.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many aircraft have been firmly ordered and how many options have been secured since his Department announced official support for the A320 aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: As at 15 March 1988, 294 firm orders and 189 options had been placed for the Airbus A320 aircraft.

Departmental Logos

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy that in redesigning logos, and so on for his Department, he will continue to use the historical emblem of the Board of Trade of which the Secretary of State is President.

Mr. Butcher: The historical emblem of the Board of Trade will continue to be used in selected areas where it is particularly appropriate, but in the majority of cases the new DTI logo will be employed. This logo covers all the activities of the Department of Trade and Industry rather than those of just one of the predecessor Departments. It has been introduced to support the major restructuring of DTI policies set out in the White Paper "DTI — the department for Enterprise" which was presented to Parliament on 12 January 1988.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will now make it his practice to answer questions concerning the Export Credits Guarantee Department's involvement in (a) particular transactions and (b) particular countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to make public the terms under which guarantees issued by the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) are made available for particular markets nor to disclose details of the support provided by ECGD for individual transactions. Such disclosure of commercially confidential information could prejudice the negotiating position of the United Kingdom exporters. Disclosure of the ECGD's assessment of other countries' creditworthiness could damage relationships between Her Majesty's Government and the Government concerned.

Animal Skins

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many (a) dog pelts and (b) cat skins were exported in each of the last five years and to which main countries; what checks are made on the sources of such skins, with particular regard to their legality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 4 March 1988]: Statistics on the export of dog pelts and cat skins, other than wild feline skins, are not available. No checks are made on the sources of such skins.

WALES

Neonatal Facilities

12. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the provision of neonatal facilities in hospitals in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I am pleased that improvements in services for newly born babies and their mothers have been accompanied by a dramatic reduction in the perinatal mortality rate in Wales, which has fallen from 15·6 per 1,000 births in 1979 to 10·3 in 1986.

Inward Investment

18. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a county by county break-down of inward investment in Wales for the last year for which full figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: The total recorded number of inward investment projects secured for Wales during 1987 was 113, involving investment of £244 million. I have arranged for a breakdown by county to be placed in the Library of the House.

Health Disadvantage

19. Mr. Ted Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he plans to take to compensate for the relative disadvantages in health experienced by residents of (a) Mid-Glamorgan and (b) other parts of Wales.

Mr. Grist: Relative health needs are taken account of in the formulae used in determining the allocation of resources to district health authorities.

Tourism and Leisure

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to support or initiate measures to increase jobs in the tourist and leisure industries in (a) Gwent and (b) Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The increase in resources we have made available for the Wales tourist board and assistance announced under the Enterprise Wales package will help the tourist industry create jobs in all parts of Wales.

A55 (Chester-Bangor)

21. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further schemes are required to complete the dualling of the A55 between Chester and Bangor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Five schemes are under construction. Four further schemes—the Traveller's Inn, Pen-Y-Clip, Aber and Rhaullt Hill improvements — are planned. Dualling is expected to be completed in the early 1990s.

Labour Statistics

22. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were (a) unemployed and (b) employed in Wales in May 1979; and what are the latest figures.

Mr. Peter Walker: On a seaonally adjusted basis, there were 73,100 and 136,700 unemployed claimants in Wales in May 1979 and February 1988 respectively. At September 1979, there were 1,160,000 in employment in Wales. The comparable details for September 1987, the latest available, are 1,021,000.

25. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most closely comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 11 February 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 7,841, 22,923 and 145,458 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made.

Council House Building

23. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council homes were started in 1987 in Wales; and how many were completed.

Mr. Grist: A total of 908 dwellings were started by local authorities in Wales in 1987 and 795 were completed.

Welsh Language

24. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to promote the use of Welsh in official business.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This is one of several issues which the working group, established by my right hon. Friend under my chairmanship, is considering.

Lamb (Radioactivity)

26. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up an inquiry into the alleged sale to the public of radioactive lamb above the official safety levels.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. I am satisfied that controls on the movement and slaughter of sheep have ensured that there has been no threat to public safety.

Kidney Dialysis

27. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to expand kidney dialysis treatment in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Kidney dialysis treatment in Wales has expanded rapidly under this Government, and the acceptance rate for new patients is now well above the average for the United Kingdom. Further progress will be made this year with the construction of two more subsidiary renal units in south-east Wales and an expansion of the Morriston hospital unit.

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this not be done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is already the policy of my Department to make responses to consultative documents available to the public on request except where a respondent has specifically asked for this not to be done. These arrangements are made clear when consultative documents are issued.

AIDS

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what special arrangements have been made for the treatment of persons suffering from AIDS ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: In December 1985 all district health authorities were encouraged to establish AIDS co-ordinating teams to ensure the proper management of the response to AIDS in their areas, and to ensure that treatment and care facilities were available for those who needed them. In May 1987 district health authorities were asked to prepare district operational plans on AIDS. Planning guidelines were published which contained advice on the arrangements for the treatment of AIDS sufferers including the need to consider the provision of facilities for treatment in hospital and in the community. The Welsh Office has responded to draft plans received from all authorities. Final plans are due to be submitted by 1 April 1988.

School-Industry Links

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he proposes to take to strengthen contacts and co-operation between senior classes in Welsh comprehensive schools and local industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A Welsh Office survey conducted last year indicated that there was a generally high incidence of school-industry interaction in Wales. This is an encouraging base on which to bring in new initiatives on top of existing ones, such as general work experience currently provided through schools, local authorities, TVEI and link bodies. On 13 January I announced the Enterprise Wales package, a significant and important element of which is the business and education initiative. An aim of the initiative is that, within two or three years, every young person in Wales should be given personal experience of the world of work during their last year in school.

I am also exploring the possibilities of establishing one or more compacts in Wales, which would considerably strengthen links between schools and local industrial and commercial concerns. Finally "Working Together for a Better Future", the careers initiative launched last year in England and Wales, affirms the key place of careers education in the school curriculum, to inform school leavers in their choice of occupation, including careers in industry.

Repair Grants

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to improve the position of elderly householders whose dwellings are in need of repair and whose grant applications have not yet been met.

Mr. Grist: We are aware of the particular problems elderly home owners face and have made available substantial financial support to establish care and repair home improvement services to assist them in repairing and improving their homes. A number of the changes we have suggested to the home improvement grant arrangements could be of particular help to the elderly.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from representatives of sufferers from myalgic encephalomyelitis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: In the past year we have received two representations from hon. Members, and an application from the national chairman of the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association for grant-aid under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. We shall be making our decision on this application shortly.

Incontinence

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give his latest estimate of the number of males and females in Wales who suffer from incontinence; if he will express this figure in percentage terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available centrally.

Home Insulation Grants

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received any representations concerning the change in regulations affecting home insulation grants in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Before the new arrangements for the homes insulation scheme were introduced our Department consulted the Association of District Councils in Wales. Two district councils have written to the Welsh Office since the introduction of the new scheme.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Security Regulations

28. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any estimate of the number of gainers and losers in Wales when the new social security regulations come into force in April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that statistically reliable estimates for Wales only cannot be provided.

Cohabitation Rule

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have been cut off from social security benefit as a result of the cohabitation rule in the following categories (a) women receiving widow's allowance, 60 plus years, (b) women receiving widow's allowance, under 60 years, (c) women receiving supplementary pension, 60 plus years and (d) women receiving supplementary allowance, under 60 years; and how many men have been cut off benefits, pensions and allowances as a result of the cohabitation rule.

Mr. Portillo: The information available is as follows, given for the latest possible date. Records of disqualification do not show the age and sex of the beneficiaries.

Widow's benefit: 1,722 disqualifications in year ended December 1987.

Supplementary benefit: 8,152 disqualifications in year ended November 1987.

(i) Widow's benefit records include recipients of war widows' benefit but exclude industrial widows' benefit for which records are not kept centrally and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

(ii) Widow's benefit recipients over age 60 have concurrent title to retirement pension which does not carry a similar disqualification.

Medical Treatment (Reciprocal Arrangements)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which countries have reciprocal arrangements with the United Kingdom for free medical treatment of their nationals.

Mrs. Currie: Normally, arrangements for reciprocal health care between countries do not provide for free treatment but for treatment to be provided to visitors to the host country on the same basis as to residents of that country. The Department's information leaflet SA41 "The Traveller's Guide to Health: Before You Go" lists those countries and territories with which we have reciprocal agreements on pages 18 to 19 and 24 to 27. Copies of this leaflet, and its companion SA40 "While You're Away", have been placed in the Library and are available from DHSS local offices, and travel agents and a number of other outlets.

Computer Purchases

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to introduce greater accountability for computer purchasing by the health regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Decisions relating to the purchase of computer equipment and any other goods and services are for local health authority management to take, having regard to value for money. Such decisions are subject to normal audit scrutiny.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to introduce compulsory tendering for all National Health Service computer equipment costing over £10,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The decision on what equipment to purchase and how to purchase it is a matter for individual health authorities, having regard to their standing financial instructions and value for money. The Department has, however, recently issued guidance which draws attention to current public purchasing policy, which recommends the use of competitive tendering.

Queens Medical Centre, Nottingham (Radiology System)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which companies tendered for the supply of a computerised radiology system for the Queens medical centre, Nottingham; which system was requested by the medical staff at the centre; on what basis the contract was awarded to Datamed; what operational experience the Datamed system had; what assessment was made of the ability of HM Systems to provide the service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The following companies tendered for the supply of the Queens medical centre radiology system:

Datamed
AJR Systems (now HM Systems)
Guardian
SIFO

I understand that the medical staff at the centre were fully consulted during the procurement process and were satisfied with the decision to proceed with the successful company. The Datamed system was selected on the basis that, while a new development, the operating system it employed was compatible with other computing developments within the region and the company offered comprehensive support arrangements. The solution proposed by HM Systems was considered against the same criteria as those for Datamed.

I further understand that a number of districts within the Trent region are now using the Datamed system, and several others are considering its use.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to revise upwards the official figures for deaths from AIDS in the light of the evidence given to a recent conference on AIDS by Dr. Anna McCormick, senior medical statistician at the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are aware of Dr. McCormick's interesting study and we understand that a full report will be published shortly. The current system of voluntary reporting of cases of AIDS that meet the internationally accepted definition of AIDS is working well. If this system were extended to include other HIV-related deaths, the United Kingdom's system would then not be consistent with that used in other countries. The reporting arrangements for AIDS and other HIV-related deaths are being kept under review.

London Postgraduate Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now announce details of the appointment and reappointment of chairmen of district health authorities and of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals from 1 April.

Mr. Newton: I am placing in the Library a list of the appointments made with effect from 1 April.

Incontinence

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his latest estimate of the number of males and females in England who suffer from incontinence; if he will express this figure in percentage terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 25 February 1988 at column 294-5.

The epidemiological survey conducted by the Medical Research Council's epidemiology and medical care unit, which is the latest source of information available, was completed in 1978 and was part of a 10-year survey on incontinence. I regret that there are no figures to show the prevalence of incontinence in England alone, nor is it possible to give details in the form requested.

However, the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys is currently carrying out a major survey of the numbers, circumstances and needs of disabled people. The results, which will include statistics on incontinence, will be published in a series of reports starting later this year.

Medicines (Raw Materials)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are taken to verify sources of raw materials following approval by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the issue of generic licences by his Department.

Mr. Newton: An applicant for a product licence must state the source of all active ingredients and specify the tests and limits he will apply to them. If products are to be imported in a finished state, the applicant must detail the checks which are to be carried out on importation. In all cases, the finished products must conform with the agreed specification. Lack of compliance can result in action being considered to suspend or revoke the relevant licence.

In all cases, the finished products must conform with the agreed specification. Lack of compliance can result in action being considered to suspend or revoke the relevant licence.

The medicines inspectorate has power to check the origin of raw material in the course of its visits to pharmaceutical manufacturers and for biological raw materials checks extend back to the primary manufacturer.

Samples are also taken from the market for independent analysis on behalf of the licensing authority.

East Anglian RHA (Holidaymakers)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce a pilot National Health Service internal market experiment into the East Anglian regional health authority with due weight given to the annual population increase in the Great Yarmouth and Waveney district health authority caused by the influx of visitors and holidaymakers.

Mr. Newton: I understand that there is a good deal of interest, within the East Anglian region, in the possibility of mounting an experiment.

I will ask the regional health authority chairman to ensure, if the experiment goes ahead, that account is taken of any particular local factors within the region.

My hon. Friend may like to approach the regional chairman for further details.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on allocating funds to East Anglian regional health authority to take account of the increased use of family practitioner and hospital facilities by the influx of summer holidaymakers every year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Our policy is to bring allocations to regional health authorities into line, over time, with targets calculated using the Resource Allocation Working Party formula to reflect each region's relative need for health care. These targets include an adjustment to take account of the past pattern of hospital treatment provided to patients from outside the region's own boundaries.

Family practitioner services in the East Anglian regional health authority are provided under arrangements made by family practitioner committees. Payments are made to general medical practitioners for treating temporary residents—including holidaymakers—and for providing treatment in an emergency to people not on their list. Fees paid to general medical practitioners in the East Anglian regional health authority area in 1986-87 for treating temporary residents amounted to £525,383 and for emergency treatments to £90,896. This exlcudes the cost of drugs. Information on the proportion of these payments made in respect of holidaymakers is not separately available.

Medicines Commission (Appeals)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeals to the Medicines Commission against recommendations from the Committee on Safety of Medicines were heard in each of the years 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; in how many of these cases the Medicines

Commission allowed the appeal; and in each of these cases where the advice from the Commission differed from that of the Commission on Safety of Medicines, what decision the licensing authority took and on what basis.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

Year	1	2	3	4
1985	7	5	4	1
1986	3	2	2	—
1987	12	2	2	—

Key:
Column 1: Hearings before the Medicines Commission and written representations considered by the Medicines Commission against advice by the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM).
Column 2: Advice by Medicines Commission to determine application other than as advised by CSM.
Column 3: Determined by the licensing authority in accordance with Medicines Commission advice.
Column 4: Determined otherwise.
Notes:
1. The case determined otherwise in 1984 would have required amendment of the Prescription Only Order to make a substance legally available without prescription.
2. In the 1985 case determined otherwise than on the Commission's advice, it was ascertained after the Medicines Commission proceedings that information relevant to the safety of the medicine had not been made available to them by the company concerned. Current Medicines Commission practice requires companies to make available all relevant information for these proceedings.
3. In other cases, the licensing authority's own judgment on the information available to it gave it no reason to differ from the advice of the Medicines Commission.
4. In most cases, new evidence unavailable to the CSM was submitted to the Medicines Commission; or the proposed licensing conditions were altered by the company; or both.

Acute Medicine

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown of the additional £20 million for 1988-89 for alleviating pressures on the acute sector between the various regional health authorities.

Mr. Newton: Allocations to regional health authorities did not identify any specific sum for this purpose.

CHCs (Birmingham)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will reply to the letter of 20 November 1987 from Central Birmingham community health council on behalf of the joint committee of community health councils in Birmingham.

Mr. Newton: I replied to the community health council on 17 March.

Single Payments

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for single payments were outstanding at the local social security offices at Kingsbury road and St. Margaret's road in Birmingham on 18 March.

Mr. Portillo: The office at Kingsbury road (Erdington ILO) had 363 single payment claims outstanding on 18 March. The office at St. Margaret's road (Washwood Heath ILO) had 900 single payment claims outstanding on 18 March.

Income Support

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what deadline has been established for the conversion of benefit payments to income support; what additional resources have been made available for this work at the local social security offices at Kingsbury road and St. Margaret's road in Birmingham; and whether he is satisfied that the deadline will be met.

Mr. Portillo: The deadline for the conversion of supplementary benefit payments to income support is 11 April 1988. The offices each have nine posts in addition to their normal staffing for the conversion exercise. They have also been helped by a special team from the regional office. This team stayed at Kingsbury road office for three weeks and at St. Margaret's road for four weeks. Both offices are confident that they will complete the conversion by 11 April 1988.

Ms. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether an expectant mother who suspends a full-time course of study during her pregnancy will be entitled to income support.

Mr. Portillo: If an expectant mother ceased to be a student, she would be eligible for income support. If she remained a student she would be eligible for income support during the summer vacation only and should look to an education grant for support at other times.

Place of Safety Orders

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the number of place of safety orders taken out in respect of children and young persons during 1987, showing which authority took them out.

Mr. Newton: Statistics on children and young persons removed to a place of safety during the year ending 31 March 1987 are given for 87 local authorities in the provisional feedback "Children Removed to a Place of Safety, England, 1987", copies of which are available in the Library. Information subsequently received from a further 18 local authorities is shown in the table.

These figures relate to cases where the local authority was responsible for the removal to a place of safety or where the local authority made provision for a child removed by the authority of some other person or body.

Handicapped Children (Kent)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of children in each district health authority in Kent, in each of the last 10 years, has been born with physical and mental handicaps.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the exact information requested is not available centrally. However, the hon. Member may be interested in the table, which shows readily available information from the registration of live and still births, and from the notification of congenital malformations. These notifications are based on a voluntary system of reporting malformations noticed at birth, or within seven days of birth, and may therefore exclude certain anomalies.

Infant Mortality (Kent)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the infant mortality rate in each of the district health authorities in Kent for each of the last ten years.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

HIV Infection

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the additional costs, apart from the running of an anonymised screening programme for pregnant women, of establishing a full counselling service for women found to have an HIV infection, assuming a full take-up of the scheme.

Mr. Newton: The cost of such counselling would depend on the number of women found to be infected, and the amount of counselling each needed. We do not have information on which to make estimates on either factor.

Crewe District Health Authority

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the numbers of (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) other technical personnel employed by the Crewe district health authority (i) in the latest year for which figures are available and (ii) 10 years previously.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Such information as is available is shown in the table. I regret that information to this level of detail is not centrally available for 1976. Figures for medical and dental staff exclude senior registrars and consultants whose contracts are held by the regional health authority, and not by the individual district.

by the Pontefract district health authority (i) in the last year for which figures are available and (ii) 10 years previously.

Central Nottinghamshire Health Authority

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the levels of staff, by National Health Service category, working with psychogeriatric patients in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

(2) if he will give the levels of staff, by National Health Service category, working with geriatric patients in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

(3) if he will give the levels of staff, by National Health Service category, working with mentally handicapped patients in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

(4) if he will give the levels of staff, by National Health Service category, working with mentally ill patients in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 15 January 1988]: The table shows medical and nursing staff employed in the Central Nottinghamshire district health authority, who were recorded as working in the geriatric, mental handicap and mental illness areas of work. Staff working with pschogeriatric patients are included within the total figures for mental illness. Staff within other NHS staff groups cannot be identified as working with specific types of patient.

The table gives staff employed for each year from 1982 to 1986 inclusive. Figures for 1987 are not yet available to this level of detail. Figures prior to 1982 are not available on a comparable basis with those given in the table, due to the effects of the 1982 NHS reorganisation.

Administration-Beds Ratio

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present ratio of administration to beds in (a) the Northern regional health authority and (b) the Sunderland district health authority; and what percentage change has taken place in these two health authorities over the past eight years.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 7 March 1988]: Such information as is available is shown in the tables. Because of the 1982 NHS reorganisation, figures for district health authorities on a consistent basis are not held centrally for the years prior to 1982. For comparison purposes, figures for the Northern regional health authority are given for the same years as for Sunderland district health authority.

Administrative and clerical staff cover a wide range of health services activity, not just those related to hospital bed provision. Staff in post figures are a "snapshot" on 30 September, whereas average daily available beds are a daily count averaged over a full calendar year. For these reasons any staff in-post/beds ratio would be crude and might be misleading.

In-patients

Dr. David Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for each year since 1979 the average length of in-patient stay in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland;

(2) what was the average length of stay in acute hospitals for each year since 1979 in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 4 March 1988, c. 747]: I regret that, although a table was mentioned in my previous reply, it had been omitted in error. The table is as follows:

TRANSPORT

Bus Services

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the proportion of bus services registered in England (a) operating on Sundays and (b) operating after 6 pm on weekdays, and how regularly his Department proposes to produce figures on these matters.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information is not available precisely in the form requested. Twenty-two per cent. of bus services registered in England and Wales operate on Sundays; and 17 per cent. operate between 8 pm and 10 pm on weekdays. We do not intend to produce regular figures.

Dual Carriageways (Crash Barriers)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport where in the north-west crash barriers have been installed on dual carriageway central reservations since January 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On the A74 between Carlisle and the Scottish border, the A66 near Skirsgill roundabout, and the A590 and A5092 at Greenodd junction (all in Cumbria) and on the A54 Kelsall bypass in Cheshire.

Faulty Seat Belts

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is taking steps to monitor the progress of checking faulty seat belts recently called in by Ford (UK) Ltd.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The Department is monitoring this recall under the recalls code of practice.

Private Cars (Registration)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many private cars are at present registered with the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre, Swansea.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As at December 1987, 17,421,236 car body-type vehicles were currently licensed and registered at the driver and vehicle licensing centre; 15,251,312 of these were registered in the names of individuals, as distinct from companies.

Energy

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of energy dedicated to transport is used by (a) railways and (b) road transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: The data requested are published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1976-1986", table 1.24 (HMSO), a copy of which is available in the Library.

HM Coastguard

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement about the work of Her Majesty's Coastguard.

Mr. Channon: Over the past 10 years, the operations of HM Coastguard have been progressively adapted to reflect rapidly advancing technology in radio and telecommunications, together with the greatly strengthened search and rescue helicopter services which are now available. Visual watch from the coast is now generally confined to places and times which present a higher than average risk of an accident, but a radio listening watch is maintained throughout the year covering all waters around the coasts of the United Kingdom out to 40 miles to seaward. The VHF radio sites are being progressively fitted with direction finding equipment which enables the location of a vessel in distress to be determined quickly. In addition, coastguard stations are being equipped with the MF digital selective calling system to operate with the equipment to be carried on vessels under the International Maritime Organisation's global maritime distress and safety system. The Coastguard also has links with the world wide satellite maritime communication system, and the international satellite beacon detection system.

When the coastguard modernisation plan was started in 1978, the radio listening watch was managed from 28 operations centres which between them controlled about 70 sites. With greater experience of the new system of operations, it has proved possible to control a larger number of aerials from a smaller number of operations centres, and there are at present 24 such centres with aerials at 84 sites. I have now decided that, in the light of technical developments, these operations can be further refined with no detriment to safety, and that it will be possible to control the same number of aerials from 21 centres. I have therefore decided that the maritime rescue sub-centres at Hartland Point, Moray (Peterhead), and at Ramsey on the Isle of Man should be closed in March of next year, after which the responsibility for the aerials which they presently use will be transferred to neighbouring centres. At Peterhead and Hartland Point, a coastguard presence will be maintained by the sector officer and the management of the local auxiliary companies will be unaffected.

In the case of the Isle of Man, the Government have also proposed that responsibility for search and rescue on the coast of the Island should be transferred to the Manx authorities, but radio listening watch and responsibility for search and rescue co-ordination in the waters around the island will be maintained by coastguard stations on the mainland and in Northern Ireland. The special fishermen's open line currently operated from the Moray sub-centre will be transferred to the co-ordination centre nearby at Aberdeen.

I am consulting the National Union of Civil and Public Servants about the staffing implications of these changes: I do not anticipate that redundancies among regular coastguard staff will arise.

I am satisfied that changes will in no way impede the ability of Her Majesty's Coastguard to respond to calls from vessels in distress and to co-ordinate search and rescue operations if they are required.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the regional transport authorities which operate a concessionary fares scheme for retirement pensioners; and in each case if he will state the age of eligibility for the scheme for (a) men and (b) women.

Mr. David Mitchell: According to information supplied on a voluntary basis to the Department of Transport in 1986-87, the local authorities in England listed in the table provided concessions, either individually or jointly with other authorities, to women on reaching the age of 60 and to men on reaching the age of 65, subject in some cases to other restrictions as to income and state pension status. Two other local authorities, Bristol city and Tendring district councils made concessions available to both men and women from the age of 65.

Departmental Offices (Access)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions his Department has made to improve its offices in Marsham street to make them accessible for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have been at pains to make these fully accessible to wheelchair users and other people with disabilities.

Facilities in the building include wheelchair-accessible toilets, all lift buttons at wheelchair height and fitted with braille symbols and several conference rooms equipped with induction loops for people with impaired hearing.

The edges of all steps leading up to the building are colour-contrasted to help partially sighted people.

Ramped access to the building from Marsham street has been available for some years. An additional ramp has been installed within the past few weeks to improve access further.

All these facilities are regularly used by both visitors and staff.

Dartford Crossings (Delays)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will give estimates for the likely delays, in minutes, for heavy goods vehicles carrying hazardous goods travelling north and south through the Dartford tunnel for each of the years 1988, 1989, 1990 1991 and 1992 at currently projected traffic levels;

(2) if he will give estimates for the likely delays, in minutes, for heavy goods vehicles carrying hazardous goods travelling north and south following completion of a new Thames bridge at Dartford.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Vehicles carrying a defined range of hazardous goods — about 3 per cent. of all commercial vehicles — are escorted in convoys through the Dartford tunnels, minimising the danger to the vehicles, to other traffic and to the structures. It is intended to continue this system if Parliament passes the Dartford-Thurrock Crossing Bill, which would transfer the tunnels from Essex and Kent county councils to the Secretary of State.

The new bridge, which the Bill would authorise, is intended to be open early in 1991. It will take all southbound traffic and vehicles carrying hazardous goods in that direction will not then be escorted. Northbound traffic of that kind will continue to be escorted.

Vehicles carrying hazardous goods now wait for five to 10 minutes for an escort. When the bridge opens, the flexibility offered by two northbound tunnels may make it possible to provide more frequent escorts.

At present, vehicles suffer varying delays at certain times when the tunnels cannot cope with the volume of traffic. It is not possible to calculate an average delay due to this cause.

Hunts (Trespass)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the disruption of services, staff and passengers caused by hunts trespassing on British Rail land.

Mr. David Mitchell: One from the hon. Member, none from the public.

Ferries

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the number of inspections performed by marine inspectors on ferries in port and on board ferries whilst at sea (a) in the two years and two months period prior to the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise and (b) since that date to 29 February.

Mr. David Mitchell: Separate statistics were not kept for inspections of ferries by marine surveyors prior to the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise. From 6 March 1987 to 29 February 1988, 259 ferries were inspected in port and 114 whilst at sea.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received since 29 July 1987 from ferry owners and others about modifications to ferries built under the 1960 convention and the 1965 (PSC) rules;

(2) what representations he has received since 29 July 1987 from ferry owners and others about competition from non-British companies in the event of changes to the design of ferry hulls under the 1960 convention and the 1965 (PSC) rules.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department received a number of representations from shipowners, in response to consultative document No. 3 and at meetings with the General Council of British Shipping, about the recommendations in the report of the court of formal investigation into the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise relating to ferries built under the 1965 rules. In addition, I received a letter from the president of the general council and will place a copy of that letter and of my reply in the Library.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about his plans to adopt the recommendation of the formal investigation into the Herald of Free Enterprise of section 49 concerning ferries built under the 1960 convention and the 1965 (PSC) rules.

Mr. David Mitchell: On 31 July, my Department called for full data on all roll-on/roll-off ferries built before 1980 to be submitted to the Department by 1 April, to enable assessments to be made of how these ships measure up to the current requirements for survivability following collision damage. The Government intend to analyse this information fully, and to reach conclusions upon the recommendations in the report of the court, by the end of September.

Railways

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to maximise the environmental benefits to be gained from the railways as compared to other forms of transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government offer grants under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 to facilitate the transfer of freight from road to rail where that would lead to significant environmental gain.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Students (Rating Reform)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent Northern Ireland students attending universities in Great Britain whose parents are already paying rates in Northern Ireland will be required to pay poll tax; and to what extent student grants will be increased accordingly.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Devolved Government

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the views recently expressed by the Prime Minister of the Irish Republic on devolved government for Northern Ireland have been officially conveyed to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I was provided with a copy of the Taoiseach's remarks as a courtesy and I have noted the comments that he made.

Diplock Courts

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress on the adoption of Viscount Colville's recommendation that cases of robbery and aggravated burglary should not be tried in Diplock courts.

Mr. Stanley: During the debate, on 25 February, on the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts (Continuance) Order at column 475, my right hon. Friend said that we certainly want to see as many jury trials as we can and that we shall be considering Lord Colville's suggestion of removing robbery and aggravated burglary from the scheduled list. That consideration is continuing.

Incontinence

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give his latest estimate of the number of males and females in Northern Ireland who suffer from incontinence; if he will express this figure in percentage terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No reliable estimates are currently available.

Dogs

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many registrations have been recorded since the implementation of the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1982.

Mr. Needham: The number of registrations, which deal only with breeding establishments and guard dog kennels, made since the provisions of the Dog Order (Northern Ireland) 1983 became operative on 19 December 1983 are:

	Breeding Establishments	Guard Dog Kennels
19 December 1983— 31 December 1984	519	12
1 January 1985— 31 December 1985	420	10
1 January 1986— 31 December 1986	336	10
1 January 1987— 31 December 1987	351	6

Brendan Burns (Warrants)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Londonderry of 10 March, Official Report, column 304, if he will indicate in what way the original warrants for Brendan Burns were held to be defective.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that the original warrants were held to be defective because they were issued by a different justice of the peace from the one before whom the "complaint" had been sworn.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Mr. Colin Wallace was ever personally interviewed by an official inquiry or by other official persons in connection with (a) psychological operations, (b) an alleged shoot-to-kill policy, (c) alleged political disinformation activity and (d) any alleged use of forged documentations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 7 March 1988]: Not as far as I am aware.

WALES

Farming Statistics

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated area of land devoted to each predominant farming activity in Wales for the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is based on the June 1986 agricultural census and is as follows:

	Area in hectares
Dairying	320,120
Livestock	1,052,298
Cropping	49,087
Pigs and poultry	8,966
Other	67,216
TOTAL	1,497,687

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated annual total income derived from, and value of each predominant farming activity in Wales for the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: Total gross receipts from farming activity in Wales in 1987 (including grants and compensation payments) were provisionally estimated to be £827·7 million; of which milk and milk products represented £274·5 million; cattle fattening and rearing, £199·2 million; sheep, lamb and wool, £159·8 million; and other products, £128·5 million. Other receipts (including grants and compensation payments) were £65·7 million.

Total net income from farming activities in Wales after taking account of all farming costs including feeding stuffs, fertilisers, machinery, veterinary and medicines and so on and after allowing for depreciation, interest payments, rent and labour costs, was £57·3 million.

Agricultural Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average value per hectare of agricultural land in Wales for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: Based on transactions notified to the Inland Revenue, the average value per hectare of agricultural land in Wales for each of the last 10 years was as follows:

Year	£ per hectare
1978	1,215
1979	1,655
1980	2,418
1981	2,212
1982	2,032
1984	2,727
1985	2,467
1986	2,530
1987	2,464

Hotels (Classification)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 17 November, Official Report, column 466, what is the latest information on the numbers of establishments accepted for crown hotel classification; how many hotels have failed to meet the specifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: According to the Wales tourist board the information as at 21 March 1988 is as follows:

Category	Number
Listed	130
1 crown	46
2 crowns	305
3 crowns	275
4 crowns	177
5 crowns	31
Awaiting classification	16
Total	980

Since the Wales tourist board introduced classification, 55 hotels have failed to meet the criteria, with 11 establishments having been rejected since 1 April 1987.

The Wales tourist board, following wide consultation, has announced its intention to introduce a qualitative grading scheme for hotel and other serviced accommodation by 1990. The new system is similar to that in operation in Scotland, and will supplement the present crown classification scheme under which establishments are classified by available facilities.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total area of land approved for forestry planting grants in Wales in each of the last four financial years for which figures are available; and what was the figure for the period 1 April 1987 to 31 January 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

1984	2,175
1985	1,811
1986	2,466

The total area of land approved for planting in the period 1 April 1987 to 31 December 1987 was 2,406 hectares. Figures are not yet available for January 1988.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what environmental guidance he will be giving to the Forestry Commission concerning grant approval for new forestry planting in the uplands of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The existing consultation arrangements, the effectiveness of which will be enhanced by the proposed new grant regime, will continue to balance the environmental and forestry planting objectives in the upland areas of Wales.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

MBFR Talks

150. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what time table the Government envisage for an agreement in the forthcoming conventional arms talks in Vienna; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We hope the Vienna discussions on a mandate for conventional stability negotiations will reach early agreement and that substantive talks will begin later this year.

Panama

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's response to the recent events in Panama.

Mr. Eggar: We have followed closely recent events in Panama. On 2 March, together with our European Community partners, we issued a statement expressing deep concern at developments and appealing to the present rulers of Panama to open the way for internal peace and democracy.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current agreements by (a) the European Community Council of Ministers and (b) the Commonwealth Heads of State on the import of uranium originating in (a) South Africa and (b) Namibia for processing and subsequent re-export for use in a third state, in each state party to such agreements.

Mr. Mellor: None specifically. A package of restrictive measures agreed by the European Community Council of Ministers in September 1985 included a prohibition on all new collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear sector. The package of economic measures agreed by the Commonwealth Heads of Government in October 1985 included a ban on new contracts for the sale and export of nuclear goods, materials and technology to South Africa.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses concerning the rules currently adopted by the United States Treasury Department pursuant to the comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act 1986 covering the import and safeguarding of South African and Namibian origin uranium (a) processed in the United Kingdom before re-export and (b) contracted before 1 July 1987.

Mr. Mellor: The United States Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986 prohibits the import of South African origin uranium ore or uranium oxide to the United States. However, articles such as uranium hexafluoride, which are produced from uranium ore or uranium oxide, and which the United States customs service determines to have been substantially transformed outside the United States, are not subject to the import prohibition.

Q14. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the Prime Minister of Turkey.

The Prime Minister: I expect to meet the Prime Minister of Turkey when I visit that country next month.

Granborough (Visit)

Q38. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Granborough, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Port Glasgow (Visit)

Q154. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Port Glasgow in the near future.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 22 March.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 22 March.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 22 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 22 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, and I also attended the launch of the Tidy Britain Group's litter initiative. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of Kuwait. This evening I hope to have an Audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

Gwynedd

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to pay an official visit to Gwynedd.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

ENVIRONMENT

RNAD, Coulport (Floating Jetty)

151. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there has been any slippage in the timing of the announcement of the placing of a contract for a floating jetty for the RNAD, Coulport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The tendering period has been extended by six weeks at the request of the tenderers. A decision on the placing of a contract is expected in the late summer.

Canary Wharf

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken by the London Docklands development corporation to set up the employment monitoring group incorporating the local boroughs and the docklands forum as prescribed in the master building agreement with the Canary wharf developers Olympia and York; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The master building agreement allows for the monitoring of local employment. Olympia and York Ltd has instituted written procedures which will be contractually enforced on all companies working on Canary wharf to submit, on a monthly basis, returns of people employed locally and people undertaking training from local areas. These will be submitted directly to the LDDC and the London borough of Tower Hamlets. The LDDC will then at regular intervals provide this information to the docklands forum.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many square feet of offices on Canary wharf the master builder agreement between the London Docklands development corporation and Olympia and York commits the developer to build; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The master building agreement commits the developers of Canary wharf to build 5·4 million sq ft of development in phase 1. The whole development provides in aggregate 12·2 million sq ft of office, retail and hotel floor space. This is a bold and innovative development. It will provide an enormous increase in employment opportunities in docklands, and will add further impetus to the regeneration of docklands as a whole.

Urban Development Corporations (Land)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average value of land per acre when invested in each of the currently existing urban development corporations; and at what average price it is currently being sold to developers.

Mr. Trippier: Land has been vested in two of the six English urban development corporations. For information on the London Docklands development corporation I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Banks) on 8 March at column 118.

The average value of land vested in Merseyside development corporation was £9,200 per acre. Land prices in the urban development area currently range from £35,000 per acre to approximately £250,000 per acre, depending on size, location planning use and MDC expenditure on site preparation and infrastructure.

Derelict Land

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the 632 hectares of derelict land in Humberside that was thought to justify reclamation during the 1982 survey of derelict land in England has been reclaimed and developed; why the remaining 254 hectares of derelict land in Humberside was not thought to justify reclamation; and where this land is located.

Mr. Trippier: Information on how much of the 632 hectares of derelict land has been reclaimed since April 1982 is not presently available. The 1988 derelict land survey is currently under way and the results are expected to be published next year. The information sought will than be readily available.

The decision that 254 hectares of derelict land did not justify reclamation was based on local authorities' own assessments at that time and would include those sites in remote rural areas which were not sufficiently obtrusive to warrant expenditure and sites for which it would be impracticable to consider reclamation because of technical and—or financial reasons.

The location of the land and the nature of the dereliction is as follows:

Nature of Derelict Land

Urban Development

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of projects approved under the urban development grant programme, (b) the amount of funds provided, (c) the number of jobs created, (d) the number of homes built and (e) the number of acres of derelict land reused since the programme began in 1982.

Mr. Trippier: Since 1982, a total of 282 urban development grants have been approved. A total of almost £137 million of grant has been offered securing private sector investment of £545 million. The grants approved will lead to 25,700 jobs, the construction of 4,700 new homes, the refurbishment of a further 1,900 homes and the reuse of 1,100 acres of land.

Unified Business Rate

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state (a) the estimated increase in the level of rates that businesses in each of the district council areas of Devon will face when unified business rate is introduced and how that increase will be phased in, and (b) the estimated effect of the proposed rates revaluation on Devon businesses.

Mr. Howard: A national non-domestic rate (NNDR) set at the 1987-88 average level would have been set at 224·1p in the pound. This compares with the present poundages in the district council areas of Devon as follows:

District Councils	Pence	Percentage difference
East Devon	207·4	8·0
Exeter	203·3	10·2
North Devon	212·7	5·4
Plymouth	207·0	8·3
South Hams	212·3	5·6
Teignbridge	211·9	5·8
Mid Devon	210·6	6·4
Torbay	220·8	1·5
Torridge	215·6	3·9
West Devon	209·2	7·1

Rates in Devon in the coming year alone are changing by 10 to 12 per cent. as a result of the spending decisions of the local authorities there. Detailed information on the effects of the revaluation is not yet available. Some forecasts suggest it might result in moderate average increases in rateable values in the south-west as a whole, with rather large increases for prime shops and reductions for older factories.

There will be arrangements to phase in changes in the rates bill resulting from revaluation and the NNDR. There will be an annual ceiling on the amount by which rate bills can increase in any one year. We are considering whether a lower ceiling might be set for small businesses. We intend to take a power to allow for further transitional arrangements after 1995.

Rates Increases

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total rates increase for businesses for each of the years in the period 1980 to 1987 in each of the district council areas of Devon; and what was the increase in the rate of inflation in each year.

Mr. Chope: Following is the available information:

Prospect Estate, Hampshire

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the cost to the borough of Rushmoor in Hampshire to effect the major technical repair programme on the Prospect estate for 1988-89 and subsequent years will be met by subsidy.

Mrs. Roe: In the first place, this will depend upon the cost of the work undertaken by Rushmoor borough council. The Department is considering a request by the council that the subsidy rules be relaxed in this particular case.

Cars (Lead-free Petrol)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to publish regularly updated lists of cars which run on lead-free petrol.

Mr. Moynihan: A list of cars capable of running on unleaded petrol without adjustment was prepared by the Department in September 1987. This list and a simplified chart have been made freely available to interested organisations and inquirers. An updated list will be available by the end of this month. Details for all new cars are now published twice a year in the Department of Transport's "New Car Fuel Consumption" booklet.

Petrol

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what percentage of cars at present on British roads have been designed to operate both on leaded and unleaded petrol;

(2) what percentage of cars cannot run on unleaded petrol due to risk of engine damage;

(3) what information he has on the locations in England and Wales where unleaded petrol may be purchased;

(4) if he will estimate the number of cars that are fitted with three-way catalytic converters;

(5) if he will make a statement on lean-burn engine technology in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 21 March 1988]: Figures provided by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders on the ability of cars to run on unleaded petrol are as follows:

Per cent.

	R	U	L	E
Vehicles on the road at December 1986	56	—	35	9
New vehicles registered during 1987	57	—	20	23

In the above, R denotes refer to dealer for advice on conversion to operate on either unleaded or leaded petrol, U denotes unleaded fuel only, L denotes leaded fuel only, and E denotes either unleaded or leaded fuel may be used without adjustment.

To date in the United Kingdom a few cars used solely for experimental and test purposes have been fitted with three-way catalytic converters. I understand that the first vehicles fitted with three-way catalytic converters to go on sale in the United Kingdom will do so on Wednesday 23 March.

The approach of British and other European car manufacturers to the use of "lean-burn" technology is discussed in volume 4 of the Fellowship of Engineering's "Manual of Acidic Emission Abatement Technologies" prepared for the Department. Copies of this have been placed in the Library of the House. "Lean-burn" technology is one of the principal approaches to meeting the new European exhaust emission limits.

The Department regularly receives a list from the United Kingdom Petroleum Industries Association of petrol stations in the United Kingdom where unleaded petrol may be purchased. A map showing these locations is prepared by the Department and both the list and the map are made freely available to interested organisations and inquirers.

Litter

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to tackle the litter problem: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 March 1988]: The Government have supported the Tidy Britain Group (formerly the Keep Britain Tidy Group) for many years in its educational and promotional programmes for litter abatement. At my suggestion, the group has rethought its strategy and approach. Over the next 12 months, the group will launch a series of pilot projects across the country which will try out different approaches to demonstrate what can be done and how best it can be done. I shall, with parliamentary approval, increase the grant made by my Department to the group to £1·254 million in 1988-89 to include a contribution to finance the necessary managerial and co-ordinating effort.

The projects, which will be selected by the group, will aim to enlist the support of all sectors of the community — commerce and industry at both national and local levels, local authorities, public utilities and voluntary groups. Each project will incorporate "before" and "after" studies so that their success can be evaluated. Lessons drawn from the pilot projects will be reviewed at the end of the year, to form the basis for the group to develop a major national effort in subsequent years. Litter and public untidiness are neither necessary, nor inevitable. This new experimental initiative by the Tidy Britain Group offers the prospect of a cleaner, tidier Britain in the nineties. To be successful, it will require practical support and commitment from everyone. I am sure that all sections of the House wish to give theirs.

TRANSPORT

Harrogate and Knaresborough Bypass

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of the completion date of the inquiry into the Harrogate and Knaresborough southern bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The reopened inquiry closed on 19 February. We await the inspector's report.

M1 (Fourth Lane)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to construct a fourth lane on the M1 to act as a feeder into the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no such proposals.

M5 (Repairs)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on how many occasions since 1981 individual lanes of the Bridgwater-Exeter section of the M5 motorway have been closed for repair; whether he will estimate how long each such lane closure lasted, excluding temporary lane closures resulting from road accidents; and what representations he has received since January 1987 regarding any inconvenience caused by such lane closures;

(2) what representations he has received since 1 January 1987 about the condition of the fabric of the M5 motorway between Bridgwater and Exeter; whether it is now in a satisfactory state of repair; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what was the cost of repair works to the M5 motorway between Bridgwater and Exeter in each financial year since 1976; and what was the cost of the original construction of that section of the motorway, in cash prices and in 1987 prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since 1981 contraflow systems have been in operation on seven occasions with a total duration of about 420 days. Records of other lane closures for routine maintenance operations are not kept.

Three representations have been received since 1 January 1987 about the Bridgwater-Exeter length of the M5. These related to the inconvenience caused by the works currently in progress on the Taunton bypass section.

Construction costs of the M5 motorway between Bridgwater (junction 23) and Exeter (junction 30) amounted to £41 million in cash terms. This represents expenditure of the order of £153 million in 1987 prices.

Maintenance costs since 1976 are as follows:

	£ Cash prices 1976	£ Cash prices 1987
1976-77	2,000	5,000
1977-78	3,000	6,000
1978-79	66,000	106,000
1979-80	508,000	574,000
1980-81	1,946,000	2,315,000
1981-82	248,000	315,000
1982-83	1,216,000	1,388,000
1983-84	1,319,000	1,553,000
1984-85	226,000	258,000
1985-86	1,010,000	1,130,000
1986-87	1,370,000	1,460,000
1987-88	2,467,000	2,467,000
Total	10,381,000	11,577,000

Further major maintenance works will be carried out between Huntworth (junction 24) and Taunton (junction 25) starting after Easter and finishing before the spring bank holiday at a cost of about a further £1 million. Additional major maintenance works will be necessary over the next five years as various sections of this length of motorway which will have been in use for between 15 and 20 years will require strengthening or reconstruction.

Channel Tunnel (Contaminated Soil)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why Royal Army Ordnance Corps, Moreton-under-Lugg, Herefordshire, was used to store approximately 3,000 drums of contaminated soil from Channel tunnel workings.

Mr. David Mitchell: It provided a suitable site for the necessary secure temporary storage.

Roads (East Anglia)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has had from Suffolk and Norfolk on roads; what responses he has given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend receives a wide variety of representations both in the context of the statutory procedures for trunk road proposals and otherwise.

There have been continuing representations from various sources seeking improvements to the trunk road network in East Anglia and in particular that the A11-A47 route between M11 and Great Yarmouth should be dualled throughout. Our positive response to this is demonstrated by the 30 schemes in various stages of preparation valued at £177 million for the three East Anglian counties (including Cambridgeshire). Fifteen schemes currently in the planning process or recently completed, and valued at £130 million for the A11-A47 mean some three quarters of that route will be dual carriageway by the early 1990s. Further improvements will be considered as candidates for the programme when they can be justified, subject to the availability of resources.

Road Safety Law

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the findings of Dr. North's review of road safety law.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Dr. North has submitted his report on the work of his review over the past three years. Arrangements are being made to get this printed and published so that all concerned and interested can have an opportunity to read it and comment on it.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications under the enterprise initiative have been received by his Department's regional office in Newcastle.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: DTI/NE Newcastle had received 138 applications for consultancy assistance under the enterprise initiative up to and including 17 March 1988.

Staff (Redeployment)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many officials of his Department presently employed at the Billingham office in Stockton-on-Tees will be redeployed (a) within Cleveland and (b) in the northern region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are still considering the DTI's continued presence in Teesside although the bulk of the work at present carried out at the Billingham office will come to an end over the next few years. We will make every effort to redeploy officials presently employed in Billingham to other work or to other offices in the north-east, but I cannot at this stage guarantee redeployment for every official involved.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many officials will be employed at the new satellite office of his Department to be established in Middlesbrough under the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: One official will inaugurate this satellite office but the final staffing level remains to be decided in the light of its emerging role.

Departmental Satellite Office

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster where the new satellite office of his Department in Middlesbrough will be situated.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The satellite office will begin operation in Rede house, Corporation road, Middlesbrough. Its longer-term location will be reviewed in line with its emerging role. It will work closely with others concerned with enterprise in Cleveland.

Departmental Office, Billingham

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to visit his Department's office in Billingham.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I keep in close touch with the work of my regional offices, but I cannot say when it will be possible for me to visit Billingham.

Consumer Protection Act 1987

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the relevant goods made the subject of prohibition notices under section 13 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 and the similar provisions under previous acts.

Mr. Butcher: No prohibition notices have been made under the Consumer Protection Act 1987. Three were made under the Consumer Safety Act 1978:

Automatic Rice Cooker (1983)
Sprint 0·6 TA Scissor Jack (1984)
Expanding Novelties, New Grobots, New Grobugs and New Grobeasts (1985)

Normally suppliers agree to remove hazardous products from the market voluntarily.

Pensions and Benefits

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will call for a report from the chairman of the Post Office on action taken by the Post Office following a letter dated 22 January from the area manager, counters, to sub-postmasters, in response to advice from the Department of Health and Social Security that recipients of pensions and benefits might receive those benefits through a bank or building society; and what expenditure the Post Office plans to incur in this respect.

Mr. Butcher: No; these are commercial matters for the Post Office.

Tin Mining (Cornwall)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current position of the Rio Tinto Zinc Corporation plc tin mining operations in Cornwall.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1986 the Government agreed to provide to the RTZ Corporation's subsidiary Carnon Consolidated Ltd. an interest-free loan of up to £15 million and guarantees of commercial loans of up to £10 million. This finance was to assist RTZ to undertake a £31 million capital development programme covering the next five years. It was clear at the outset that the prospects for the tin mines in the longer term were heavily dependent on the course of the price of tin.

Because of severely depressed tin prices in the last year — particularly over the last few months — Carnon Consolidated Ltd. is again facing serious difficulties. I understand that today the company is announcing the redundancy of some 200 of the present 720 staff employed in their two mines.

Over the past few weeks, I have had several discussions with RTZ and my officials have been holding detailed talks with RTZ and the management of Carnon Consolidated Ltd. I am pleased to announce that heads of agreement have today been signed between the parties.

Under the heads of agreement, subject to the parties obtaining various consents, RTZ will sell its interest to a new company to be owned 80 per cent. by present management and 20 per cent. on behalf of employees. RTZ has agreed to provide £10 million in interest-free loans to the new company. The Government have agreed to convert our £10 million guarantees to an interest-free loan in addition to our original £15 million loan which will remain in place.

I am satisfied that, although the inherent risks of tin mining remain, this help is justified to secure the continuation of mining and employment in Cornwall. It will enable the main elements of the modernisation programme begun in 1986 to be completed and will save at least 500 jobs in the two mines.

Airbus

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy towards the proposal made by the European Commission, on behalf of the continental partners of Airbus, that there should be a clause in the civil aviation agreement to permit support to compensate Airbus Industrie for exchange rate movements of the United States dollar, as revealed in the statement before the European Parliament by M de Clercq on 9 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 March 1988]: The European position described by Commissioner de Clercq is jointly agreed by the Commission and the four Airbus partner Governments. The Airbus partners and the Commission consider that Government supports to the aircraft industry are consistent with our obligations under the GATT agreement on trade in civil aircraft. How and in what circumstances support is given is a matter for individual Governments; in the United Kingdom, exchange rate movements were one of the risk factors taken into account by the Government in agreeing to provide launch aid.

Heating and Cleaning Firms (Accounts)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what dates the latest annual return and accounts for IHV Industrial Investments Ltd., Industrial Heating and Ventilation Ltd., MPCS Ltd., and Midland Professional Cleaning Ltd., were received.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for each year since 1979, how many prosecutions have been brought against (a) EEC nationals and (b) non EEC nationals for contraventions of fishing regulations.

Mr. Gummer: The number of prosecutions which have been brought by United Kingdom authorities against (a) EEC nationals and (b) non-EEC nationals for offences connected with fishing, for each year since 1979, is shown in the table.

HOME DEPARTMENT

British Visitors' Passports

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions exist on the issuing of British visitors' passports by post offices on Saturdays.

Mr. Renton: British visitor's passports, which are obtainable from main post offices in Great Britain, are not at present issued on Saturdays, but we hope to introduce procedural changes which will enable this restriction to be removed.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many remand prisoners were being held in London prisons at the latest available date who are (a) over and (b) under 21 years of age;

(2) how many remand prisoners were being held in London prisons at the latest available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most recent readily available information is given in the table.

Untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners in Greater London[1] prisons on 31 January 1988: by age and type of prisoner
Number of prisoners[2]

Type of prisoner	Under 21	21 and over	All ages
Untried	161	1,779	1,940
Convicted unsentenced	42	295	337
Total	203	2,074	2,277

[1] Brixton, Feltham, Holloway, Latchmere House, Pentonville, Wandsworth and Wormwood Scrubs.
[2] In addition 734 prisoners from the whole of the South East Prison Department Region, most of whom were on remand, were held in police cells.

Prisons

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether for the longer term planning purposes of prison building, any consideration has been given to, or plans exist for, the sale of sites of Her Majesty's prisons at Cardiff, Reading and Swansea;

(2) what steps would have to be taken to make the proceeds of the sale of existing sites of Her Majesty's prisons for redevelopment purposes available for prison building;

(3) where, under present rules, the proceeds of the sale of prison sites go.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under long-standing Treasury rules, proceeds from the sale of prison sites would be surrendered to the Consolidated Fund. Changes to these rules would require detailed discussions with my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury. Whether any such changes to the rules should be proposed is a question to be considered in the first instance by the Prison Building Board; as is the question whether in the longer-term consideration should be given to selling prisons on city centre sites. The seven-member board includes three from the private sector, and its task is to ensure that the prison building programme is delivered as effectively and efficiently as possible.

Prisoners (Crime Statistics)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy guidance to police authorities regarding the provision of names of people who admit to crimes and who are serving terms of imprisonment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have issued no guidance to police authorities about the provision of names of people who admit to crimes and who are serving terms of imprisonment. The disclosure of police information is a matter for individual chief officers.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to authorise increases in Metropolitan police manpower for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Under the four-year programme of police manpower increases announced in May 1986, I said that I would be prepared to authorise annual increases in Metropolitan police manpower of up to 300 in the police establishment and 150 in the civil staff ceiling, subject to my being satisfied that earlier increases had been properly used. In 1986-87, I authorised the first of these increases; and for 1987-88, I authorised the second, with the addition of 100 civil staff brought forward from 1988-89 to help with civilianisation.

I have reviewed manpower in the Metropolitan police. In 1987 officers serving at headquarters were reduced by 344 and the number of officers in areas with direct local responsibility for operations has increased by 752. I have decided to authorise the increase of 300 police officers as envisaged in the programme, and the 50 additional civil staff for 1988-89 not already authorised. These increases will bring the police establishment and civil staff ceiling for 1988-89 to 28,115 and 13,701 respectively.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning openness in the proceedings of magistrates courts and the possible scope for improved access to the records of such proceedings.

Mr. Hurd: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and I are concerned about the allegations of insufficient openness in the magistrates courts which have been published recently in the press and the survey by the Association of British Editors on which they are based.

It is a well-established principle that, subject to certain exceptions, the administration of justice in this country should take place in open court, to which the public and the press have access, and that any attempt by anyone to circumvent this principle is to be condemned. My noble and learned Friend and I have arranged for officials of our two Departments to meet representatives of the press, the Magistrates Association and the Justices Clerks Society to discuss relations between magistrates courts and the press relevant to the reporting of proceedings, including access to the records.

I should add that, though I am in no position to comment on them, I understand that the details of the cases mentioned in recent allegations in the press are not accepted as accurate by the clerks of the courts concerned, and that a complaint has been made to the Press Council.

ENERGY

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this be not done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Parkinson: Consultative documents vary widely in form and purpose and accordingly each such case needs to be considered on its merits. However, I will bear in mind the hon. Member's suggestion.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) who will be liable to bear the costs and responsibility for the safe disposal of nuclear waste after privatisation of the electricity supply industry;

(2) whether the decommissioning of nuclear power stations will be the responsibility of the private company which takes them over; and by whom the cost will be borne.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The operators of nuclear power stations will continue to be responsible for decommissioning and management of radioactive wastes, within the guidelines on safety and environmental protection set by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive and Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, and for their costs.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if uranium imported to the United Kingdom from Namibia for processing by British Nuclear Fuels Limited and re-export for Chubu Electric Company of Japan, is covered by (a) the International Atomic Energy Authority, (b) Euratom and (c) bilateral safeguards agreements;

(2) if uranium imported from Namibia to the United Kingdom for processing by British Nuclear Fuels Limited and re-export for Tokyo Electric is covered by safeguards;

(3) if uranium imported from South Africa to be processed by British Nuclear Fuels Limited for re-export for Tokyo Electric Company is covered by safeguards;

(4) if uranium imported from South Africa for processing and re-export by British Nuclear Fuels Limited for Taiwan Power Company is covered by (a) International Atomic Energy Authority, (b) Euratom or (c) bilateral safeguards;

(5) if uranium imported from South Africa to the United Kingdom for processing by British Nuclear Fuels Limited and re-export for Kansai Electric Company is under (a) International Atomic Energy Authority, (b) Euratom or (c) bilateral safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All civil nuclear material in the United Kingdom is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the United Kingdom/Euratom/IAEA agreement.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps the Government have taken to find young people the YTS scheme of their choice within the time recommended.

Mr. Cope: Since 1983 the Government have guaranteed that all unemployed school leavers would be offered a YTS place by Christmas and each year this guarantee has been effectively met. This achievement reflects great credit on the Manpower Services Commission which is responsible for providing an appropriate range of places in each locality and the careers service which is responsible for placing young people on YTS within the guarantee period.

Labour Statistics

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish what information he has about unemployment by ethnic group at regional and metropolitan county level.

Mr. Lee: Information about unemployment by ethnic group is available from the labour force survey, but the amount of detail that can be provided is limited by small sample numbers. Estimated unemployment rates by ethnic origin for regions and metropolitan counties, averaged over spring 1984, 1985 and 1986, were published in the March 1988 issue of Employment Gazette (Table 12 on page 177), a copy of which is in the Library. Later estimates will be published when the final results of the 1987 labour force survey become available later this year.

Unemployed People (Study)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new provision he is intending to make to encourage young unemployed people to study whilst unemployed.

Mr. Cope: From September all young people aged 16 and 17 will be guaranteed a place on the youth training scheme if they want one, up to their 18th birthday. All trainees on the scheme take part in off-the-job training and have the opportunity to study for a recognised vocational qualification or a credit towards one.

Hotels (Classification)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 19 November, Official Report, column 621, what is the latest information on the numbers of establishments accepted for crown classification in each category including five gold crowns; how many hotels have failed to meet the specification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: According to figures for England produced by the English tourist board, the information as at 23 February 1988 is as follows:

Category	Number
Listed	2,147
1 crown	573
2 crowns	3,009
3 crowns	1,801
4 crowns	1,215
5 crowns	251
Total	8,996

Six of the 5-crown graded hotels have also been given the five gold crown award. Of those establishments which have applied, 125 have failed to meet the criteria for classification.

European Social Fund

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will itemise, by applicant organisation or body, the source of public authority matching funds, including local authority spending powers where relevant, for European social fund schemes based in Greater London which have been submitted to the European Commission to operate in 1988;

(2) if he will itemise by recipient organisation or body, the source of public authority matching funds, including local authority spending powers where relevant, for European social fund supported projects based in Greater London in 1987.

Mr. Cope: I regret that I cannot provide the information that the hon. Member requests. In submitting applications for European social fund assistance to the European Commission through my Department, organisations are required to provide details some of which they may understandably regard as confidential. It would be wrong of me to publish these without their prior approval.

SCOTLAND

Education and Culture (European Integration)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to implement the a la carte co-operation proposed in the document entitled "European Integration in Education and Culture," which appears in bulletin EC 3-1987, page 111; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The document to which the hon. Member refers was circulated by the French Prime Minister to his European counterparts last March, but no conclusion has yet been reached on its implementation.

We shall continue to participate in the Government's overall consideration of the proposals for a la carte co-operation contained in the document.

Nursing Staff

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on funding for schemes to allow nursing staff to update their skills to enable them to return to work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Former nursing staff can update their skills to enable them to return to clinical practice in the NHS through attending "Back to Nursing" courses, or through participation in nurse banks which offer them temporary postings. These schemes are the responsibility of, and are funded by, individual health boards.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the shortfall in nursing staff in each health board in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Management information of this kind is not held centrally.

Rating Reform

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate of the level of community charge for each (a) regional, (b) islands and (c) district council in Scotland taking account of proposed rates levels for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: The table shows the estimated levels of community charge which would be necessary to replace domestic rate income in 1988-89. The figures may need to be adjusted if in due course my right hon. and learned Friend proposes a rate reduction in relation to any authority and this is approved by Parliament. They are provisional figures calculated on the same basis as those produced by the Scottish Office in respect of earlier years and reflect the latest available information on rate poundages for 1988-89. They do not represent forecasts of the level of community charge when the new system is introduced in 1989-90 and take no account of the proposals for grant safety nets which are under discussion at present between the Scottish Office and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

3. The figures are based on rate poundages for 1988-89, the Registrar-General's estimate of persons 18 plus at June 1986, and domestic rateable values at April 1987.

Education

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many children received primary school education in (a) Fife and (b) north-east Fife in the last five years for which information is available;

(2) how many children have received nursery school education in (a) Fife and (b) north-east Fife in the last five years for which information is available;

(3) how many children received secondary school education in (a) Fife and (b) north-east Fife in the last five years for which information is available;

(4) how many school teachers have been employed in (a) Fife and (b) north-east Fife in (i) primary schools, (ii) secondary schools and (iii) nursery schools in the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested in respect of education authority schools in Fife is set out in the table. Information for Fife, North-East can be obtained from Fife regional council.

The figures for 1987 are provisional. Teacher numbers have been provided in full-time equivalent terms.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the rates of grant will be under the new forestry grant arrangements announced in the Budget statement; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The rates of grant will be announced later this week.

Training Programmes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied with the adequacy of the training programmes available in Greenock and Port Glasgow, with particular reference to whether the unemployed persons will be able to respond to new job opportunities, especially with regard to the Inverclyde initiative.

Mr. Lang: Yes. The full range of Manpower Services Commission training and employment measures is available in Greenock and Port Glasgow and, together with other training initiatives supported by the Scottish Development Agency and the Inverclyde Enterprise Trust, should greatly enhance the job prospects of local unemployed people in the more buoyant labour market now prevailing.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest unemployment figures for Greenock and Port Glasgow; and if he will break these figures down by district council ward.

Mr. Lang: On 11 February 1988 (the latest date for which information is available) the number of unemployed claimants in each electoral ward of the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency was as shown in the table.

Hotels (Classification)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of 17 November, Official Report, column 540, what is the latest information or the numbers of establishments accepted for crown hotel classification; how many hotels have failed to meet the specifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The figures given in my answer of 17 November, at columns 539-40, represented the final results of the classification and grading inspections carried out in 1987. The Scottish tourist board has commenced this year's round of inspections, and results for 1988 will be available in the autumn.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries (Scotland) area of land referred to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries (Scotland) by the Forestry Commission, in total and for each regional conservancy in Scotland, under forestry grant consultation procedures during the period 1 April 1987 to 31 January 1988; and if he will list in each case the area of land for which the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries (Scotland) advised it was (a) acceptable to award planting grant approval and (b) inappropriate to award grant on agricultural grounds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During the period 1 April 1987 to 31 January 1988, a total of 25,616 hectares of land was referred to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland by the Forestry Commission under the procedures for consultation on forestry grant scheme applications. The Department advised that it had no objections on agricultural grounds to applications affecting 23,179 hectares and notified the Forestry Commission of agricultural objections to 2,437 hectares.

Within Scotland, this information is collected for each DAFS area office rather than by regional conservancy. The statistics for the period 1 April 1987 to 31 January 1988 are as set out:

Area Office	Area referred (in hectares)	Area cleared (in hectares)	Area not cleared (in hectares)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what environmental guidance he will be giving to the Forestry Commission concerning grant approval for new planting in the uplands and highlands of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 17 March at columns 670-71.

Training Programmes

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied with the adequacy of the training programmes available in Monklands, with particular reference to whether unemployed persons will be able to respond to new job opportunities, especially in respect of the Coatbridge project.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 March 1988]: Yes. The full range of Manpower Services Commission training and employment measures is available in the Monklands area and, together with other training initiatives supported by the Scottish Development Agency and the Monklands enterprise trust, should greatly enhance the job prospects of local unemployed people in the more buoyant labour market now prevailing.

Drink-Driving Accidents

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are, for each year since 1975, the figures for death caused by drink and driving accidents in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1988]: Information is not available for the years 1975-78. For the years for which it is available, the figures can be expressed only as a range because the information is incomplete. From 1979 to 1985, the latest year for which figures are available, the estimated numbers of death in accidents in which at least one driver was, or was reckoned to have been, over the legal limit are set out in the table:

	Deaths associated with drunk driving
	Minimum	Maximum	All road deaths aged 16 and over	All road deaths
1979	199	222	725	810
1980	195	218	635	700
1981	190	204	616	677
1982	165	178	635	701
1983	129	141	551	624
1984	126	139	519	599
1985	111	116	535	602

It is encouraging that the estimated numbers of such deaths have diminished over the period, both absolutely and as a proportion both of road deaths aged 16 and over and of all road deaths. I hope, however, that we shall all play our part in reducing the numbers much further.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Arms Finds

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what evidence he has of arms found in Ireland having come via Libya;

(2) what evidence he has of the countries of origin of the arms recently found in Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I understand that weapons and explosives recently recovered in Ireland were manufactured in a number of countries including the Soviet Union, Romania, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, the United States of America, Belgium, France, Great Britain, the Irish Republic, Norway and Portugal. There is evidence that some of the arms were shipped to Ireland from Libya and investigations are continuing.

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this not be done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Tom King: I do not believe that such a policy would be appropriate for the Northern Ireland Office or Northern Ireland departments, but respondents to consultative documents may of course make their views public, if they wish to do so.

RUC (Chief Constable)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 25 February at columns 335-36.

Terrorism

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the implications for security in Northern Ireland of the joint co-ordinated enactment by different countries of similar laws on terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I have received no such representations, but the Government are strongly committed to the development of international co-operation in the fight against terrorism and recognise the importance of such co-operation in defeating the terrorist in Northern Ireland.

Cross-border Security

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security arrangements.

Mr. Tom King: Both this Government and the Irish Government are committed to the development of security co-operation and are at one in their determination to root out terrorism and the evil that it brings.

Practical security co-operation is primarily a matter for the two police forces involved, the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Garda Siochana, supported as necessary by members of the armed forces. We shall continue to look for ways of developing further the co-operation that already exists.

Police Complaints Commission

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he had consultations with representatives of the Government of the Irish Republic before he announced the names of members of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The Irish Government put forward proposals on the composition of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland, in accordance with article 6 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Murder Convictions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners were convicted of murder as a scheduled offence in Northern Ireland aged (i) 16 years, (ii) 17 years, (iii) 18 years, (iv) 19 years, (v) 20 years and (vi) 21 years of age since 1971; to which community they belonged; and what has been their average sentence served.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 17 March 1988]: The information requested is set out in the table:

Prisoners (Sentences)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners sentenced to be held at the Secretary of State's pleasure (a) have been released and (b) have been released and were subsequently convicted of scheduled offences committed after their release, since 1970, showing, in each case, whether they were Republican or Loyalist prisoners and their average length of time served.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 17 March 1988]: The information is set out in the table. No prisoner released on licence from detention during the pleasure of the Secretary of State has been subsequently convicted of a scheduled offence.

Persons serving pleasure released on licence since 1970

Note: The classifications in the table are based on the believed paramilitary affiliation of the prisoners at the time of their arrest.
[1] Released on medical grounds.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many requests he has received since 22 February for the reconsidering of their sentences from (a) prisoners held in Northern Ireland at the Secretary of State's pleasure; and (b) other prisoners indicating (i) whether they were Loyalist or Republican prisoners, (ii) the age at which the offenders were committed, (iii) the nature of the offences for which they were sentenced and (iv) the number of cases he has re-examined.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 17 March 1988]: Since 22 February one Republican prisoner serving life for murder committed when he was 18 has petitioned asking for the date fixed for the review of his sentence by the life sentence review board to be brought forward. The request has been refused. There have been nine other cases during the period in which representations have been made on behalf of life or pleasure prisoners.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the names of the persons recommended to him by the Government of the Irish Republic under article 6 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, indicating how many so recommended were resident in (a) the Irish Republic, and (b) Northern Ireland; how many and whom he has appointed; and to which positions.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 10 March 1988]: I gave part of the information sought in my reply of 9 March to the hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. McCusker) at column 230.

The names of persons willing to serve on public bodies, including persons suggested through the Anglo-Irish Secretariat, are held in a central register. Persons are selected from this register because of their suitability for the proposed appointment and the contribution which they are likely to make to the work of the public body concerned. It is not my practice to publish details of individuals so appointed.

All the persons suggested through the Anglo-Irish Secretariat are resident in Northern Ireland. I do, of course, welcome recommendations from all organisations and individuals, including elected members, in Northern Ireland for people of ability who could serve on public bodies.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Nursing Care (Support)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total level of public financial support for (a) private residential and (b) private nursing care for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. Following is the available expenditure information derived from annual accounts and financial returns submitted to the Department by health authorities and local authorities in England, respectively.

In addition, people in homes may be able to get help with fees through supplementary benefit. Information on the amount of total expenditure on supplementary benefit payments to people in residential care and nursing homes was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 17 December 1987 at column 704.

	Health authorities[1] expenditure with contractual hospitals and homes £ million	Local authorities[2] expenditure on private residential care £ million

[1] Total hospital and community health services expenditure with contractual hospitals and homes (including contracts with voluntary organisations, etc.).
[2] Net expenditure on all private residential care incurred under personal social services programmes.

Trent Regional Health Authority (Administrators)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the wage and salary bill for the people employed by Trent regional health authority on administrative duties in each year since 1982.

Mr. Newton: Following is information for the total salaries and wages costs of all staff within the purview of the administrative and clerical Whitley Council (for example, chief ambulance officers, computer and finance staff, legal advisers, supplies managers, storekeeper clerks, and so on) derived specifically from the annual accounts of the Trent regional health authority.

All regional health authorities provide specialist support functions for their regions as a whole and the Trent regional health authority also directly manages certain ambulance and blood transfusion services which include elements of staff exemplified above. For more detailed information my hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the Trent regional health authority who may be able to assist.

1982-83	4,910
1983-84	7,141
1984-85	7,868
1985-86	7,598
1986-87	8,896

Notes:

1. The figures include the cost of employer's national insurance and superannuation contributions and the costs of non-National Health Service (agency, etc.) staff. The costs of general managers are also included from 1985-86.
2. The figures exclude all expenditure by district health authorities within the Trent region.

Eye Treatment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons are presently on waiting lists for eye treatment in (a) the Northern regional health authority and (b) Sunderland district health authority.

Mr. Newton: At 31 March 1987, the latest date for which information is available centrally, there were 3,735 cases on Northern region in-patient waiting list for the ophthalmology specialty. The corresponding figure for Sunderland district health authority was 918.

Fuel Costs

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has, in the light of the mild winter and savings in the cost of special cold weather payments, to reduce domestic fuel costs for those persons aged over 80 years on income support.

Mr. Scott: This winter exceptionally cold weather payments have been made available at 78 DHSS local offices in England, Scotland and Wales. Like all previous severe weather schemes, the current arrangements are intended to provide extra help with heating costs only during periods of exceptionally cold weather. The long-term cost of such schemes has always been estimated on this basis.

The levels of fuel prices are a matter for the fuel industries concerned. However, income support claimants will get a weekly benefit out of which to meet all their day-to-day expenses, including fuel costs. Premiums will be available to certain groups with particular needs. All pensioners will be entitled to a premium, but those aged 80 or over will receive a higher rate.

Dystonia

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what evidence he has on the extent to which dystonia is transmitted (a) by inheritance and (b) by other identifiable causes;

(2) what is the incidence of dystonia in the United Kingdom; and if he will list the hospitals which offer treatment for this disability;

(3) whether he will assist with funding for the Dystonia Society.

Mrs. Currie: Dystonia is the medical name given to prolonged spasms of muscle contraction affecting various parts of the body. Often it has no known cause. It can be a symptom of various underlying neurological disorders. We do not collect statistics on the incidence or causes of this condition and have no plans to do so. It is, however, known to be relatively uncommon. Appropriate treatment is available in many hospitals; where neurosurgical treatment is necessary, this is provided in specialist centres.

We are not currently assisting with the funding of the Dystonia Society, but the organisation could be among those considered for a grant next year under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968.

White Hart Training Centre, Harrogate

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many students have been taken through courses at the White Hart training centre in Harrogate; at what cost per student-course type; and if he has any comparable figures for private college training.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. However, information supplied by the NHS training authority based on figures available for the past two and a half years shows an annual average of 378 separate courses at the White Hart training centre consisting of 13,188 trainee days or 35 trainees per course. The average cost is £1,423 per course or £41 per trainee day. Private institutions used by the authority to provide similar management education and development courses to those provided at the training centre charge the authority around £200 per trainee day.

Children's Work

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information is available to his Department on (a) the number of children engaged in milk rounds, (b) the extent to which such work begins before 7 am and (c) the proportion of such children in possession of a permit along the lines recommended in departmental guidance in 1976;

(2) what information is available to his Department on (a) the number of children engaged in the regular delivery of newspapers or other similar material, (b) the extent to which such work begins before 7 am and (c) the proportion of such children in possession of a permit along the lines recommended in departmental guidance in 1976;

(3) what information is available to his Department on (a) the number of children engaged in commercial kitchens, (b) the extent to which such work ends after 7 pm and (c) the proportion of such children in possession of a permit along the lines recommended in departmental guidance in 1976;

(4) what information is available to his Department on (a) the number of children engaged in the picking or preparation of fruit or vegetables, (b) the extent to which such work exceeds 25 hours per week, and (c) the proportion of such children in possession of a work permit along the lines recommended in departmental guidance in 1976;

(5) what information is available to his Department on (a) the number of children engaged in outwork, and (b) the proportion of such children in possession of a permit along the lines recommended in departmental guidance in 1976;

(6) what information is available to his Department on (a) the number of children engaged in the retail sector, (b) the extent to which such work ends after 7 pm, (c) the extent to which the total hours worked per day exceeds that recommended in departmental guidance in 1976 and (d) the proportion of such children in possession of a permit along the lines in that guidance;

(7) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to provide for the right of entry of education welfare officers to premises where they have reason to believe that children are working illegally;

(8) if he has any plans to seek to amend section 18 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 with respect to

(a) the minimum permitted age of employment, (b) the earliest or latest hours of the day or (c) the total number of hours on school days or Sundays on which such employment is permitted.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information is not available on the number of children engaged in specific occupations, nor on the number who hold permits (usually known as employment cards). Nearly all local authority byelaws provide for the issue of permits as recommended in departmental guidance of 1976.

The Children and Young Persons Act 1933 prohibits the employment of children over 13 before 7 am or after 7 pm and for more than two hours on any school day or Sunday. The 1933 Act and the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920 restrict the occupations in which children may be engaged. The Department's guidance issued in 1976 recommends that further restrictions on hours and occupations be provided for in local authority byelaws made under the 1933 Act including, for example, the prohibition of work in commercial kitchens and the restriction of employment of children under 15 to no more than 25 hours during school holidays.

The overriding aim of the legislation and byelaws is that children may only be employed to the extent that their health, education and general welfare do not suffer. Local authorities have powers, exercised through the education welfare service, to enforce the byelaws; and under section 59 of the Education Act 1944 to prohibit and restrict the employment of any child.

Education welfare officers (EWOs) can warn and bring charges against employers if the Education Act and bye-laws are infringed; section 59 of the 1944 Act empowers local education authorities to require information from parents and employers. If an EWO suspects that a child is employed in premises to which the EWO has no right of entry, in an occupation which is prohibited under the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920, he can alert the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). The HSE has powers to take immediate action if a child is found to be working illegally in any industrial undertaking. EWOs also liaise where appropriate with social services departments which have statutory duties and powers to investigate circumstances in which children may be at risk.

We consider that the safeguards which exist in legislation and byelaws to protect children from exploitation at work are generally adequate; we have no plans to amend the legislation.

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for the funding of a new clinical grading structure for nursing staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The nurses' pay review body has been asked to recommend rates of pay for the new clinical grading structure as part of its recommendations on nurses' pay from 1 April 1988. The Government will await the report of this body before taking a decision on funding.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the number of carers of elderly, sick or disabled people currently in receipt of the invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: About 95,000 at 14 March 1988.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to increase the value of the invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: We are pledged to maintain the value of invalid care allowance in line with the movement of prices and, since coming to office in 1979, we have more than done so.

Oral Tobaccos

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether long cut oral tobacco is exempt from the proposed ban on certain oral tobaccos under section 11(5) of the Consumer Protection Act 1987;

(2) which British tobacco manufacturers will be affected by the proposed ban on certain oral tobaccos under section 11(5) of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Long cut oral tobaccos vary in composition. A particular brand would be exempt only if subject to duty under the Tobacco Products Duty Act 1979. The Department wrote to British tobacco manufacturers, amongst others, on 26 February to inform them of the Government's proposals to ban the supply of certain oral tobacco products and to seek their representations on the matter. We shall not be in a position to say precisely which companies would be affected until those representations have been received.

Dental Charges

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many free dental examinations were provided under the National Health Service in the most recent year for which figures are available; what percentage of these will, under the new arrangements for charging, continue to be free; and what estimate has been made of the likely percentage reduction in examinations among those who will now be required to pay.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986-87, the latest year for which figures are available, the number of free examinations provided under the general dental service in England was 29·043 million. If the examinations had been chargeable, we estimate that 47 per cent. would have been provided free of charge to exempt patients and to patients for whom the charge would have been remitted on grounds of low income. We see no reason to expect any reduction in the number of examinations provided as a result of the proposed charge.

Optical, Prescription and Dental Charges

Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the optical charges, prescription charges and dental charges operative from 1 April with the comparable figures in each case for May 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

OPTICAL CHARGES

There have been no charges under the general ophthalmic service since NHS spectacles were replaced by the optical voucher scheme from 1 July 1986. Details of increased voucher values with effect from 1 April 1988 were circulated in the Official Report, 29 February at column 661. Lens charges as at May 1979, in the general ophthalmic and hospital eye service, were as follows:

	£ per lens
Single vision lens	2·90
Bifocal lens	5·50
Lens of any other description	6·15

The only fixed charges in the hospital eye service at present are maximum charges for lenses, and a charge for contact lenses. The rates from 1 April 1988 are as follows:

	£ per pair
Maximum charge for single vision lenses	32·00
Maximum charge for other spectacle lenses	52·00

Social Security Regulations

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to amend social security regulations to prevent future abuse on the lines of that among shift workers at the Pirelli plant in Carlisle who were in receipt of full unemployment benefit while doing shift work at weekends.

Mr. Portillo: We are actively looking at how to amend the rules.

Mr. J. Ashley French (Pension)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why Mr. John Ashley French, of 6, Brecon Flats, Salisbury avenue, Westcliff on Sea, Essex, has not received his retirement pension in respect of his national insurance No. HA/31/96/36/D, despite having returned the appropriate forms to the Newcastle office in September 1987.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 25 February 1988]: Payment of retirement pension to Mr. French commenced on 7 March and arrears have been paid back to the date of his retirement on 10 January 1988. I regret that difficulties in determining Mr. French's correct entitlement led to delay in the award of retirement pension.

NHS (Growth)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) following the announcement of additional money to the National Health Service on 16 December 1987, what he now expects the real growth in National Health Service resources to be during the current year;

(2) if he will detail the calculations supporting his statement, Official Report, 16 December 1987, column 1102, that National Health Service expenditure will grow by 3 per cent. in 1988-89.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 11 January 1988]: Including the additional resources I announced on 16 December 1987, gross expenditure on the NHS in England in 1987-88 is now expected to be some 5·5 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1986-87. The figure, of course, also includes other substantial additional resources made available during the course of the year, including those to assist in meeting the costs of review body awards and of extra pressures arising from HIV infection and AIDS. For 1988-89, the planning total in the recent White Paper represents a further increase of over 1 per cent. in real terms, after allowing for forecast general inflation of 4·25 per cent. during the year.

Expenditure on the hospital and community health services, to which my statement on 16 December 1987 was directed, was at that time expected to rise in England (on the figures given in the Autumn Statement) from £11,382 million in 1987-88 to £12,091 million—an increase in real terms of 1·7 per cent., after allowing for general inflation. While the extra £75 million for 1987-88 announced on 16 December together with the funds provided to reflect a change in health authorities carry forward arrangements, has the effect of reducing this percentage increase to about 1 per cent., in either case, account must be taken of the benefit of cash-releasing cost improvements and income generation, expected to be equivalent to a further real terms increase in available resources approaching 1·5 per cent., and of other improvements in efficiency contributing to the effective availability of resources for patient care.

Abortion

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by regional health authority of the numbers and percentages of abortions performed by each commonly used technique on pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is shown in the table.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgages

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will clarify which mortgages held by unmarried home sharers will be affected by the new tax rules which he proposed in his Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The residence basis of mortgage interest relief announced in my right hon. Friend's Budget Statement will apply to all loans for house purchase made on or after 1 August. A loan will be treated as having been made before 1 August provided it was applied in pursuance of a binding contract to purchase the property made before that date and provided the offer of the loan was made by the lender before that date and was evidenced in writing by the lender before that date. Full details will be included in the Finance Bill.

Petrol Duty

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the duty on petrol will require to be harmonised by 1992.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 March 1988]: The Commission has proposed harmonisation of the excise duty on petrol by 1992. The proposal would cause difficulties for a number of member states, including the United Kingdom, and has important implications for a wide range of Community and national policies including transport, energy and environment. As decisions on the proposals require unanimity, the United Kingdom's position is fully safeguarded.

Arms Cargo (Prestwick)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information is available to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise regarding a cargo of arms which stopped over at Prestwick airport on a Great Southern Airways flight from France to the United States of America on 24 November 1987; whether all the necessary procedures for such a cargo were carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 17 March 1988]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the Great Southern Airways flight from France to the United States of America on 14 November 1987. (There was no such flight on 24 November).

The aircraft in question landed at Prestwick airport to refuel and stayed under Customs control while it was on the ground. The aircraft's cargo remained on board during the brief stopover and was therefore not subject to specific Customs formalities.

Newry Customs Post

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the closure of Newry Customs post on Saturday 5 March; what efforts were made to warn the public about its closure; and what disciplinary action is being taken against those who did not turn up for work.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 March 1988]: The Newry Customs post did not open for normal business on 5 March following a telephone threat on the previous evening. Customs agents were given prior warning and arrangements made to ensure that information on imports and exports was obtained. The question of disciplinary measures does not arise as this was a management decision.

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the normal Saturday opening hours of the Newry Customs post; how many people are normally employed at the post on a Saturday; whether they are scheduled in as part of their normal working week; and what is the total estimated cost of keeping the post open on a Saturday.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 March 1988]: The normal Saturday opening hours of Newry Customs station are 7.30 am to 9 pm. Staff on the station are on shift working five out of six days Monday to Saturday. Thirty-five officers are scheduled to attend at the station on Saturday as part of their normal working week. The estimated cost of keeping the station open on a Saturday is £3,000.

Customs and Excise (Cargoes)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will define what Her Majesty's Customs and Excise treat as a genuine trade need, in relation to an approval to extend the list of cargoes which can operate through a port.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 March 1988]: Customs' approval of wharves and transit sheds for the importation and exportation of goods is dependent on several factors, including the physical security of the port and transit sheds; the provision of adequate facilities for the safe handling and practical examination of goods; and firm evidence of a genuine trade need.

Evidence of a genuine trade need means that intending users should be able to demonstrate a firm commitment to use the facility, indicate the volume and nature of traffic envisaged and, in cases where facilities are available at other ports nearby, show why these cannot conveniently be used.

VAT

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) all the goods and services which are currently zero rated for value added tax purposes, and (b) all goods and services which have been granted temporary exemption from value added tax by the European Community.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 8 March 1988]: In respect of goods and services currently zero-rated for value added tax purposes, I refer the hon. Member to my answer to his question on 4 December 1987 at columns 721-24.

The sixth Council directive of 17 May 1977 allowed temporary exemption from value added tax to be afforded to certain goods and services, provided that such exemption existed in the member state concerned on 1 January 1978. These goods and services are listed in annex F of that directive.

Garnishee Orders and Bankruptcy

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state (a) the number of garnishee orders and (b) the number of bankruptcy proceedings instituted in (i) 1984, (ii) 1985, (iii) 1986 and (iv) 1987 by the Inland Revenue; how many proceedings for bankruptcy were instituted where the bankruptcy notice was below £900; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The number of bankruptcy notices (or, from 1987 onwards, statutory demands under the Insolvency Act 1986) issued by the Inland Revenue were:

	Number
1984	1,879
1985	1,832
1986	2,069
1987	2,956

The number of garnishee orders and the number of bankruptcy notices below £900 cannot be ascertained without disproportionate cost.

Income Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reduction in projected tax receipts for 1988-89 would result from reducing the income tax rate to 35 per cent. for those at present paying tax at a highest marginal rate of 40 per cent., assuming the 35 per cent. tax rate applied on all taxable income between £18,701 and £21,300.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Taxpayers whose marginal rate would be 40 per cent. under a 1987-88 tax regime indexed to 1988-89 by the statutory formula would gain around £30 million in a full year from the reduction of the 40 per cent. rate to 35 per cent. The cost assumes that the reduction does not apply to taxpayers with marginal rates above 40 per cent.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the net change in tax paid by an average taxpayer at present paying tax at a marginal rate of (a) 60 per cent., (b) 55 per cent., (c) 50 per cent., (d) 45 per cent., (e) 40 per cent. and (f) 27 per cent. of the introduction of tax rates of 25 per cent., 35 per cent. and 45 per cent. with the allowances for 1988-89 as set out in the Autumn Statement and with the 25 per cent. rate of tax applied on taxable income up to £18,700, the 35 per cent. rate applied on taxable income in the band of £18,701 to £21,300 and the 45 per. cent. rate on taxable income over £21,300;

(2) what would be the net change in tax paid by an average taxpayer at present paying tax at a marginal rate of (a) 60 per cent., (b) 55 per cent., (c) 50 per cent., (d) 45 per cent., (e) 40 per cent. and (f) 27 per cent. of the introduction of tax rates of 25 per cent. and 40 per cent. with the allowances as set out for 1988-89 in the Autumn Statement and with the 25 per cent. rate of tax applied on taxable income up to £18,700, the 40 per cent. rate on taxable income in excess of £18,701.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table shows the average gain to a taxpayer at the mid-point of each marginal rate band and at a taxable income of £50,000 from introducing a 25 per cent. basic rate and (a) a single higher rate of 40 per cent. and (b) two higher rates of 35 per. cent. and 45 per cent. It has been assumed that the first and second higher rate thresholds are £18,700 and £21,300 respectively and that personal allowances under indexation in 1988-89 are as given in table 4.1 of the Autumn Statement 1987. Gains are calculated by comparing tax liabilities under each regime (a) and (b) with those under the 1987-88 regime indexed to 1988-89 levels.

[3] Gain from 25 per cent. basic rate, 40 per cent. higher rate.
[4] Gain from 25 per cent. basic rate, 35 and 45 per cent. higher rates.

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) the basic rate of income tax, (b) each of the higher rates of income tax and (c) Government revenue from income tax (i) at the basic rate and (ii) at each of the higher rates, adjusted for inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information is in the tables. I regret that further information can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Estimates are based on liability to income tax and not on income tax receipts which cannot be broken down into the different rates of tax. Estimates for the years to 1985-86 are based on the survey of personal incomes for that year; estimates for later years are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey and are therefore provisional.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the application of the Daily Mail and General Trust to change its residence from the United Kingdom to Holland.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The application is at present the subject of judicial review proceedings in the High Court in which a reference has been made to the European Court of Justice under article 177 of the treaty of Rome. The oral hearing of the reference is due to be heard in Luxembourg on 22 March. In these circumstances I can make no further comment.

Couples (Tax Advantages)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a full list of the relative tax advantages enjoyed to date by (a) couples cohabiting outside marriage and (b) married partners.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 16 March 1988]: A list of the tax penalties on marriage and the measures proposed in the Budget to remove them is contained in an Inland Revenue press release "Removing Tax Penalties on Marriage" published on Budget day.

Taxation

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated yield from all sources of taxation including excise and other duties for 1988-89; what was the comparable yield for 1978-79 revalued at 1988-89 prices; and if he will publish a breakdown by categories of the real increase in taxes between 1978-79 and 1988-89 in the form of his answer of 1 May 1987, Official Report, column 295.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1988]: The estimated total yield from all sources of taxation including local authority rates and national insurance contributions is £173 billion in 1988-89; the yield in 1978-79 revalued at 1988-89 prices using the GDP deflator is £125 billion. Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 March 1988]: Tax revenues are not hypothecated to particular programmes. The following table shows defence expenditure per income taxpayer and per head of population.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Soviet Union is continuing to modernise its very substantial range of nuclear capable forces. New missiles are either being deployed or at an advanced stage of development. A new road-mobile ICBM, the SS-25, has been deployed and the world's first rail-mobile ICBM, the SS-X-24, will be deployed shortly. The Typhoon and Delta IV SSBNs, which have recently entered service, both carry new multiple warhead missiles. A number of other systems are also being introduced, including sea and air-launched cruise missiles, with the AS-15 air-launched cruise missile and SS-N-21 submarine-launched cruise missile already in service. The longer range SS-NX-24 is also at an advanced stage of development. Additionally, deployment of a new strategic aircraft, the Blackjack, which is also capable of carrying cruise missiles, could begin before the end of the decade. Finally, improved nuclear artillery is also being deployed in large numbers, while all short-range nuclear surface-to-surface missiles are being, or are about to be, replaced with, for example, FROG battalions being converted to the longer range SS-21.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Britain's independent nuclear forces continue to make a very significant contribution to NATO's ability to deter aggression; the value of this contribution is fully recognised by our allies who have welcomed the Government's determination to keep our forces fully effective and up to date.

Lance Missile

24. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to update the Lance missile.

43. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to update the Lance missile.

72. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of those companies on the register of defence contractors applied to join the register for the first time within the last year.

120. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of those companies on the register of defence contractors applied to join the register for the first time within the last year.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of contractors on the defence contractors' list in 1987 increased by about 7 per cent. over the previous year. I welcome this increase and hope to see a continuing growth.

32. Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many companies are now on the register of defence contractors, and what steps he is taking to increase this number.

62. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many companies are now on the register of defence contractors; and what steps he is taking to increase this number.

111. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many companies are now on the register of defence contractors; and what steps he is taking to increase this number and, in particular, to encourage this smaller business.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns).

Military Ambulances

28. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the timetable for tendering for the Ministry of Defence's next military ambulance order.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our next tendering exercise for ambulances will be for 41 crash rescue ambulances required for the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force. The requirement will be advertised in the contracts bulletin later this month with tenders due for issue in mid-May. A further requirement for two-stretcher ambulances to replace the current Bedford vehicle will form part of a larger van order which will be advertised in the contracts bulletin in April for tender issues in May or June 1988.

101. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart to discuss ratification of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend maintains regular contact with the United States Secretary for Defence, as with his counterparts in other NATO countries. He last met Mr. Carlucci before the INF treaty was signed, and it would therefore have been premature to discuss ratification of the treaty on that occasion.

Frigates

30. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many frigates over the age of 20 years he expects to be in service with the Royal Navy in 1990.

84. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many frigates over the age of 20 years he expects to be in service with the Royal Navy in 1990.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Of the frigates currently in the fleet, 16 would be over the age of 20 years on 1 January 1990. It is not possible to forecast exactly how many of the 16 will be in service in 1990, as plans for the withdrawal of ships from the active fleet are kept under review. However, on current plans four are due to be withdrawn before 1990.

41. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the up-to-date position with regard to frigate orders which his Department expects to place in 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 26 January 1988 at columns 181-82.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 5 November 1987 at column 888.

149. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if stealth technology will be included in the specification for the European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It would not be in the public interest to give details of the specification for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friends to my statement during the Navy debate on 3 March at column 1174. During the 1980s five major new classes of Soviet submarines have been introduced into service — the Typhoon and Delta IV nuclear-powered ballistic missile submarines, the Sierra and Akula nuclear-powered attack submarines, and the Oscar nuclear-powered cruise missile submarine. This new generation of submarines poses an increased threat to NATO in terms of offensive capability, difficulty of detection and survivability. In addition, older classes of boats continue to be modernised, and their capabilities significantly improved.

35. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the size of the Territorial Army; and what it was in 1979.

Trucks

38. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the delay in the announcement of the contract to construct 1,500 4-tonne trucks for the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are still considering the services' needs for further 4-tonne vehicles pending the entry into service of the new 4-tonne range in 1990. We have had a number of representations from interested parties expressing a hope for an order to be placed with All Wheel Drive Ltd. who took over the former Bedford factory late last year.

39. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what benefits have accrued as a result of the more commercial approach by his Department to defence procurement.

87. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what benefits have accrued as a result of the more commercial approach by his Department to defence procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The commercial approach, involving greater emphasis on competition, tauter contractual conditions and clearer incentives has already achieved substantial cost savings, some examples of which were included in the "Statement on Defence Estimates 1987" (CM101-1). The approach also provides the opportunity for the MOD to benefit from new technological developments and has helped exports by stimulating more efficient use of industrial resources, thereby making British industry more competitive.

66. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on changes in departmental procurement procedures since the appointment of Mr. Peter Levene as chief of defence procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government continue to pursue value for money in defence procurement through the use of competition wherever practicable. Vigorous efforts are being made to appoint prime contractors for each project, with clearly defined responsibilities under incentive contracts. Procedures have been revised to ensure that interim payments are made only against demonstrated achievement. Greater emphasis is now placed on the potential export sales of equipment developed for our armed forces and on civil applications of the technology, as well as the possibility of adopting existing commercial products and technologies. Procedures call also for a full examination of means of meeting our needs through collaboration with allies, whether by joint development, reciprocal purchases or other means.

Following the recent scrutiny report, "Learning From Experience", which made some recommendations on how to improve further the management of projects, the Department has in hand further improvements building on those already mentioned above.

97. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has considered any revisions to procurement contract arrangements following receipt of the report from Messrs. Jordan, Lee and Cawsey.

Mr. Sainsbury: The report "Learning From Experience" acknowledged the many improvements that have already been made in procurement procedures in recent years, particularly in contractual arrangements. The report's own recommendations are more concerned with technical and management issues. Most recommendations have been accepted and are being implemented.

141. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to ensure that the benefits of research into defence technology are transferred, where appropriate, to the civil sector.

Mr. Sainsbury: A wide range of measures has been taken to facilitate the exploitation of defence research for the benefit of the wider economy. These include the development of collaborative research initiatives with the civil sector on work of mutual interest, the establishment of Defence Technology Enterprises Ltd., and the recently launched civil industrial access scheme which is designed to give firms improved access to the facilities and expertise of the defence research establishments.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Fire Focus, designated to practise the reinforcement of the Falkland Islands, is still in progress, and it would be premature to comment on its outcome. The costs of the exercise (excluding those which would have been incurred had the exercise not been taking place) are estimated to be about £3 million, most of which is attributable to airlift costs.

Departmental Land

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the nature and purposes of his Department's land holdings; and how much of them he plans to sell over the next five years as surplus to requirements.

Mr. Freeman: The defence estate exists to meet the needs of the services and the Procurement Executive for operational bases, support facilities, accommodation and training areas. Regular reviews ensure that Ministry of Defence land holdings are used efficiently and are no larger than necessary. Our policy is not to acquire additional land without careful scrutiny and confirmation that the requirement cannot be met from within existing resources. During the next five years it is planned to dispose of some 7,000 acres although some acquisitions will also be required over the same period, particularly to meet our shortage of training land.

Mr. Sainsbury: In financial year 1986-87, the latest period for which figures are available, the total value of work placed in a competitive environment was the highest ever at £4·9 billion. We continue to seek competition wherever reasonable and practicable to achieve the best value for money in defence procurement. Where competition is not possible, we seek to maximise value for money through the use of taut terms and conditions and incentive arrangements.

Firefighting (Military Establishments)

78. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to improve or increase the firefighting resources at military establishments.

Mr. Freeman: The criteria, on the basis of which the fire defence resources at military sites are established, are at present under review. 85. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops are currently serving in Northern Ireland.

to estimate accurately the balance of conventional forces (a) in Europe and (b) worldwide between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact countries.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My Department continually updates its estimates of conventional forces in Europe and unclassified figures indicating the broad numerical balance are published annually in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates."

My Department, in consultation with our NATO allies, also looks at the broad balance of NATO and Warsaw pact forces worldwide.

MBFR Talks

118. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna; and what is the current imbalance between the Warsaw pact countries and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation forces in tanks and armoured vehicles in the European theatre.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Progress in the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna has been disappointing, due to the East's refusal to provide the necessary information concerning force levels and the lack of a positive response to Western proposals tabled in December 1985.

Figures indicating the broad numerical balance between NATO and Warsaw pact forces from the Atlantic to the Urals (including the number of tanks) are contained in the annual "Statement on the Defence Estimates." Last year's figures reflected an overwhelming Warsaw pact superiority in armoured forces, including a 3:1 tank superiority.

Nuclear Weapons

125. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the European countries which either possess their own nuclear weapons or allow other countries to site nuclear weapons on their soil or territorial waters.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Soviet Union aside, the United Kingdom and France are the only European nations to possess their own nuclear forces. It is not our practice to comment on the location of nuclear weapons.

Anglo-French Defence Cooperation

147. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of Anglo-French defence co-operation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We enjoy a close relationship with France in the defence field and over the coming months will be discussing bilaterally the scope for greater military co-operation with the aim of strengthening the European pillar of NATO.

Soldiers (Hunting)

148. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours per annum soldiers of all ranks spend in hunting.

Mr. Freeman: Hunting during duty hours may be undertaken only in mounted units at the commanding officer's discretion as part of training in equestrian skills. It is not recorded as a separate activity from the other varied duties of officers and soldiers.

Nuclear Weapons (Montebello Agreement)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the precise classes of nuclear weapons covered by the Montebello agreement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 26 February 1988 at column 378, and to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) on 21 March at columns 7-8.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of fares and hospitality in arranging for journalists to visit his Department's facilities in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The cost of arranging for journalists to visit MOD facilities during 1987-88 is expected to be in the region of £28,000.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department of the visit by reporter Ian Bevitt and photographer Rod Sibbald, including fares and hospitality, to Belize; how many briefings were given to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Travel costs of about £175 were met by my Department and the journalists concerned were hosted at the expense of the unit they visited in Belize, which recruits from the readership area of their newspaper. They received briefing at HQ British forces and at three Army and RAF units in Belize.

Carrasco International Airport (Emergency Landing)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Members for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) and Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 15 March, Official Report, column 526, what was the direction of the flight path of the Hercules aircraft which took off from Carrasco airport on 10 March immediately after its take off; and what was the outcome of contact between it and aircraft of the Argentine air force.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Hercules C-130 which made an emergency diversion to Carrasco in Uruguay on 9 March, proceeded directly on leaving Carrasco, to Ascension Island. At no time did the aircraft come into contact with aircraft of the Argentine Air Force.

RAF Lossiemouth

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the results of the review of the use of RAF Lossiemouth as a master diversion airfield.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We expect consideration of the review to be completed and an announcement made very shortly.

Nimrod (Offset Benefits)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what offset benefits have been realised by British industry as a result of the cancellation of the Nimrod programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: As previously stated in reply to the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) on 1 December 1987 at column 568, the Boeing company has submitted its first six-monthly report under the AWACS offset programme. Evaluation of the report, which claims credit for a wide range of contracts placed with United Kingdom companies since November 1986, is still under consideration. It is not therefore possible to state how much credit will be granted on the first report and hence the benefit realised to British industry.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the criteria employed by his Department for setting the approved standards contractors are required to meet when they tender for Ministry of Defence contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: Given that there is a need for a company's product or service, it would be included on the defence contractors list after a satisfactory assessment of quality assurance and financial viability. Any tenders received are judged on the basis of overall value for money.

Drugs (Forensic Analysis)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average length of time for forensic analysis of drugs when a defendant on a drugs charge has been remanded in custody:

(2) what is the longest time period on record for which a defendant has been kept on remand awaiting forensic analysis of drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available in the form requested. The Home Office forensic science service and the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory do, however, give the highest priority to the analysis of drug samples where a defendant is remanded in custody because of drug-related offences. Information is usually available to assist the investigation within two to three days and frequently within a very much shorter time.

Missile Attack (Warning)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the procedures to warn the civilian population of the United Kingdom of an impending missile attack would be initiated if a ballistic missile attack against the United States of America or any other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation members was detected.

Mr. John Patten: The procedure would be initiated if the United Kingdom population was thought to be at risk.

Wrongful Convictions (Petitions)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many petitions he received alleging wrongful conviction in the years 1986 and 1987; how many of these were sent (a) by prisoners and (b) on behalf of prisoners; and how many related to (i) summary trials and (ii) trials on indictment.

Mr. John Patten: The number of representations received alleging wrongful conviction was 785 in the year ended 30 September 1986 and 722 in the year ended 30 September 1987. Fuller details are not readily available, but I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Body Armour

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to prohibit sales of body armour or flak jackets which might be used by a person resisting arrest or committing an offence; and whether he has received any representations to this effect.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are considering representations from the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Radio Stations

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is his intention that licences for national commercial radio stations, once acquired, will be freely transferable.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a similar question from him on 27 January at columns 251-52.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is his intention to auction licences for national commercial radio stations by means of (a) a lump sum, (b) a percentage of future pretax profits, (c) a percentage of future revenue or (d) a combination of the above.

Mr. Renton: We envisage that the radio authority will invite tenders in the form of a single cash figure, though it may be payable in instalments over the period of the licence.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether radio stations granted licences by the new radio authority will be able to promote (a) lotteries, (b) bingo and (c) other gaming activities during their programmes.

Mr. Renton: We envisage no need for restrictions in broadcasting legislation additional to those in current gaming legislation.

Rates Default

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many arrest warrants were issued for rates default in 1987 in (a) England and Wales and (b) Stoke on Trent;

(2) how many people imprisoned for rates default in 1987 in (a) England and Wales and (b) Stoke on Trent were in receipt of social security benefits immediately prior to imprisonment;

(3) how many people were imprisoned for rates default (a) in England and Wales and (b) in Stoke on Trent in 1987.

Mr. John Patten: According to the latest information held centrally, which is approximate, about 370 persons were received into prison department establishments in England and Wales from all courts in 1986 for non-payment of rates. Of these, six were known to have been sentenced by courts in Stoke on Trent. Information on the receipt of social security benefits immediately prior to imprisonment and on arrest warrants issued for rate default is not available centrally.

Foreign Visitors

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of visitors from each country in the Indian sub-continent in each of the last three years broken down by length of permitted visitors.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 17 March 1988]: The information available is given in the table.

[1] Individual figures may not add to totals due to rounding.
[2] Initial period of leave granted by the immigration officer at the port of entry and therefore before taking account of any subsequent extension of stay.
[3] Almost all admissions relate to a period of leave of exactly six months.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners who were convicted for offences in courts in Northern Ireland have subsequently been transferred to prisons in England and Wales during 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Stanley: I have been asked to reply.

No such permanent transfers were made in 1986 or 1987.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

New Companies (Scotland)

49. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many new companies were established in Scotland during 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: 5,926 new companies were registered in Scotland during 1987.

Economic League (Accounts)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the Registrar of Companies to have secured the accounts of the Economic League for the year ended 31 December 1986; and if he will now consider prosecution.

Mr. Maude: The Registrar of Companies expects to receive the outstanding accounts without further delay. If, however, they are not received within the next few days, the Registrar will follow his normal practice and write individually to the directors of the company, reminding them of their obligations under the Companies Act 1985. He will also point out that they would render themselves liable to prosecution if acceptable accounts continue not be be delivered.

EC Internal Market

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what will be the total cost of the Government's publicity campaign on the EEC internal market; and, in particular, what is the cost of the 19 breakfasts in cities around the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 21 March 1988]: We are planning a sustained five-year campaign. The initial phase of the campaign will cost about £5 million. The campaign will also include 20 regional conferences, each for up to 250 to 300 business people, at a cost of around £300,000. The cost of breakfast provided before each conference will be about £5 per head.

PRIME MINISTER

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will cause an inquiry to be held into the handling of correspondence by the office of the Secretary of State for Social Services in view of its loss of correspondence from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, forwarded by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in October 1987, and its failure to notify the Department of Employment that on 21 January it was forwarding to it correspondence from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton.

The Prime Minister: I understand that extensive inquiries have already been carried out by the Department of Health and Social Security and I see no need for a further inquiry. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has already undertaken (on 14 March at column 470 and on 17 March at column 664) to look into the matter raised in the October 1987 letter on receipt of a copy of the correspondence. A further copy of the 21 January 1988 letter and the relevant correspondence is being sent to the Department of Employment.

Housing Standards and Health

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Secretary of State for Social Services and the Secretary of State for the Environment in relation to Government policy towards the correlation between housing standards and health.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friends consult and co-operate as necessary on matters of concern to their Departments.

ENVIRONMENT

Asbestos (Lanfranc Estate, Bow)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide additional funds for the London borough of Tower Hamlets to permit the removal of asbestos on the Lanfranc estate in Bow, London.

Mrs. Roe: The council has been allocated over £15 million of capital resources for 1988-89 and is free to supplement this with part of its capital receipts. It is for the council to decide on priorities for repairs and improvement within its housing stock.

Charles Buxton Memorial, Victoria Gardens

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department plans to instruct the Property Services Agency to repair the fountain of the Charles Buxton memorial in the Victoria gardens.

Mr. Chope: The water supply to the drinking fountain in the memorial to Sir Thomas Powell Buxton has been turned off since 1980 because the design of the memorial makes it expensive and difficult to maintain the necessary standard of hygiene in the water supply to satisfy standards of public health.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) of 10 February, Official Report, column 289, his Department has received any request from the European Parliament special committee of inquiry on nuclear waste and transport in the EEC to present written or oral evidence on matters concerning the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases of long-term damage to sites of special scientific interest were reported over the past three-years; and how many of them were due to works initiated or approved by a public department.

Mr. Moynihan: Details of damage to SSSIs, have, since 1983-84, been published in the Nature Conservancy Council's annual report. However, the information is not available in the precise form requested. It is currently being compiled by the NCC, and I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Housing Stock (Repairs)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence his Department has as to the effect of Government cutbacks on local authority finance on the ability of councils to carry out essential repairs to their housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities' expenditure on the renovation of their housing stock, which includes all major repairs, has increased every year since 1981-82. We have provided for a further increase in 1988-89 of more than 11 per cent. over the estimated outturn for the current year.

Property Services Agency

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to widen the range of outside advice available to the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: Under present arrangements my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I are advised by the chief executive of the Property Services Agency who chairs the PSA board comprising his senior colleagues and three non-executive members drawn from the private sector. We have now appointed to the PSA board Mr. Jack Rodin, a senior partner and chief executive in Building Design Partnership. The appointment will run for a period of three years from March 1988. Mr. Rodin is a chartered engineer and fellow of the Institution of Civil Engineers. His appointment will add to the valuable input provided by Mr. Brian Hill (Higgs and Hill Building Ltd), Mr. Leslie Cousins (Price Waterhouse) and Mr. John Brown (Peachy Property Corporation plc) in the fields of building, finance and estates respectively. In line with the other non-executive members Mr. Rodin will be paid £4,000 per annum during the tenure of his appointment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Standing Committees (Membership)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list in the Official Report the names of all right hon. and hon. Members, other than those who were at the time members of Her Majesty's Government, who in the 1983 to 1987 Parliament (a) were not appointed to serve on any Standing Committees and (b) were so appointed but did not attend any meetings thereof.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested can be derived from the Standing Committee Return, published each Session, which lists the names of all Members appointed to serve on Standing Committees during the 1983 to 1987 Parliament, and includes the number of sittings they attended. The information could be provided in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Shareholders (Scotland)

51. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what figures he has on the numbers of shareholders in Scotland in (a) January of the current year and (b) May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Treasury-Stock Exchange survey carried out by NOP Market Research Ltd. between 20 January and 15 February 1988 found that approximately ¼ million individuals in Scotland were shareholders. The Target Group index survey, carried out by the British Market Research Bureau between April 1978 and March 1979 found that approximately ¼ million individuals in Scotland were shareholders. Both sets of figures are produced by statistical surveys of Great Britain as a whole — the figures are therefore subject to sampling error, which may be substantial for component categories.

£1 Coin

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there will be a new design for the £1 coin.

Mr. Lawson: Yes. Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to approve my recommendation for a new design for the £1 coin. The obverse will continue to show the Raphael Maklouf portrait of Her Majesty. The new reverse design will feature a shield of the royal arms ensigned by a representation of the royal crown. Coins bearing the new design will be available for general circulation on 21 April 1988.

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this not be done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Brooke: Each case is considered on its merits.

War Stock

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now consider the repayment of 3½ per cent. war stock.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has no plans to redeem 3½ per cent. war loan.

Zeebrugge Disaster Fund

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, to assist the work of the Zeebrugge disaster fund, the Government will donate to the fund sums equal to those levied on it in taxation.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The Government have donated £1 million to the Zeebrugge disaster fund.

Africa (Financial Flows)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the report and recommendations of the United Nations Secretary General's advisory group on financial flows for Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 March 1988]: Her Majesty's Government welcome this report which is a useful analysis of the African debt problem. We were among the first to draw attention to the emerging problem and our aid programme is substantially directed towards Africa. Last year my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer put forward a three-point debt relief plan for low-income debt-distressed countries which has been well received. Last December the United Kingdom doubled its planned contribution to the newly established IMF enhanced structural adjustment facility which will provide extra finance and support structural adjustment programmes in low-income countries. We have also committed £250 million to the World Bank's special programme of assistance 1988-90 for sub-Saharan Africa. Over the next few months we will be studying the report further and discussing it with our partners.

Excise Duty

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in the Official Report those commodities subject to proposals for harmonisation of excise duty set out in the draft regulations of the Commission of the European Economic Community and tabulated in the eighth report of the Select Committee on European Legislation, HC 43 viii, stating for each category of goods (a) the basis of excise duty levied in the financial year 1987-88 and that proposed by the Commission, (b) the approximate respective revenue for each assessment that has accrued or would accrue to Her Majesty's Government, in 1987-88 prices, (c) the percentage increase or decrease in excise duty levied and (d) the approximate increase or decrease in retail sale price, together with indications of where the proposed increases in the rate of value added tax would further increase or decrease final price to the purchaser, adding totals for each broad category of commodity and totals of cumulative increase or decrease, together with net grand change in expected revenue.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 March 1988]: The information requested is given in the tables.

Tables (a) and (c):

The European Commission's proposals for harmonisation of rates of excise duty would require changes to the 1987-88 United Kingdom duty rates[1] as follows:—

Product	Commission proposal	1987-88 United Kingdom duty rate	Approximate per cent. rate changes
Alcoholic drinks
Spirits	12·71 ECU (£8·54) per litre of alcohol	£15·77 per litre of alcohol	−46
Beer[1]	1·36 ECU (0·91) per hectolitre/degree Plato of finished product at 15°c (£8·77 for average beer)	£25·80 per hectolitre plus 86p for every degree of original gravity over 1030 (£31·82 for average beer)	−72
Table wine	17 ECU (£11·43) per hectolitre	£98·00 per hectolitre	−88
Fortified wine
(15-18%)	85 ECU (£57·13) per hectolitre	£169·00 per hectolitre	−66
(18-22%)	85 ECU (£57·13)	£194·90 per hectolitre	−71
Tobacco products

Product	Commission proposal	1987-88 United Kingdom duty rate	Approximate per cent. rate changes
Cigarettes	19·5 ECU (£13·11) per 1,000 plus 52·54 per cent. of retail selling price	£30·61 per 1,000, 21 per cent. of retail selling price	−11
Pipe tobacco[1]	Excise duty + VAT to comprise 54·56 per cent. of retail selling price	£24·95 per kilogram	−17
Cigars[1]	Excise duty + VAT to comprise 54·56 per cent. of retail selling price	£24·95 per kilogram	−49

Road fuel
Leaded petrol	34 ECU (£22·85) per hectolitre	£19·38 per hectolitre	+18
Unleaded petrol	31 ECU (£20·84) per hectolitre	£18·42 per hectolitre	+13
Derv	17·7 ECU (£11·90) per hectolitre	£16·39 per hectolitre	−27
Minor oil products
Gas oil	5 ECU (£3·36) per hectolitre	£1·10 per hectolitre	+205
Fuel oil	1·7 ECu (£1·14) per hectolitre	£0·77 per hectolitre	+46

(1 ECU = £0·672099 at 14 March 1988).

[1] It will be noted that in some cases the proposals would modify the basis upon which the duty is calculated, as well as the duty rates.

TABLE (B)

Based on the main duty rates given above the approximate respective revenue for each assessment at 1987-88 prices is as follows:

£ million 1987-88 prices

Product	Commission proposal	1987-88 United Kingdom duty rates estimated net yield
Alcoholic drinks	2,000	4,400
Tobacco products	4,350	4,800
Hydrocarbon oils	8,450	7,800

Because of the very large changes in duty levels involved, estimates of the revenue effects are subject to wide margins of error.

TABLE (D)

The duty rate changes implied by the approximation proposals would have the following effects on retail sale prices:

Approximate price changes (including consequential VAT at 15 per cent.)

Product	£ p
Alcoholic drinks
Spirits (per 70cl bottle)	−2·50
Beer (per pint)	−0·16

Gas oil (per gallon)	+0·10
Fuel oil (per gallon)	+0·2

Cruises (VAT)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he will implement value added tax on United Kingdom registered passenger cruise liner operations when their passage is partially, or wholly, outside EEC territorial waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 March 1988]: It is necessary to distinguish between supplies by the cruise lines themselves and supplies by tour operators of places on cruise ships. The former are only liable to United Kingdom VAT to the extent that the cruise is in United Kingdom waters. As regards supplies by tour operators, tour operators based in the United Kingdom are liable to United Kingdom VAT on their gross margin attributable to the part of the cruise undertaken in the territorial waters of EC member states, including the United Kingdom. The apportionment of the margin between EC and non-EC elements will have to be done on the basis of the number of days per cruise spent in EC waters or travelling between EC ports. Similar apportionments will have to be done for coach tours taking in both EC and non-EC countries.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which EEC nations have implemented value added tax charges on passenger cruise line operations; and what information he has as to the reasons for delay by certain countries in implementing such charges.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 March 1988]: There is no detailed information readily available on the practices of other member states in this respect, but there is no special VAT relief for passenger cruises under the EC sixth VAT directive. As regards tour operators, only Ireland and Denmark have not imposed tax on tours operators' margins. I understand that they claim not to do so under a transitional derogation in article 28 of that directive.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Welfare Officers

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what concern has been expressed by local authorities about the number of education welfare officers; and if he has any plans to seek to increase their number, to alter their role or to seek to improve their performance.

Mr. Dunn: Education welfare officers are employed by local education authorities, and it is for them to determine the number needed in their area in the light of local circumstances. Our recommendations on the role and working methods of education welfare officers were set out in DES circular 2/86 "School Attendance and Education Welfare Services". We are considering issuing a further circular on good practice later this year.

CERN (Subscriptions)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to seek to pay United Kingdom subscriptions into CERN on a basis of a basket of currencies rather than on the basis of the Swiss franc.

Mr. Jackson: The method of calculating the contribution of CERN member states is currently being examined by a working group set up by the CERN finance committee. The United Kingdom is actively participating in the work of this group.

Peripatetic and Advisory Teachers

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to seek to amend section 27(1) of the Education Act 1980 to cover peripatetic and advisory teachers both at school and when undertaking pre-school teaching; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Both peripatetic and advisory teachers already come within the scope of section 27(1) of the 1980 Act in so far as they are teachers at schools. Teaching of children of pre-school age is similarly covered in so far as it takes place at a school. We have no plans to extend the scope of the section to further categories of staff.

Free School Meals

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children currently receive free school meals in (a) the Inner London education authority area and (b) the London borough of Lewisham.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, 90,237 pupils in ILEA received a free school meal. I regret that information in respect of Lewisham is not separately available.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what figures he has to show the number and percentage of people employed in each official category of employment in Mid-Glamorgan and the Rhymney Valley, respectively, at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: The available information is as follows:

Gwynedd (EC Grants)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amount of identifiable grants and loans received in Gwynedd by the European Economic Community for each of the years of United Kingdom membership.

Mr. Peter Walker: Total identifiable European Community grants and loans to Gwynedd are as follows:

TRANSPORT

A2 (Traffic Levels)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, further to his reply of 16 March, he will list by year the predicted average and peak traffic numbers by total and broken down by freight and passenger cars for the A2 between the Lydden to Whitfield road (A256) and Whitfield to Deal road (A258) for each year from 1979 until 2005; and what are the methodology and assumptions used in calculating the net present values shown in his reply.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The actual and predicted annual average daily traffic flows available are as follows:

	1984	1986	Per cent. HGV	1987	Per cent. HGV	1993	Per cent. HGV	2008	Per cent. HGV
Lydden-Whitfield road (A256)	14,000	15,000	13	16,000	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
Whitfield-Deal road (A258)	13,000	14,000	28	17,000	23	7,000	7	9,000	9
						8,000	8	12,000	8
Deal road-Dover Eastern docks	15,000	16,000	25	17,000	21	12,000	6	14,000	7
						14,000	6	19,000	6

The net present values were assessed using the Department's standard cost-benefit analysis. It was assumed that dualling would be undertaken at the same time as major maintenance, that the programmed M20/A20 improvement schemes would be completed, and that the accident rate on the A2 would improve as a result of street lighting installation.

Cyclists (Helmets)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce legislation to make the wearing of helmets for cyclists compulsory.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans to make the wearing of pedal cycle safety helmets compulsory. It is sensible for cyclists to wear helmets. Almost half of cycle casualties suffered some sort of head injury. Three quarters of all cycle deaths involve head injuries.

Cherished Registration Numbers

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether those persons whose vehicles have been allocated cherished registration numbers as a result of criminal action will be permitted to retain them.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Cherished registration numbers found by the Department to have been obtained through criminal action are normally withdrawn from circulation. Requests to reinstate such numbers are granted where the Department is satisfied that the keeper of the vehicle bearing a particular number acquired that number in good faith and that there is no risk of other claims to it arising.

Speed Limits

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received about the 30 mph speed limit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the 70 mph speed limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Speed limits are the subject of much correspondence, reflecting a wide range of views. We believe that the 30 mph national speed limit in built-up areas and the 70 mph national speed limit on motorways and dual carriageways—unless signs show otherwise—strike the right balance between mobility and safety. Departmental circulars set out the general criteria for assessment of the most appropriate speed limit under different circumstances.

Vehicle Registration Numbers

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicle registration numbers have been wrongly allocated by the driver and vehicle licensing centre as a result of criminal action.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About 1,200 registration numbers have been withdrawn in the last six years because of doubts over their validity arising from criminal trials. The majority have been reinstated after the completion of the relevant court cases and detailed investigation by the Department, either because criminal action had not been proved, or because the numbers were in the possession of innocent parties and there was no risk of duplication. Exact figures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled Travellers (London)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is being taken to provide a co-ordinated transport system for disabled travellers in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Considerable co-ordination between British Rail and London Regional Transport—the main transport providers in the capital—has already been achieved, with benefits to all public transport users. Of special interest to disabled travellers is the introduction this weekof LRT's "Carelink" bus, serving all London's main line railway stations with an hourly service connecting with the wheelchair-accessible "Airbus" for Heathrow. This now completes the link between BR's already accessible InterCity routes and the capital's major airport. Dial-a-Ride users in London can also be linked up with these services. In addition, there is a steadily growing pool of wheelchair — accessible taxis available in London, the majority of which are on radio circuits and able to provide a door-to-door service or connect with other accessible forms of transport.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the negotiations held on 17-18 March between the British and United States Government about United States carrier access to Manchester international airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regrettably, agreement was not reached with the United States Government at the discussions held on 17-18 March that would permit the immediate commencement of additional services to Manchester by United States carriers.

Both sides agreed to pursue matters emerging from the discussions that might lead to early progress being made. At the very latest, a second round of talks will be held after the volume of air traffic during the summer season is known.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints he has received since 1 April 1987 about the reduced level of service on the Woolwich ferry caused by the industrial dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has received 10 letters and some 10 telephone calls.

We are concerned about both the poor level of service and the disproportionate cost to the taxpayer. I am meeting the leader of Greenwich borough council in the next few days to assess the likelihood of a successful outcome to the negotiations with its workforce to end the work-to-rule and start a cost-effective and efficient service.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bophuthatswana

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being given by Her Majesty's Government to the Tumelong project in Bophuthatswana.

Mr. Eggar: A cooking stove and school equipment to the value of £771·60 have been donated for the use of a creche run under the auspices of the Tumelong mission, a non-government institution.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communication he has had with the authorities in Gibraltar following his statement to the House on 7 March about the killing of three unarmed United Kingdom citizens by members of Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Mellor: Such communications are confidential.

Third World Debt

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the other EEC Foreign Ministers to discuss Third world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 3 February 1988, at column 639.

NATO Summit (Brussels)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the NATO summit meeting he attended in Brussels in March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: A number of individuals and groups have written about the NATO summit. The vast majority of these have rightly welcomed what was a most successful reaffirmation of NATO's principles and objectives.

Mr. Ghulam Farid

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why, in the case of Mr. Ghulam Farid, he is not able to offer an interview for an entry clearance application until spring 1989; and if he will give the reason for this delay.

Mr. Eggar: Priority is given to first-time applicants. Mr. Farid has previously been refused entry clearance on the grounds that the entry clearance officer was not satisfied that he was related to his sponsor in the United Kingdom, as claimed. His subsequent appeal was dismissed by an independent adjudicator. In fairness to the many other applicants awaiting first interview, Mr. Farid must continue to wait his turn in the re-applicants queue.

USSR-UK (Educational Exchanges)

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to promote exchanges and educational visits by young people from the Soviet Union and Britain.

Mr. Mellor: Such exchanges are explicitly provided for in the memorandum of understanding signed during my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union last year. We are actively supporting them through assistance to organisations such as the British Council and the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges.

Antarctic Minerals Convention

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the current draft negotiating text of the Antarctic minerals convention.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. I am placing copies in the Library today.

Sharpeville Six

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to inform the House of Commons when he receives a response from the South African Government to Her Majesty's Government's representations on behalf of the Sharpeville Six.

Mrs. Chalker: On 17 March the South African Supreme Court ordered a stay of execution until 18 April on the Sharpeville Six. We await the outcome of the court proceedings.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 22 March.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend attended the Foreign Affairs Council and a subsequent meeting of European Community Foreign Ministers in Brussels on 22 March. Most of the meeting was devoted to political co-operation issues. In particular, there was a full discussion of the current Vienna negotiations of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE). There was agreement on the importance of securing a balanced outcome to the Vienna meeting, ensuring progress in all aspects of the CSCE process. The NATO summit having established a sound framework for negotiation on conventional arms control, discussions concentrated on the issue of human rights, and it was agreed to instruct our delegations in Vienna to maintain firm pressure for substantial improvement in the performance of the Soviet Union and the countries of eastern Europe in this field. We shall be seeking significant new commitments, together with machinery to ensure the implementation of both new and old undertakings in the sphere of human rights. My right hon. and learned Friend emphasised that, for us, this was an indispensable part of the CSCE process.

A number of other current international issues, including South Africa, were also discussed.

The Council reviewed follow-up to the European Council in Brussels last month and considered the development of the Community's relations with Israel and Hungary.

Torture

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government will be in a position to ratify the United Nations convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Mr. Eggar: Further to my reply of 7 March at column 8, we intend to introduce amendments to the Criminal Justice Bill which will enable us to ratify the United Nations convention against torture later this year.

ENERGY

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy who will be liable to bear the cost of compensation in the event of an accident involving a nuclear power station after the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Existing arrangements under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 will continue after privatisation.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 20, if he will list by Civil Service grade the number of officials in his Department located outside London; and what proportion they represent of all officials employed by his Department in each grade.

Mr. Parkinson: The table gives the information:

DEFENCE

US Pilots

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from local authorities and others in the county of Suffolk about the impact on United States air crews stationed in the United Kingdom and on the Anglo-American liaison committees in Mildenhall and Lakenheath of allegations that United States pilots in charge of FIII strike aircraft fly them under the influence of heroin, alcohol and sexual delusions.

Mr. Freeman: I have so far received two letters from hon. Members about the image of the USAF portrayed in the play "Airbase" recently screened by the BBC and an associated article in the Radio Times. In addition I am informed that representations have been made direct to the BBC by local authorities, who have expressed their strong support for the role of the USAF in this country. I should add that the Government retain the highest confidence in the professional standards of the US forces stationed here.

Early Warning System

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the present field of view, in all dimensions, of the Fylingdales ballistic missile early warning system station; and if there is any other early warning system that would detect a ballistic missile attack on the United Kingdom which did not pass through the field of view of the Fylingdales station;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government or Her Majesty's forces have access to information gathered at BMEWS sites in Greenland and Alaska.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 24 March 1987 at column 136. I am not prepared to reveal the detailed operational characteristics of the Fylingdales system.

Vanguard Submarines and Trident Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance or position locating systems are to be used by the Vanguard class submarines or their Trident missiles.

Mr. Sainsbury: Vanguard class SSBNs will be equipped with an electrostatically supported gyro navigator (ESGN), a gravity sensing system (GSS) and a range of radio and sonar navigational aids. The Trident D5 missile has a stellar aided inertial reference navigational system.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to recall a number of those units of the British Army currently serving in Northern Ireland to a mainland location from where they could readily reinforce the troops remaining in Northern Ireland in the event of an emergency.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. Force levels in Northern Ireland are kept constantly under review, and no reductions are currently planned.

Private Ian Richard Thain

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what terms Private Ian Richard Thain was retained by the Army during his imprisonment, detailing his status and arrangements made regarding his wages.

Mr. Freeman: While in prison Private Thain continued to be a serving soldier, but was not paid his military salary. Nor did his period of imprisonment count as reckonable service towards his term of engagement or his pension.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the solicitor acting on Private Thain's parole was (a) contracted, (b) paid or (c) advised by his Department.

Mr. Freeman: No public money was used to meet the cost of Private Thain's solicitor. It is normal practice to give such assistance as necessary to service men in custody; they are entitled to seek legal advice, and their advisors are given such assistance by the services as is deemed necessary. In Private Thain's case, his solicitors were provided with factual and background information concerning his service in the Army.

SCOTLAND

Electricity Privatisation

3. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on his proposals for the privatisation of the electricity generating and supply industry in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Ten representations have been received since my right hon. and learned Friend's statement to the House on 2 March. These will be taken into account in formulating our detailed plans.

19. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on his plans to safeguard the economic well-being of remoter mainland and island communities under his electricity privatisation proposals.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I have given today to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce).

Forestry

16. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about the increasing afforestation of the border hills.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble Friend the Minister of State has received representations from the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel). In addition, a number of representations have been made to Scottish Office Ministers about individual planting applications.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with the Forestry Commission concerning the new forestry grant arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Advice given to Ministers by their departments is confidential.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is in a position to announce details of the new forestry grant scheme referred to in his answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 585-87.

Mr. Rifkind: In the answer I gave on 16 March to a question put by my hon. Friend, I stated that the changes to the tax and grant arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer were designed to provide a simpler and more widely acceptable system of support for private forestry.

The Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme were closed to new applications from 15 March 1988, and will be replaced on 5 April 1988 by a single grant scheme, to be known as the woodland grant scheme. The European Commission is being informed under the provisions of article 93 of the treaty of Rome. Applications may be made under this scheme from 5 April 1988, but cannot be approved until clearance of the scheme by the European Commission.

The scheme will apply to the establishment and restocking of broadleaved, conifer and mixed woodlands, whether by planting or by natural regeneration, and to the rehabilitation of neglected woodland under 20 years of age. It will also cover planting done under the farm woodland scheme.

The objectives of the scheme are:

to encourage timber production;
to provide jobs in and increase the economic potential of rural areas with declining agricultural employment and few alternative sources of economic activity;
to provide an alternative to agricultural production and thereby assist in the reduction of agricultural surpluses;
to enhance the landscape, to create new wildlife habitats and to provide for recreation and sporting uses in the longer term;
to encourage the conservation and regeneration of existing forests and woodlands.

The rates of grant will be increased to the levels set out in the following table:

Area approved for planting or regeneration (hectares)	Rates of grant
	Conifers £ per hectare	Broadleaves £ per hectare
Area band 0·25-0·9	1,005	1,575
1·0-2·9	880	1,375
3·0-9·9	795	1,175
10 and over	615	975

These rates of grant are generally £375 per hectare higher than those under the forestry grant scheme and the broadleaved woodland grant scheme, but the increase for broadleaved trees planted or regenerated in mixed woodlands will be substantially larger.

The rates of grant for conifer planting done under the farm woodland scheme will remain unchanged; broadleaved planting under that scheme will, however, be eligible for the new broadleaved grants.

For new planting on existing arable or improved grassland of less than 10 years of age which is undertaken outside the farm woodland scheme, there will be a supplement of £200 per hectare.

Apart from the increased rates of grant and the special supplement for planting on better land, the scheme will have a number of important features:

the simplicity of a scheme which replaces two schemes with different conditions, and which covers all forms of planting, regeneration and rehabilitation of woodlands;
a substantial differential in favour of broadleaves;
all broadleaved planting, whether it be on its own or in mixture, will attract the same rates of grant;
the broadleaved rate of grant will also apply to the planting and natural regeneration of native pinewoods in specified areas of Scotland;
environmental objectives and provisions that will apply to all types of woodland;
all types of natural regeneration will now be eligible for the first instalment of grant-aid at the time the preparatory work is carried out;

grants for the rehabilitation of derelict woodlands under 20 years of age will now include conifer and mixed woodlands;

grants will be paid in three instalments over 10 years. For conifers as well as for broadleaves, the second and third instalments will attract the rates of grant applicable when they fall due; grant bands will be determined by the total area approved for planting regeneration under the application and not, as was the case under the Forestry Grant Scheme, by the size of the woodland of which such planting or regeneration might form a part.

The scheme will encompass a wide range of management objectives designed not only to provide timber but to encourage the development of multi-purpose woodland management, to achieve a proper balance between broadleaves and conifers, to enable forestry to play its full part as an alternative use of agricultural land no longer needed for food production, and to ensure that the expansion of forestry takes place in harmony with other land uses and the environment.

In this connection, applications relating to the establishment and restocking of broadleaved woodland will be subject to the provisions of the guidelines for the management of broadleaved woodland published by the Forestry Commission, and the new scheme will incorporate similar guidelines for the management of all types of woodland. These will be subject to the review of our broadleaves policy which is due to take place later this year.

Full details of the new woodland grant scheme are set out in a Forestry Commission leaflet, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

I am sure the announcement of this new scheme, with its greatly improved rates of grant and wide-ranging objectives, will serve to underline the Government's commitment to the sensitive yet vigorous expansion of forestry.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to give details of the new forestry grant arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to my right hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro).

Postal Charges

18. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the implications for the economy of the Highlands and Islands of the level of charges for postal and related services.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such representations. Specific arrangements exist for consumers to make detailed representations about tariffs to the Post Office Users' Council for Scotland. The Post Office's corporate plan forms part of a framework of monitoring and control of the business set by my noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Medical Operations (Cancellations)

20. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of operations cancelled in Scottish hospitals since the industrial action by the trades unions began; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards report that, as at 18 March, 2,609 operations had not taken place because of industrial action. In addition, almost 30,000 man-days have been lost, over 40,000 disposable sheets have been used and nearly 80,000 meals have been affected. On 24 February there was inadequate emergency cover for one or more services in more than 20 hospitals, and there have been similar instances on other days. I deplore the adverse effects upon patients and waiting lists.

Iceland (Energy Supply)

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Government of Iceland on the question of energy supply.

Mr. Lang: I met the Icelandic Minister of Industry on 22 January when, in the course of a brief discussion, he drew attention to various ideas which have been aired regarding a possible power link between Iceland and the United Kingdom.

Project 2,000

22. Mr. Doran To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to implement Project 2,000.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We want to receive an education and training which not only equips them for their future roles, but is sufficiently attractive to recruit and retain those who might otherwise be tempted into other fields. We fully recognise the importance of the proposals that the UKCC has put forward which are designed to meet these ends, and hope to be in a position to make a response very soon.

Public Opinion (Assessment)

23. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what facilities exist within his Department for the assessment of Scottish public opinion on matters relating to Government policy.

Mr. Rifkind: My Departments consult extensively on all appropriate issues with those most concerned; my colleagues and I take careful account of representations made to us, and public inquiries and official meetings are arranged as required.

Inward Investment

24. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inward investment announcements have been made in Scotland since 1981; how many jobs and what level of investment is involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Since 1981 Locate in Scotland is aware of 386 decisions involving planned investment in Scotland by inward investors of £2·6 billion leading to the creation and safeguarding of 50,000 jobs.

Hospital Patients (Statistics)

25. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many in-patients and out-patients were treated in Scottish hospitals (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the year ending 31 March 1979 there were 737,816 in-patient discharges from NHS hospitals in Scotland and 5,206,078 out-patient attendances. The corresponding figures for the year ending 31 March 1987 were 842,524 and 5,670,434. In addition, day cases treated increased over the same period from 80,271 to 158,841.

Council House Rents

26. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average council house rent in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Scottish local authorities budgeted for an average council house rent of £14·65 per house per week in 1987-88. They have now set rent levels for 1988-89 and the average is £16·27 per house per week.

Ancient Monuments

27. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding the care of ancient monuments in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend receives many representations covering a wide range of topics, from both organisations and individuals. We can provide more information on my hon. Friend's specific area of interest if he would let us know what that is.

Mining Industry

28. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to protect employment in the Scottish mining industry.

Mr. Lang: The Government are, of course, always concerned that overall employment levels within Scotland should be as high as possible, but within particular sectors this must depend on the strength and competitiveness of the industries involved.

Curriculum and Assessment (Report)

29. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on "Curriculum and Assessment in Scotland: A Policy for the 1990s".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Some 400 responses to the consultation paper have been received to date from members of the public and from a range of bodies including education authorities, colleges of education, schools, school councils, parents organisations and churches. I expect to have further responses before the consultation period closes at Easter.

Rates Increases

30. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average level of rates increases announced by Scottish local authorities to date for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The average domestic rate bill for a Scottish household will increase by 5·2 per cent. in 1988-89; 47 per cent. of the population will experience no rate increase at all. This confirms the generosity of my right hon. and learned Friend's rate support grant settlement for the year and renders all the more unacceptable the high rate increases imposed by some authorities.

Inverclyde Initiative

31. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last discussed the Inverclyde initiative with Sir Robin Duthie, chairman of the Scottish Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Secretary of State for Scotland regularly meets the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency to discuss the whole range of activities of the agency, including the Inverclyde initiative.

The Government remain fully committed to the regeneration of Inverclyde, in particular to its support, through the Scottish Development Agency, for the Inverclyde initiative. The initiative has already made substantial progress and I am encouraged by the further developments planned and in hand.

St. Bede's School, Balornock

32. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on provisions for the future educational needs of the handicapped children presently attending St. Bede's school, Balornock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received 11 representations about handicapped children attending St. Bede's primary school. It is for Strathclyde regional council to decide what provision it will make for these children.

Merksworth High School, Paisley

33. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet the parents and staff of Merksworth high school, Paisley, to discuss the future of the school.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have no plans to visit Merksworth high school at present. The future of the school is a matter for Strathclyde regional council in the first instance.

Private Health Service Contractors

34. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of private health service contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to him of 24 and 26 February, at cols. 237, and 367-68.

Scottish Bus Group

35. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Some 17 representations have been received about the privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group. Most relate to the form which privatisation of the group might take and to the continuance of travel passes for retired employees of 36. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish local authorities have refused to co-operate with the implementation process for the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The implementation of the new system is the statutory responsibility of regional and islands councils in Scotland, all of which are taking the necessary steps to prepare for the introduction of the community charge on 1 April 1989.

46. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will delay the implementation of the Abolition of Domestic Rates etc. Scotland Act 1987 until such time as all the parliamentary regulations and orders relating to it have been made and approved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No. Satisfactory progress is being made in bringing forward the necessary regulations under the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 and my right hon. and learned Friend has no intention of delaying its implementation.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on areas with high levels of need and demand for local government services of the introduction of a flat-rate community charge for the whole of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Client group assessments of expenditure need have been developed in conjunction with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to take account of variations in both the need for services and the costs of providing services. The distribution of revenue support grant to authorities will be based on these assessments. The principle behind grant distribution will be that two authorities responsible for the same range of services should have the same community charge if they spend at assessed need.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether registers, compiled for the purpose of levying the community charge, will be placed in public libraries; and if he will list details which will be recorded on such registers.

Mr. Lang: Section 20 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 and regulation 17 of the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) Regulations 1988 provide that the publicly available parts of the community charges register will be available for inspection at the office of the registration officer and at the headquarters of regional, islands and district councils.

The information thus to be made available for public inspection consists of the addresses and names contained in the community charges register, and the collective community charge multiplier applying to certain premises.

National Health Service (Resources)

37. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations or representations he has had about continuing the supply of extra finance and other resources to the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: An additional sum of £7·6 million was made available by my right hon. and learned Friend in December in order to enable health boards in Scotland to take a number of additional measures to reduce waiting lists and make further improvements within the current financial year. No specific representations have been made about continuing this specific additional funding in future years, but expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland in 1988-89 is planned to increase by about £120 million over this year.

A96 (Improvements)

38. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about the time scale for improvements to the A96.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since June 1987, 12 representations about improvements of the A96 trunk road have been received, including those from the hon. Member. The remainder have come from the commerce and industry sector, from Moray and Nairn district councils and from other local interests and individuals.

Crime Prevention Panels

39. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to change the way crime prevention panels are selected and appointed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Crime prevention panels are non-statutory bodies set up on the initiative of chief constables. Appointments to them are best left to local decision by the chief constable concerned.

National Health Service (Funding)

40. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received from doctors, nurses and other National Health Service employees in favour of increased funding of the Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A significant number of the representations I have recently received about Health Service financing appear to be from NHS personnel, but since correspondents do not always specify their employment it is not possible to identify the total number.

Scottish Council

41. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the Scottish Council (Development and Industry) to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to do so.

Hospital Beds

42. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has concerning the latest number of patients whose admission to hospital has been postponed due lack of beds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No information on this subject is available centrally.

Free Enterprise

43. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to encourage free enterprise in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Government can best encourage enterprise by providing the right economic climate for businesses to set up and expand in order to create wealth and provide jobs.

Enterprise is further stimulated by the Government's policies on competition, privatisation and deregulation.

In addition, the enterprise initiative launched in January will provide fresh impetus to the continuing drive to enhance the enterprise culture in Scotland.

South of Scotland Electricity Board

44. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board from time to time to discuss a wide range of matters affecting the electricity supply industry.

Highlands and Islands (Postal Services)

45. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Scottish Post Office Board to discuss services to the Highlands and Islands.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet the chairman of the Scottish Post Office Board to discuss services to the Highlands and Islands. The Post Office's corporate plan forms part of a framework of monitoring and control of the business set by my noble Friend the Secretary of State for Industry.

Glasgow Garden Festival

47. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the ratio of public to private sector expenditure on the Glasgow garden festival; and what have been the sums of money involved.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested.

The development, construction and operation of the 1988 Glasgow garden festival is the responsibility of the Scottish Development Agency, which is meeting the cost within a total budget of £41·4 million. The net cost of the festival is dependent on a number of factors, notably the number of visitors, but is presently estimated to be some £18·7 million. In addition, the festival organisers have sought involvement from a wide variety of public and private sector sources and the value of such contributions is presently estimated at some £14·6 million.

Industrial Output Growth

48. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the annual rate of growth of output of Scottish industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Manufacturing output in Scotland in the second quarter of 1987 was 5 per cent. higher than a year earlier. Recent business surveys point to a further strong rise in manufacturing output in the second half of 1987.

Ethnic Monitoring

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the ethnic composition of staff in his Department; what is the total number of staff; and how many are (a) Welsh, (b) Scottish, (c) English and (d) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Rifkind: The total number of staff in the Scottish Office, excluding the Scottish Prison Service, was 6,525 on 1 March 1988. It is not known how many staff are Welsh, Scottish or English, but in a recent voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of staff, which achieved a response rate of 88 per cent., 99·6 per cent. of respondents classified themselves as "White", 0·3 per cent. as "Asian" and 0·1 per cent. as "Black".

NHS Services

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make it his policy to compare tenders for National Health Service domestic and catering services in the Western Isles on a like-to-like basis, in particular, as regards wages to be paid to ancillary staff.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is the responsibility of individual health boards to evaluate tenders before awarding contracts. Boards have been told that they must ensure that all comparisons of tender costs are undertaken on a fair and equitable basis in accordance with the guidelines set down by the Scottish Home and Health Department. The particular wage rates to be paid by outside contractors to their employees are a matter for the firms concerned.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many of the commercial contractors who have so far expressed an interest in offering competitive tenders for the National Health Service catering and domestic services in the Western Isles are based in the Western Isles;

(2) if he will list those commercial contractors who have expressed an interest in offering competitive tenders for the provision of National Health Service catering and domestic services in the Western Isles;

(3) what is the estimated total cost to the Western Isles health board of preparation for competitive tendering in accordance with the instructions issued to the board on 11 December; and if he will express this as a percentage of the board's domestic and catering services budget.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines he has issued to ensure the maintenance of current standards of service in those areas of the National Health Service domestic and catering service to be subject to commercial tender following the instructions issued by his Department to the Western Isles health board on 11 December 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This subject was covered in general guidance on competitive tendering issued to boards in 1983, 1986 and in the Scottish Home and Health Department's letter of 11 December 1987 to boards general managers.

Teachers of the Deaf

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teachers of the deaf are being trained in Scotland in the academic year 1987-88; and how many will be trained in the academic year 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Five teachers of the deaf are being trained in Scotland in the present academic year. Decisions have not yet been reached on the intake of students for 1988-89.

"Inside Intelligence"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to date of proceedings in Scotland in relation to Anthony Cavendish's book, "Inside Intelligence".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Proceedings in Scotland in relation to Anthony Cavendish's book "Inside Intelligence", have been brought by the Lord Advocate on behalf of the Government. The expenses of these proceedings and liability for their payment will only be known once the proceedings are concluded and when accounts have been lodged with and taxed by the Auditor of Court.

Harbours

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region the amount of expenditure incurred by central Government for the improvement of harbour facilities throughout Scotland in the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the Scottish Development Department operate financial aid schemes for all Scottish fishery harbours and ferry harbours throughout the Highlands and Islands. Assistance may be by grant and/or loan. The total expenditure for the five years up to 1987-88 is as follows:

Region	Expenditure £
Lothian	21,124
Grampian	1,401,191
Fife	95,137
Tayside	193,425
Highland	5,097,307
Strathclyde	2,278,487
Shetland	1,046,228
Orkney	958,946
Western Isles	1,875,284

There has been no expenditure incurred on harbours in the Borders or Dumfries and Galloway regions.

Pittenweem Harbour

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on support for improvements to Pittenweem harbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Government policy remains that of supporting investment at fishery harbours where it makes both fishing and economic sense. Fife regional council is at present preparing an investment appraisal on a variety of options to develop the harbour at Pittenweem.

Until the results of that exercise are submitted to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland I am unable to indicate what level of support, if any, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to give to the proposed development.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies have been, or are being, carried out by his Department in relation to proposed improvements to Pittenweem harbour; and when the results of these are likely to be made public.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's responsibilities are to examine the proposals put forward by the harbour authority concerned. Fife regional council carried out a site survey of the harbour at Pittenweem, assisted financially by the Department.

From the results of the survey the council has prepared a variety of development options upon which it is now carrying out an investment appraisal exercise. Until the investment appraisal exercise is completed and the results submitted to the Department I am unable to make any further comment.

Soft Fruit Growers

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the total amount of additional funds he proposes to make available to growers of soft fruit in Scotland in the light of the Government's ban on the use of Dinoseb; over what period these will be available; for what purposes they will be available; and what will the maximum amount any one grower can receive in a calendar year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The purpose of the new scheme will be to assist commercial raspberry growers in Scotland to replace existing plantations of the variety Glen Clova. Details of the scheme will be announced as soon as possible.

Schools (Staffing Review)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the review of staffing as recommended by the Main committee in schools Joint National Council for teaching staff in school education, circular SE40 paragraph 7, to be completed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I hope that the Department's review of staffing standards will be completed in time to incorporate its findings in guidance to education authorities by the end of the 1987-88 session.

Rate Rebates

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was paid to Shetland Islands council under section 2(1) of the Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Act 1985, in respect of the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Year	Amount Paid £
1985-86	362,611
1987-88	148,200

The grant paid for the current financial year is an advance of 95 per cent. of the estimated rebates for the year of £156,000.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Rating Reform

50. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the increase in family income supplement made to cover the 20 per cent. minimum poll tax payment; and in how many individual cases in Scotland that increase will not cover the full cost of the minimum contribution.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) and the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 16 December 1987 at column 599-601. The precise amounts to be included in the income-related benefit levels from April 1989 (including family credit, which replaces family income supplement from April 1988) will be decided nearer the time.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the maximum pay scale for (a) a registered nurse, (b) a ward sister and (c) a student registered nurse at constant and cash prices for each year since 1974.

Mr. Newton: The information is given in the table:

Date of Settlement	Actual Maximum of Scale			Maximum of Scale at Constant 1974 Prices[2]
	Staff Nurse	Ward Sister	Student Nurse	Staff Nurse	Ward Sister	Student Nurse

Bank Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of bank nurses employed by each regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 18 March 1988 at columns 714-16.

Nurses (Education)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the percentage increase or decrease in expenditure on nurses' education for each of the years 1979 to 1987 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

Percentage increase or decrease in expenditure on nurses' education and training (England)

	(a) Cash terms	(b) Real terms
1979-80	+17·1	0
1980-81	+24·3	−5·1
1981-82	+ 7·0	−2·6
1982-83	+ 5·5	−1·6
1983-84	+ 4·2	−0·4
1984-85	− 1·4	−5·6
1985-86	+ 3·1	−2·6
1986-87	+ 2·6	−0·5

Spending on nurse training is determined largely by health authorities in the light of their local assessments of the future need for professional staff. The objective is to ensure that training provision matches the needs of the NHS, not to maintain any set level of expenditure.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether supplementary benefit claims drafted other than on forms produced by his Department can be accepted; and what instructions have been issued to benefit officers concerning the acceptance and processing of such claims.

Mr. Portillo: Claims for supplementary benefit do not have to be made on forms produced by this Department. However, when a claim is received, a questionnaire asking for precise details of the claimant's financial circumstances must be completed. The relevant instructions to local office staff are contained in the S manual, copies of which are held in the Library.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the availability of claim forms produced by his Department for supplementary benefit claimants, and the effects on the administration of his Department's duties.

Mr. Portillo: The initial supplementary benefit claim form SB1 is available from local offices of this Department, Crown post offices, most libraries, social services departments and many voluntary organisations. Unemployment benefit offices at present stock a similar form (SB21), but from 11 April they, too, will stock the SB1.

Postal claim forms, which ask for precise details of a claimant's financial circumstances, are available from DHSS local offices only and, in the case of form B1 for unemployed claimants, from unemployment benefit offices.

Children's Work

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to seek to bring child-minding within the ambit of legislation on the hours and conditions of children's employment.

Mrs. Currie: Childminders are required to be registered by local authorities under the Nurseries and Childminders Regulation Act 1948. It is not considered that a local authority would register a child aged under 16 as a childminder.

Payments (Orkney and Shetland)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many individuals were in receipt of single payments in (a) Orkney and (b) Shetland in 1986-87, and in the latest financial year for which figures are available;

(2) what the social fund allocation for 1988-89 is for Orkney;

(3) how much was spent on single payments to claimants in Orkney in 1986-87.

Mr. Portillo: The Orkney isles are served by the Wick local office. Figures for the residents of Orkney are not kept separately in the information collected at Wick. Shetland is served by the local office in Lerwick.

Information on the number of people in receipt of single payment is not kept and would be disproportionately costly to obtain. However, information broken down by local office on the number and amount of single payments made during the period April 1986 to April 1987 is available in the Library, as are social fund allocations for 1988-89.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by Civil Service grade the number of officials in his Department located outside London; and what proportion they represent of all officials employed by his Department.

Mr. Portillo: On 1 January 1988, the total number of staff located outside the London pay area was 84,651, which represents 83·1 per cent. of all staff employed by the Department. The numbers are shown by grade as follows:

South Cumbria Health Authority

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes in revenue have been made in South Cumbria district health authority during the last five years for which figures are available, both in cash and real terms and as percentages.

Mrs. Currie: The funding of South Cumbria health authority is a matter for the Northern regional health authority. However I understand that the information requested is as given in the table.

Gross Revenue Expenditure[1] (£000s)			Percentage Increase
1982-83		1986-87
Cash	at 1986-87 prices	Cash	Cash	Real Terms[2]

Income Disregards

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will state the real-term value of the £35 income disregard from occupational pensions above which unemployment benefit is abated for those aged 60 years and over as a percentage of the value in April 1981;

(2) what would be the cost of restoring the 1981 real-term value of the £35 income disregard from occupational pensions above which unemployment benefit is abated (a) when applied to those aged 60 years and over and (b) when applied to those aged 55 years and over;

(3) what plans he has to increase the level of disregarded income from occupational pensions above which unemployment benefit is reduced for those aged 60 years and over.

Mr. Scott: Based on the movement in the retail prices index between April 1981 and January 1988 (the latest date for which information is available), the real-term value of the £35 threshold expressed as a percentage of the April 1981 value is 71·7 per cent. The cost of restoring the £35 threshold to its 1981 value would be about £7 million for those aged 60 or over and about £12 million for all those aged 55 or over. We have no immediate plans to increase the present threshold.

Carers

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the likely increase in the number of carers of elderly, sick and disabled people in 1993 and 1998.

Mr. Newton: We do not hold information centrally which would enable us to make such an estimate. The OPCS 1985 general household survey, the results of which will be available in the near future, will provide better basic information, but it is doubtful whether it would enable credible forward projections to be made.

Cold Weather Payment

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to increase the £500 capital limit in the criteria of eligibility for exceptionally cold weather payment.

Mr. Scott: The £500 capital limit is in line with that for other single payments of supplementary benefit. We shall be reviewing the exceptionally cold weather scheme in the light of this winter's experience.

Pensioners (Identity Cards)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to introduce a national identity card for retirement pensioners.

Mr. Scott: I have no plans to do so. Pensioners who have chosen to be paid by order book can produce the book as proof of pensioner status. Pensioners who have chosen to be paid by other means are issued, on request, with a card confirming pensioner status.

Smokeless Tobacco Products

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will detail the scientific and research evidence which has been produced to him in support of the proposed ban of all smokeless tobacco products;

(2) on what statistical, scientific and analytical information his Department has based its proposed ban on all smokeless tobacco products.

Mrs. Currie: A large number of studies and reports have been taken into account by the Government. A detailed list of the references has been placed in the Library. Many are contained in a report of the advisory committee to the surgeon general of the United States Government on "The Health Consequences of Using Smokeless Tobacco" which was published in April 1986.

NHS (Efficiency Savings)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in how many cases community health councils have identified value-for-money efficiency savings in the National Health Service since 1983 which have subsequently been implemented; and what are the savings so accrued that have been redirected to patient care.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Non-essential Operations

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number, cost and type of non-essential operations such as cosmetic surgery and sex change operations which were carried out in the National Health Service in the last year.

Mrs. Currie: It is for the clinician responsible for the care of the individual patient to decide whether treatment including surgery is necessary. The available statistics do not provide a breakdown of the reasons for which plastic surgery is performed. For information on the number and cost of sex change operations, I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) on 1 March 1988 at column 551.

Tobacco (Labelling)

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposed to take to ensure compliance by Her Majesty's Government with the proposed European Community directive on the labelling of tobacco products, with particular regard to the harmonisation of national legislation governing the labelling of manufactured tobacco.

Mrs. Currie: If the European Community adopts a directive on the labelling of tobacco products, we will ensure that its terms are observed in the United Kingdom. We are anxious to maintain our system of controlling these matters by way of voluntary agreement between the Government and the tobacco industry. The European Commission is considering whether compliance by this means will be acceptable.

South East Thames RHA (Emergency Departments)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total cost of each accident and emergency department in the South East Thames regional health authority area in the last year and if he will list how the total cost may be analysed under the headings of medical staff, nursing staff, medical and surgical supplies and equipment, pharmacy, radiology andother costs.

Mrs. Currie: The information for 1986-87 in respect of those hospitals in the South East Thames region which undertake treatment of accident and emergency patients is as follows:

Claimants (Lewisham)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people aged 16 to 17 years were in receipt of supplementary benefit in the London borough of Lewisham at the latest available date.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) family income supplement and (c) housing benefit in the London borough of Lewisham.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
(a) Supplementary benefit	[1]86,667
(b) Family income supplement	n/a
(c) Housing benefit	37,241

[1] Latest available figure—17 November 1987.

The figures for (a) relate to the eight local offices which serve the London borough of Lewisham. The boundaries are not conterminous. The figures for (c) relate to the London borough of Lewisham.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any estimate of how many people will be on income support in the London borough of Lewisham from April.

Mr. Portillo: No local estimates have been made of the number of people who will be on income support from April.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any estimate of the number of people eligible for family credit in the London borough of Lewisham from April.

Mr. Portillo: No. Estimates are possible only on a national basis.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any estimate of the number of people in the London borough of Lewisham who will lose their entitlement to housing benefit from April.

Mr. Portillo: No. The analysis of the effect of the reforms; "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-related Benefits", published in October 1987 cannot be applied with any degree of reliability to individual local authority areas.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many young people were refused benefit after failing to take up a place on a YTS course in the London borough of Lewisham in 1987.

Mr. Portillo: No young person in the London borough of Lewisham was refused supplementary benefit in 1987 because he or she failed to take up a YTS place.

Social Security Reform

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any estimate of the number of people in the London borough of Lewisham who will receive less benefit after April 1988, after taking the transitional arrangements into account.

Mr. Portillo: The Income Support (Transitional) Regulations 1987 are designed to ensure that the level of benefit will be preserved for the majority of continuing claimants at the point of transition. No local estimates have been made of the number of people who will receive less benefit after April 1988.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish the first report of the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship has submitted its first report and copies have been placed in the Library. The Government are grateful to the committee and its chairman Sir Peter Lazarus for their excellent work in monitoring the agreements and for their first report.

The report shows that in general the system of voluntary agreements which govern tobacco advertising, health warnings and sports sponsorship are working and that the tobacco companies are honouring their commitments. The chairman has highlighted areas where he feels the agreements are inadequate and we will take note of these points in negotiating future agreements with the industry.

We note and share his concern that the tobacco advertising on retail outlets put in place before the current agreement and which would not comply with current agreements if put in place since 1 April 1986 should be replaced more quickly than currently envisaged by the tobacco companies. We note the suggestion that the committee would benefit from more secretariat support and this will be considered.

The Government remain concerned about the impact of cigarette advertising, especially where children and young women are concerned. The present agreement on advertising expires at the end of next year. We shall be seeking to open negotiations with the industry as soon as possible to achieve a new agreement which reflects current needs.

Smoking

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, when he expects to publish the Froggatt committee report on smoking and health.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 17 December 1987, c: 703.]: The fourth report of the independent scientific committee on smoking and health is published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The report reviews the progress and achievements of the policy of tobacco product modification, introduced in the 1970s to encourage the development of less harmful products, and recommends action to reduce further the amount of the main carcinogenic and other health-threatening components in cigarettes. It concludes that, together with the welcome reduction in the proportion of people who smoke, the policy has contributed to the more favourable trends which are developing in certain smoking-related diseases, most notably in lung cancer. We will be opening discussions with the tobacco industry about further reductions in the harmful components of tobacco smoke.

The report recommends that the Government consider all the options available to encourage smokers to stop smoking and non-smokers not to start. The report also considers the effects of breathing other people's tobacco smoke, sometimes referred to as passive smoking or environmental tobacco smoke. The committee has reviewed the evidence on the possible health implications of passive smoking and concludes that the findings overall are consistent with there being a small inrease of 10-30 per cent. in the risk of lung cancer amongst non-smokers. The committee estimates that this might account for several hundred out of the current annual total of about 40,000 lung cancer deaths in the United Kingdom.

The report draws attention to the link between smoking and reduced birthweight and perinatal mortality. It calls for further research across a range of smoking-related subjects.

The Government accept the thrust of the report, which reflects established policies of voluntary arrangements, and we will be considering in that light how the recommendations can best be carried forward. Action on some recommendations can be taken relatively quickly, but others will need further discussion and negotiation with interested parties, including the tobacco industry. As part of this process the Government will be glad to receive comments on the committee's recommendations and on ways in which they might be implemented with the aim of reducing health problems from smoking.

AIDS

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what his latest assessment of the numbers of cases of AIDS and of people with HIV infection and of the extent to which the AIDS virus is spreading in the population generally in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 7 March 1988]: To the end of February 1988, the total number of reported cases of AIDS in the United Kingdom was 1,344. To the end of December 1987, the total of reported HIV-antibody positive persons was 8,016, but it is likely that the true number of people infected with HIV is considerably greater. Consideration of the risk behaviour groups of people reported as antibody positive shows that the great majority are male homosexuals or bisexuals or injecting drug misusers, but in about 5 per cent. of the cases, the infection is thought to have been acquired heterosexually.

Midwives

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many midwives have left the employment of (a) East Anglian regional health authority and (b) Great Yarmouth and Waveney district health authority in the last year for which figures are available and in each year from 1978-79;

(2) how many midwives are employed in (a) East Anglian regional health authority and (b) Great Yarmouth and Waveney district health authority in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for 1978-79.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 8 March 1988]: I regret that some of the information sought by my hon. Friend is not available.

Because of the NHS reorganisation in 1982, figures for district health authorities on a consistent basis are not held centrally for earlier years.

Information on staff leaving health service employment is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairmen of the respective health authorities.

Available information is shown in the table.

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what plans he has to ensure the full use of specialist trained mental handicap nurses in patterns of service training;

(2) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to health authorities to provide for the continuation of mental handicap nurse training to ensure the provision of competent practitioners for this client group.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 March 1988]: It is for health authorities to ensure that training provision matches the needs of the NHS, in the light of their own assessments of their future requirements for professional staff. Similarly, health authorities should seek to ensure that mental handicap nurses are properly used in the training of students. We are, however, at present considerng the UKCC's "Project 2000" proposals for changes in the pattern of nurse education and training as a whole.

Mr. Ronald Davidson

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why there has been a delay in respect of a settlement of benefit entitlement for the late Mr. Ronald Davidson of 5, Enderby crescent, Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, who died of asbestosis.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 17 March 1988]: There were delays at various stages, which I regret. They were largely occasioned by the need to obtain further medical evidence. The hon. Member has written to me about this and I will reply to him in more detail. I understand that the doctors at the medical boarding centre (respiratory diseases) in Sheffield have now reached a conclusion and Mrs. Davidson's claim for benefit will shortly be determined.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will arrange for responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department in future to be made publicly available by placing them in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this be not done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department engages in a very wide range of consultation exercises in the course of its ongoing business. I do not believe that a procedure on the lines suggested by the hon. Member would represent a cost-effective use of the resources likely to be involved.

My Department will, however, respond to individual requests by providing a list of the organisations which have submitted views on consultation documents so that interested individuals can make direct approaches to individual organisations for copies of their responses.

THE ARTS

National Anthem

Mr. Holt: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will take steps to ensure that the national anthem is played, either at the commencement or end of live theatrical productions.

Mr. Luce: This is a matter for decision by individual theatre managements.

Jubilee Gardens

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts if the Jubilee gardens will be transferred to the new South Bank body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 14 March 1988]: It is for the London residuary body to determine to whom Jubilee gardens should be transferred, and no final decision has yet been taken.

Rating Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the community charge on local authorities' financial support for the arts.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 14 March 1988]: Local authorities take their own spending decisions. The change to a community charge system should make it easier for local charge-payers to know what is being done on their behalf.

EMPLOYMENT

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of employees employed under the national dock labour scheme made redundant in each year since its inception and the amount paid in redundancy payments in each year.

Mr. Nicholls: The national voluntary severance scheme, providing for severance payments to registered dock workers, was first introduced in 1969. Numbers severed under this scheme, and the total amount paid, as reported in the annual reports of the National Dock Labour Board, were:

	Number of dockers	Amount (£ million)
1969	3,006	5·1
1970	3,545	5·8
1971	2,415	3·9
1972	7,647	22·5
1973	3,874	13·8
1974	28	0·1
1975	2,245	10·4
1976	1,611	7·1
1977	1,000	6·0
1978	1,025	6·6
1979	2,112	16·2
1980	2,556	21·5
1981	4,785	68·0
1982	2,787	60·0
1983	1,494	32·0
1984	1,304	30·7
1985[1]	328	7·3

[1] January to March.

In October 1985 a new scheme for funding severances was introduced, known as the national employers release arrangement. The corresponding figures are:

	Number of dockers	Amount (£ million)
1985[1]	202	4·8
1986	1,353	37·4
1987	471	13·0

[1] October to December.

Docklands (Vacancies)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vacancies in London docklands were (a) notified to, and (b) filled by jobcentres in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information. The table shows the total numbers of placings by jobcentres and vacancies notified to jobcentres covering an area closely corresponding to the London docklands development area for each year from 1983 to 1987.

London Docklands development area[2]

Year	Notified vacancies	Placings
1983[1]	12,291	7,900
1984	17,920	11,771
1985	19,959	13,472
1986	22,108	15,791
1987	22,919	14,816

[1] The requested information is only available from April 1983. The figures therefore relate to April to December only.

[2] The jobcentres which cover the London docklands development area are Bermondsey, Plaistow, Poplar, Shoreditch and Stepney. However, vacancies notified to Bermondsey jobcentre between May 1985 and April 1986 are excluded, as they cannot be separately identified.

Women (Redundancy)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to introduce legislation removing the discrimination against women in qualifying for redundancy in the light of the case of Cato v Queen Charlotte's special health authority.

Mr. Nicholls: On 29 October 1987 my hon. Friend the Minister of State announced his intention to increase the age limit up to which women can receive a statutory redundancy payment from 60 to 65 years as soon as legislative time was available. I am afraid that I cannot be more specific at present.

Disabled People

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects the results of the review of employment assistance to disabled people.

Mr. Lee: I hope that we will be able to complete our internal review as soon as possible this year.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the offices where the new restart questionnaire has been piloted from 1 February.

Mr. Lee: The restart interview form was launched in the following locations on 1 February 1988:

Billingham
Dundee
Ealing
Huddersfield
Leicester
Plymouth
Port Talbot
Preston
Stoke
Watford
Wimbledon

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide details for each of the offices where the new restart questionnaire has been piloted of the number of people found to be unavailable for work for the period before the introduction of the new questionnaire and for the period following its introduction.

Mr. Lee: The number of people referred in the months of January and February 1988 fom the 11 launch offices to an unemployment benefit office because of a doubt about their availability for work is shown in the table.

The two sets of figures are not directly comparable in that those for the period following the launch of the restart interview form on 1 February include a number of referrals which would previously have been sent to claimant advisers.

It is not possible to provide figures for the number of those referred to unemployment benefit offices who are subsequently disallowed benefit since the number of such decisions which follows a restart interview cannot be separately identified within the total number of decisions which follow from referrals to adjudication officers from unemployment benefit offices.

Numbers referred to unemployment benefit offices because of doubts over availability

Office	January 1988 (5-week period)	February 1988 (4 week period)
Billingham	0	30

Huddersfield	21	37

Unified Training Scheme

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the position of community programme participants who decline an offer of continuing beyond September 1988 on the new unified training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: All community programme participants joining from the end of February are guaranteed six months on that programme. Most community programme participants who have not obtained a job will recognise the value of the new employment training programme, and will wish to transfer either at the end of their time on community programme or from 5 September, the start date of the new programme. Benefit sanctions will not be imposed on those participants who choose not to transfer at the end of their six months on community programme.

Job Clubs

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to expedite the development of more job clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: A total of 1,184 job clubs are now open, an increase of 51 in the past 13 weeks. The planning assumption in the White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" (Cm. 288) is that the programme will expand to 1,500 job clubs by the end of 1988-89.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of inspectors at the Health and Safety Executive in each year since 1979; what are the projected figures for each year until 1991; and whether he will list these figures broken down into factory, specialist, agricultural, mines and quarries, nuclear installations and explosives inspectorates.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 March 1988]: The total number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive since 1979 is as follows:

					1 April
	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	[1]1987	[2]1988

The planned figures for 1988-89 are as follows:

	Figures
HM Factory Inspectors	649
Specialist Inspectors	216
HM Agricultural Inspectors	166
HM Inspectors of Mines and Quarries	77
HM Nuclear Installations Inspectors	121
Explosives Inspectors	18
Total	1,247

Figures for the years beyond 1998-89 are not available.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans are being considered further to develop the loan guarantee scheme for inner city investment and development.

Mr. Cope [pursuant to his reply, 17 March 1988, c. 642]: I regret that there was an error in the original reply at the above reference. The increase in the guarantee available under the loan guarantee scheme to businesses based or wishing to be based in the 16 inner city task force areas has been increased from 70 per cent. to 85 per cent., and not 80 per cent. as stated in the original reply. The full text of the reply is as follows:

"One of this Government's principal aims has been to encourage the establishment and development of businesses in the inner city areas. As part of the action for cities initiative, launched on Monday 7 March 1988, we have increased the guarantee available under the loan guarantee scheme to businesses based or wishing to be based in the 16 inner city task force areas from 70 per cent. to 85 per cent. I hope that this increase in the guarantee will make it easier for businesses in inner city areas to take advantage of the scheme."

NORTHERN IRELAND

Companies

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of companies operate (a) in the public sector and (b) in the private sector in Northern Ireland; and what steps he is taking to encourage public companies to move into the private sector.

Mr. Stanley: At 31 March 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were six public corporations operating on a commercial basis in Northern Ireland. In addition, the Government had a shareholding interest in 53 companies, representing 0·4 per cent. of the total companies incorporated in Northern Ireland and set up under the Companies (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. It is the Government's policy to promote efficiency, increase incentives and widen share ownership, and the Government will continue to seek opportunities to maximise private sector ownership of those undertakings in which it has an interest, as commercial circumstances permit.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the companies which have been privatised in Northern Ireland since May 1979.

Mr. Stanley: There have not been any.

Residential Homes (East Antrim)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residents are presently cared for in residential homes controlled by the Department of Health and Social Services in East Antrim; and how this compares with the number of residents accommodated during 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Needham: Information is not available in the precise form requested since no residential home is controlled by the Department of Health and Social Services. Responsibility for registration and inspection of private residential homes rest with health and social services boards.

In the Larne, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey unit of management, on 31 December 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, 51 residents were cared for in voluntary and private residential accommodation registered with the Northern Health and Social Services Board. For the year ended 31 December 1985 the total number of residents in such homes was 52.

Nursing Homes (East Antrim)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for how many residents in private nursing homes in East Antrim a financial contribution is being paid from public funds.

Mr. Needham: I regret the information is not available.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the estimated value of payments to be made to private nursing homes in East Antrim for this financial year in respect of residents supported by public funds;

(2) what is the estimated cost of financial assistance for residents in private nursing homes in East Antrim 1988-89.

Mr. Needham: I regret the information is not available.

Residential Places

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residential places will be provided in homes controlled by the Department of Health and Social Services in 1988-89.

Mr. Needham: Health and social services boards are responsible for the registration and inspection of private and voluntary residential homes. It is not possible to forecast the number of places which will be provided in the independent residential sector in 1988-89. The critical factors will be the demand for places and the preparedness of independent operators (including voluntary organisations) to provide such places.

Residential Homes

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of registered residential homes in East Antrim; and how many (a) notified inspections, and (b) unnotified inspections have been carried out by Department of Health and Social Services officials in the last year for which records are available.

Mr. Needham: The information is not held centrally. The Department has no responsibility for carrying out inspections of registered residential homes. However, the registering and inspecting authority, namely, the Northern board, tells me that, in the year ended 29 February 1988, a total of 25 notified and two unnotified inspections have been carried out in the six registered residential homes in the Larne, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey unit of management.

Dog Licensing

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the present position in Northern Ireland in the light of proposals regarding dog licensing in Great Britain; and what proposals he has had for parity of legislation.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Agriculture has monitored the operation of the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 since it came into force. The order was aimed at encouraging responsible dog ownership, reducing the stray dog population and ensuring the effective licensing and control of dogs and it has been well received. There are no proposals for parity of legislation.

International Fund for Ireland

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Governments of the United States of America and Canada on the future of the International Fund for Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: During my visit to the United States this month I held discussions with the United States Administration on the progress made by the International Fund for Ireland and its future funding. There have also been discussions with the Canadian Government at official level regarding the fund.

Forestry

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for revised planting grants following the changes in tax treatment of commercial forestry announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 15 March.

Mr. Needham: As from 5 April 1988 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is introducing in Northern Ireland a new woodland grant scheme.

The Northern Ireland forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme have been closed to new applications from 15 March 1988, and will be replaced on 5 April 1988 by a single grant scheme, to be known as the woodland grant scheme.

The scheme will apply to the establishment and restocking of broadleaved, conifer and mixed woodlands, whether by planting or by natural regeneration, and to the rehabilitation of neglected woodland under 20 years of age. It will also cover planting done under the farm woodland scheme.

The objectives of the scheme are:

- to encourage timber production;
- to provide jobs in and increase the economic potential of rural areas with declining agricultural employment and few alternative sources of economic activity;
- to provide an alternative to agricultural production and thereby assist in the reduction of agricultural surpluses;
- to enhance the landscape, to create new wildlife habitats and to provide for recreation and sporting uses in the longer term;
- to encourage the conservation and regeneration of existing forests and woodlands.

The rates of grant will be increased substantially, and will be as set out in the following table:

Area approved for planting or regeneration (hectares)	Rates of Grant Conifers £ per hectare	Broadleaves £ per hectare
Area band
0·25-0·90	1,005	1,575
1·00-2·90	880	1,375
3·00-9·90	795	1,175
10 and over	615	975

These rates of grant are generally £375 per hectare higher than those under the forestry grant scheme and the broadleaved woodland grant scheme, but the increase for broadleaved trees planted or regenerated in mixed woodlands will be substantially larger.

The rates of grant for conifer planting eligible under the farm woodland scheme and for short rotation coppice will be as set out in the following table:

Area approved for planting (hectares)	Rate of grant associated with FWS Conifers £ per hectare
0·25-0·90	630

Broadleaved planting associated with the farm woodland scheme will, however, be eligible for the new broadleaved woodland grants.

For new planting an existing arable or improved grassland of less than 10 years of age which is undertaken outside the farm woodland scheme, there will be a supplement of £200 per hectare.

Apart from the increased rates of grant and the special supplement for planting on better land, the scheme will have a number of important features:

- the simplicity of a scheme which replaces two schemes with different conditions, and which covers all forms of planting, regeneration and rehabilitation of woodlands;
- a substantial differential in favour of broadleaves;
- all broadleaved planting, whether it be on its own or in mixture, will attract the same rates of grant;
- environmental objectives and provision that will apply to all types of woodland;
- all types of natural regeneration will now be eligible for the first instalment of grant-aid at the time the preparatory work is carried out;
- grants for the rehabilitation of derelict woodlands under 20 years of age will now include conifer and mixed woodlands;
- grants for new planting and restocking will be paid in three instalments over 10 years. For conifers as well as for broadleaves, the second and third instalments will attract the rates of grant applicable when they fall due;
- grant bands will be determined by the total area approved for planting or regeneration under the application and not, as was the case under the forestry grant scheme, by the size of the woodland of which such planting or regeneration might form a part.

I am sure that the announcement of this new scheme, with its greatly improved rates of grant and wide-ranging objectives, will serve to underline the Government's commitment to the sensitive yet vigorous expansion of forestry in Northern Ireland.

Housing Executive

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many arbitrations there were between building contractors and the Housing Executive in the 1986-87 financial year; how many of these ended in awards being made against the Housing Executive; and what was the total sum paid by the Housing Executive.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 March 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I have been advised by the chief executive that four arbitrations were concluded during the financial year 1986-87. There were no awards against the Housing Executive. All the disputes were settled by agreement at a total cost to the Housing Executive of £43,920.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 March 1988]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) on 24 and 25 February 1988 at columns 189-90 and 328-29.

"Scene"

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance is available to head teachers to assist them in assessing whether the drama entitled "Scene", produced by BBC School Television Service, conforms with the requirements of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: Department of Education and Science circular No. 11/87 "Sex Education at School" contains guidance for LEAs, governing bodies and head teachers on sections 18 and 46 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

International Management Centre, Buckingham

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reach a decision on the validity of degrees awarded by the International Management Centre, Buckingham, to its clients and students.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the International Management Centre, Buckingham has begun discussions with the Council for National Academic Awards with a view to gaining academic validation of its qualifications. These negotiations are a matter for the parties involved, and not for my right hon. Friend.

Arthritis

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report expenditure by (a) the Medical Research Council and (b) any other Government funded projects into arthritis research in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Medical Research Council that its expenditure on arthritis research was as follows:

Year	£ millions
1982-83	0·9
1983-84	1·0
1984-85	1·1
1986-87	1·3

Some support for arthritis research is also provided through UGC block grants to universities. Information on support for arthritis research by other Government Departments is not held centrally.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate how much expenditure there has been by charities and other voluntary bodies on arthritis research in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and whether he takes this expenditure into account in allocating Government funding for such research.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the handbook of the Association of Medical Research Charities that support of arthritis research by the Arthritis and Rheumatism Council currently amounts to about £6 million a year. Support from the science budget for arthritis research is provided through the Medical Research Council which is responsible for determining its own priorities for the research supported from its annual grant in aid — currently £147 million.

Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on prescribed expenditure allocations in respect of education for 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has announced that additional capital allocations will be made for 1988-89. Twelve million, five hundred thousand pounds of the total will be allocated in respect of education and, in particular, but not exclusively, to support projects in inner city areas. A further £5·2 million in respect of education is expected to be available later provided that returns from local authorities do not indicate a likely overspend of the revised DOE-LA1 cash limit in 1988-89. My Department will be inviting local education authorities which cover urban programme areas to submit plans for projects which they would undertake if granted a supplementary allocation.

A small number of authorities have already satisfied me that, because of special circumstances, they would be able to make particularly effective use of an additional allocation in 1988-89. Those authorities will receive appropriate notification shortly.

Council for National Academic Awards

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will appoint a successor to Sir Ronald Dearing as chairman of the Council for National Academic Awards.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am pleased to announce that, together with my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales, I am appointing Sir Bryan Nicholson, chairman of the Post Office, as chairman of the Council for National Academic Awards. He will shortly succeed Sir Ronald Dearing who is relinquishing the post to take the chair of the Polytechnic and Colleges Funding Council. Sir Bryan's term of office will be three years.

Schools (Discipline)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now in a position to announce the details of the inquiry he has decided to set up into discipline in schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1988, c. 687]: I have appointed two further members to the committee of inquiry:

Mrs. Colette Thomson, a former member of the England netball team, and now a mathematics teacher at Alderbrook school, west midlands; and following consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, Mrs. Glenda Thomas, head teacher of Blaencaerau junior school, Maesteg, Mid-Glamorgan.

These appointments complete the membership. My intention is that the committee should start its work as soon as possible and aim to report by the end of the year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Solicitors and Barristers (Legal Aid Work)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the the Attorney-General how many (a) solicitors and (b) barristers have been excluded from legal aid work either temporarily or for a specified period, for reasons connected with professional standards in the past five years.

The Attorney-General: In the last five years one solicitor has been registered as excluded from legal aid work for a specified period as a result of a decision of the Legal Aid (Complaints) Tribunal. No barrister has been so registered as excluded in that period.

EC Legislation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Attorney-General if he will state the number of occasions since 1 January 1973 when each category of United Kingdom court has applied for, or received, guidance from the Council of the European Communities concerning interpretation or execution of legislation of that Community.

The Attorney-General: I assume that the hon. Member intends to refer to requests made by United Kingdom courts to the Court of Justice of the European Communities for preliminary rulings under article 177 of the treaty of Rome. In the period from 1 January 1973 until the end of February 1988, the House of Lords made six such requests, the Court of Appeal six, and all other courts and tribunals a total of 64. It is not possible to provide figures separately for the courts and tribunals whose references are included in the latter figure.

North-West Region

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what effect the Budget proposals will have on manufacturing industries in the north-west region during the remainder of the current year.

Mr. Butcher: Manufacturing industry in the north-west and elsewhere will benefit from the priority given by the Budget to a continuation of steady economic growth and low inflation; and from the additional incentives to effort and enterprise which the reductions in personal taxation will bring.

GATT

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in the development of the Uruguay round of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade multilateral trade negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The initial phase of the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations, which was devoted to the examination of the issues identified in the Punta del Este declaration, has been completed. Some 160 proposals have been tabled by the contracting parties, covering all the main areas. Substantive negotiations are now beginning and are due to be completed in September 1990.

A mid-term meeting will take place in Montreal in the week of 5 December 1988 at which Ministers from the contracting parties will review progress.

Chartered Institute of Management Accountants (Exhibition)

Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Maude: Yes. Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Tuesday 12 April to Friday 15 April.

Financial Services Act 1986

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement concerning implementation of the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Maude: The Government intend to bring into force the remaining investor protection provisions of the Act, including the central requirement to be authorised or exempted, on 29 April. A commencement order will be made shortly.

ENERGY

Domestic Gas Supplies (Disconnection)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many people have had their gas supplies disconnected in the five years prior to privatisation; and how many have been disconnected in each year subsequently in (a) Dundee, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for British Gas plc. I have asked the chairman of British Gas to write to the hon. Member with the information available.

North Sea Oil

Sir Hector Munro: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals for a further round of offshore production licensing.

Mr. Parkinson: I propose to launch an 11th round of offshore licensing as soon as the customary consultations about the detailed arrangements have been completed. As in recent rounds, I propose to invite applications for a range of mature and frontier blocks selected from various areas of the United Kingdom continental shelf. I expect to offer a larger number of blocks for companies to consider than in the last round. The aim once again will be to consolidate on recent exploration successes and to provide potential for further discoveries which can be developed to replace existing fields as they become depleted.

I hope to license blocks from the following broad areas:

Area	Quadrants
Northern North Sea	2, 3, 8, 9, 210 and 211
Faroes Shetland area	204, 205, 206, 208, 209, 213 and 214
Hebridean Platform	154, 165, 166
Orkney Shetland area	5, 6 and 7
Moray Firth	11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18 and 19
Central North Sea	15, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 29 and 30
Forth Approaches	25 and 26
Southern North Sea	41, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 52, 53 and 54
English Channel	97, 98, 99 and 100
Cardigan Bay Basin	107
Irish Sea Manx Basin	109, 110 and 113

The quadrants are given as a guide only. I envisage offering some blocks from the majority of these quadrants, but not necessarily from all of them and not necessarily all the unlicensed blocks in any particular quadrant. In the 10th round, all awards were made at the discretion of the Secretary of State for Energy and I expect largely the same method to be adopted for the forthcoming round.

The terms of the licences will be along the same general lines as in the 10th round, although I am proposing to introduce some changes designed to speed up the turnover of exploration acreage which remains unworked for long periods. In the coming weeks, I shall be discussing my proposals with the oil industry and with other interested bodies. The timing of the formal invitation to apply will be determined in the light of the outcome of these consultations.

DEFENCE

RAF Bases (Use by United States Forces)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will place in the Library copies of the lines of communication arrangement 1973 and the memorandum of understanding on the use of Royal Air Force bases by United States air forces operational units 1974, including all subsequent alterations and amendments.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. The US-UK lines of communication arrangement 1973 and the memorandum of understanding on the use of RAF bases by US Air Force operational units 1974 are classified.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost since the surrender of the Argentine forces of the United Kingdom military presence on the Falkland Islands, including military infrastructure costs, expressed (a) in cash terms and (b) as a per capita sum for the permanent population of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The additional cost of maintaining a garrison in the Falkland Islands from April 1983 to the end of the last financial year is estimated to be £1,425 million in cash terms, or about £700,000 per Falkland Islander. Figures for 1982-83 do not distinguish between campaign and garrison costs.

Bangladesh

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if military training has been given to officers of the Bangladeshi military who have been involved in violations of human rights in the Chittagon area; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will withdraw all military training facilities from members of the Bangladeshi armed forces in the light of human rights violations perpetrated by them in the Chittagon area.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. While I understand that some Bangladeshi officers trained with the help of the British military advisory team (BMAT) at the Bangladesh defence services command and staff college have been appointed to the division covering the Chittagong hill tracts, nothing in the United Kingdom's military training assistance to Bangladesh could encourage any abuse of human rights. On the contrary, the strong emphasis on fairness and restraint given by the BMAT can only help inculcate high ethical standards in the students and, indeed, the college training as a whole emphasises these standards in line with the British military tradition.

Belize

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any logistical or other assistance (a) has been, (b) is being or (c) will be given by United Kingdom armed forces in Belize to the United States troops recently deployed in Honduras.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No such assistance has been or is being given, and we do not intend that it should be.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Court of Justice

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions when the United Kingdom has been party to cases at the European Court of Justice (a) as a respondent in cases initiated by the Commission of the Community, (b) as a respondent or plaintiff in respect of other member states and (c) in other cases.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures since United Kingdom accession are:

(a) 23 under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty
(b) 1 under Article 170 of the EEC Treaty
(c) 16 under Article 173 of the EEC Treaty
(a) and (c) include cases still in progress.

Details of these cases are given in the relevant chapter or annex of the six-monthly White Paper on "Developments in the European Community".

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the number of rulings of the European Court of Justice which effectively determine case law in what would otherwise be within domestic jurisdiction since the accession of the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Chalker: I assume that the hon. Member's question refers to references to the European Court of Justice under article 177 of the EEC treaty. There have been 76 such references from United Kingdom courts up to the end of February 1988.

Article 177 references are concerned with the interpretation of Community law. The interpretation of Community law given by the European Court of Justice is applied by the national court in deciding the case before it.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what indications there have been in recent years of the increased work load of the European Court of Justice.

Mrs. Chalker: The number of cases brought before the European Court of Justice in a year has risen from 79 in 1970 to 329 in 1986. The number of cases brought in a year more than doubled from 202 in 1979 to 433 in 1985.

Commonwealth Secretariat

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish any instructions and directives from Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom acting together with other Commonwealth Governments setting out the functions of the Secretary General of the Commonwealth Secretariat.

Mrs. Chalker: The functions of the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth Secretariat and his staff are set out in the "Agreed Memorandum on the Commonwealth Secretariat", which was approved by Commonwealth Prime Ministers at their meeting in London from 17 to 25 June 1965 (Cmnd. 2713).

As provided for in the Memorandum, these have been added to by subsequent decisions of Commonwealth Heads of Government and Ministers, particularly in respect of the Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation, the Commonwealth Science Council and the Commonwealth youth programme, which are administratively part of the secretariat, but which are covered by separate memoranda of understanding. I am arranging for copies of these memoranda to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

British Embassy, Vientiane

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, following the recent visit of the Laos deputy Foreign Minister, he has plans to re-open the British embassy at Vientiane.

Mr. Eggar: We have no plans at present to do so. The economic considerations which led to closure in 1985 still apply. Her Majesty's ambassador in Bangkok, who is also accredited to Laos, and other members of the embassy visit Vientiane on a regular basis.

European Court of First Instance

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the main area of operation of the new European Court of First Instance; and whether its decisions will be limited to points of law.

Mrs. Chalker: Under article 3 of the draft decision, the European Court of Justice proposes to transfer to the Court of the First Instance its jurisdiction in cases concerned with staff matters, competition and anti-dumping, steel and certain non-contractual liability claims. The Court of the First Instance will decide both facts and law; appeals to the European Court of Justice will be limited to points of law.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the additional cost of establishing a European Court of First Instance; and how many persons are likely to be employed by it.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Court has estimated that the proposal for a court comprising seven judges would cost £210,000 in new equipment and add £3·15 million to the annual budget of the court. A final position on the total number of judges of the court has not yet been reached. It is not possible at this stage to say how many staff will be employed by the Court of First Instance alone. It seems likely that some staff now employed by the Court of Justice would be attached to the Court of First Instance.

IRA Terrorists (Gibraltar)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received from the Spanish authorities on the surveillance and eventual killing of the three suspected Irish Republican Army terrorists in Gibraltar.

Mr. Mellor: It is not our practice to comment on such matters, though as my right hon. and learned Friend said in the House on 7 March, we are grateful for the invaluable assistance we have received from the Spanish authorities in preventing a dreadful terrorist attack.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government have any plans to increase the accountability of parents and guardians for offences caused by persons under the age of 17 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Parents are not responsible in law for criminal offences committed by their children. Where juveniles are convicted of a criminal offence the courts are required (except in certain circumstances) to order their parents or guardians to pay any fines or other financial penalties that may be imposed. The Criminal Justice Bill extends this requirement to fines imposed as a sanction for breach of supervision orders and community service orders.

Juveniles (Detention)

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sentenced and (b) remanded juveniles were held in police or court cells during 1987, and how many since the beginning of 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information is not available in the form requested. Records held centrally do not distinguish between juveniles and other young persons, or between sentenced and unsentenced prisoners.

Prisoners (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of his Department's most recent statistics on the prison population and ethnic minorities, he intends (a) to issue any guidance to prison governers and (b) to make available any additional training for prison staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Guidance on race relations is issued to prison governors from time to time, most recently in circular instruction 32/1986, a copy of which is in the Library. Further guidance will be issued as necessary. We are planning a review of race relations training for prison staff which will look, among other matters, at the form and quantity of training presently offered.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 3, if he will list by Civil Service grade the number of officials in his Department located outside London.

Mr. Hurd: Home Office staff in the following grades serve outside London:

Metropolitan Police (Report)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to secure the publication of the report conducted by officers of the Northamptonshire police into the conduct of the Metropolitan police at Wapping on 24 January 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Such reports are always treated as confidential. The commission will consult the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Police Complaints Authority in due course on whether criminal or disciplinary proceedings should be taken against any police officer on the basis of the report.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates of visits by his Department's inspectors to Professor Ian Steele-Russell's animal laboratories in the last five years, along with the main findings of these visits.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not our practice to disclose information of this nature. However, all establishments where licensed experimentation is carried out are visited frequently by inspectors, usually unannounced.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals have been used by Professor Ian Steele-Russell in the last five years; if he will list the species used and the experimental procedures used; and to what extent anaesthesia was used.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not our practice to disclose such information about experimentation specific to individual researchers or establishments which has been provided to us in confidence.

Ian Richard Thain

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations took place with the trial judge regarding parole for Ian Richard Thain; what were the channels for such consultations; what were the dates on which the judge was consulted; and if he will outline the views which the judge offered.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The views of the trial judge were received in July 1986. In accordance with the normal procedure in the cases of all life sentence prisoners transferred from Northern Ireland to this country to serve their sentences, the approach to the trial judge was made through the Northern Ireland Office. The views of the judiciary in life sentence cases are given in confidence.

Fire Prevention (Kent)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all outstanding initial, reinspection and routine fire prevention inspections for private residential homes in Kent expressed in officer man years for the last recorded year.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally. I have ascertained from the Kent fire brigade that during 1987, 65 full inspections, 568 specific, 229 follow-up and 250 routine inspections were made of the 809 homes for old persons, the disabled and mentally handicapped and nursing homes in the county. These figures do not distinguish between homes financed privately and by local authorities. Such inspections are undertaken on an advisory basis in co-operation with the responsible authorities and the brigade determines its own policy in making them. The question of outstanding inspections does not, accordingly, arise.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all outstanding initial, reinspection and routine fire prevention inspections in Kent expressed in officer man years for the last recorded year.

Mr. John Patten: Fire prevention inspections are required statutorily only when an application for a fire certificate for premises designated under the Fire Precautions Act 1971 is made to the fire authority. During 1987, 238 certificates were issued by the Kent fire brigade and at the end of the year 2,991 certificates were in force for such premises. A further 1,646 certificates issued under the Factories Act 1961 and the Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act 1963 were also in force. I have ascertained from the brigade that at the end of 1987 the issue of 492 certificates was outstanding on premises that had been inspected and 289 premises were awaiting inspection. Figures are not available centrally to express outstanding inspections in officer man years.

Conservative Party Meeting (Policing Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding the costs of policing the meeting of the central council of the Conservative party held in Harrogate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The last meeting of the National Union of Conservative and Unionist Associations Central Council was held at Buxton in Derbyshire on 18-19 March. I understand from the chief constable of Derbyshire that the estimated additional costs of policing the meeting were in the region of £200,000. Under the normal arrangements 51 per cent. of this expenditure will be met from central funds.

Firearms (Police)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of operations in which firearms were issued to police officers in England and Wales in 1987; in how many of those operations shots have been fired by police officers; how many police officers are currently qualified to carry firearms; and what were the equivalent figures for (a) 1986 and (b) 1983.

Mr. Hurd: The number of operations in England and Wales, against criminals or those known or believed to be armed, in which firearms were issued to police officers in 1987 was 2,101. This was 14·35 per cent. fewer than in 1986 and 33·93 per cent. fewer than in 1983. Police officers fired shots in seven, or 0·003 per cent. of those operations. The number of such operations in which shots were fired by police officers in the preceding four years was three in 1983; six in 1984; seven in 1985; and one in 1986. As at 31 December 1987 a total of 7,349 police officers in England and Wales were qualified to carry firearms. This was 12·46 per cent. fewer than at the end of 1986 and 43·66 per cent. fewer than at the end of 1983. The latest figures represents 5·99 per cent. of the total police strength in England and Wales.

ENVIRONMENT

Environment Council

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 21 March.

Mr. Moynihan: My hon. Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Water represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

The Council adopted a resolution on the close of the European Year of the Environment which emphasised the need for continued efforts on environmental information and awareness. Notwithstanding disappointment that some important proposals had not yet been adopted, there was general agreement that the year had stimulated many and varied environmental achievements.

The Council reached agreement on a directive to control discharge of chloroform to the aquatic environment, in particular those from significant industrial sources. In connection with this agreement and at the United Kingdom's request, the Commission undertook to bring to the Council at an early date proposals for drawing up a list of the most dangerous substances for future priority consideration. A proposal for a directive to co-ordinate controls over discharges of chromium to the aquatic environment was also discussed. Due to divergences of opinion among member states the Council failed to agree draft guidelines put forward by the presidency for further work on harmonising national programmes for reducing pollution caused by waste from the titanium oxide industry.

A general welcome was given to the Commission's recently published proposals for ratification and implementation of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. It was hoped that the proposed regulation on Communitywide measures could be adopted in June.

Discussion of the large combustion plants directive focussed on the emission standards proposed for new combustion plant and, in particular, the size threshold above which such standards would apply. It was necessary for my hon. Friend to stress that the German presidency's "compromise" proposals were unrealistic and represented a step backwards from those recently presented by the Danish presidency. Although my hon. Friend was ready to discuss the new plant standards and the requirements for reductions from existing plants, the presidency decided not to discuss anything further. Thus it was not possible to make progress at the Council, although my hon. Friend and I look forward to more constructive discussions with the presidency in the near future.

The Council had an initial discussion of the Commission's recent proposal for standards for emissions from small cars, as required by directive 88/76/EEC (the "Luxembourg Package"). My hon. Friend made a statement welcoming a proposal to establish a European standard for replacement silencers for motor cycles.

Further discussion of a proposal to establish a five-year Communitywide programme of projects illustrating how actions in the environment field might contribute to employment led to an undertaking by the Commission to consider alternative methods of financing such a programme.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless people in England and Wales have previously been admitted to mental hospitals; and what this figure represents as a percentage of the total number of homeless persons.

Mrs. Roe: This specific information is not available centrally. It is estimated, however, that in 1987 English local authorities accepted responsibility for accommodating about 2,300 households who they judged to be in priority need, on the grounds of some mental illness or handicap. This amounts to some 2 per cent. of all those accepted in priority need. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has responsibility for these matters as they affect the Principality.

House Purchase (Searches)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to abolish local authority searches for house buyers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Apart from searches of local land charges registers, maintained by local authorities under a duty imposed by the Local Land Charges Act 1975, the system of local authority searches is not statutory. The present system has been agreed between the Law Society and the local authority associations in response to the demands of conveyancers and their clients.

Local Authority Houses

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will update the information provided in his answer to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) on 13 July 1987, Official Report, columns 387-88, concerning the sale of empty local authority dwellings to private developers.

Mrs. Roe: The most recent information available is given in the table. The earlier reservations about the comprehensiveness of the figures still apply. The table should not, therefore, be compared directly with the earlier one.

Rating Reform

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton, Official Report, column 1096, 16 March concerning the community charge, if he will place in the Library the preliminary estimates to which he referred.

Mr. Howard: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking the exemption from the poll tax of overseas students and their dependents during the duration of their course of studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: We have received a number of representations concerning overseas students. All full-time students—including those from overseas—will be liable to pay only 20 per cent. of the personal community charge.

Howbury Grange/Dartford North Marshes

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to announce the decision of the inquiry into the Howbury Grange/Dartford North Marshes development proposals.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 25 February at column 269.

Green Belt

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report recent correspondence between himself and others regarding planning in the green belt.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am today putting in the Library copies of my right hon. Friend's recent exchange of correspondence with my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine).

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the planning procedures necessary for the establishment of a mink farm.

Mr. Waldegrave: The use of land for agriculture, including mink farming, does not require planning permission. At present a general permission is given to many farm buildings and agricultural operations on land by the General Development Order. In national parks and some adjoining areas, this is modified to give planning authorities discretionary control over the siting, design and external appearance of farm and forestry buildings and roads. In revising the GDO later this year, we propose to require specific permission for new livestock units within 400 m of most buildings. When planning permission is required for agricultural or any other development, applications should be made to the local planning authority, which should consider each case on its individual merits.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications are currently pending for the establishment of mink farms in England.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no information on the number or type of planning applications awaiting determination by local planning authorities.

Homelessness

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take further steps to tackle the problems of homelessness.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. I am concerned to look at further action to help homeless people to reduce their dependence, especially in London, on bed and breakfast. It is unacceptable for there to be large numbers of properties built with public funds standing empty on communities with homeless people. These properties must be brought back into use. Authorities and housing associations must seek the best use of their stock; and help people in the greatest housing need. I can now announce three important initiatives to help both objectives. I want to see authorities and associations take up this challenge urgently.

First, additional resources of £28·1 million will be made available to local authorities in the financial year 1988-89. This is part of the £58·1 million increase in DOE cash limits arising from local authority underspend announced today by my right hon. Friend. These resources will be targeted on those authorities where homelessness pressures are most acute. Our main purpose in making these extra resources available is to reduce the number of households, in particular families, temporarily accommodated in bed and breakfast.

It is indefensible that so many families are forced to live in bed and breakfast accommodation at severe, continuous cost to the public purse whilst well over 100,000 local authority properties lie empty. It is a particular scandal that 28,000 properties, almost three times the number of households in bed and breakfast, have been empty for more than a year.

These extra resources will help provide additional accommodation for the homeless by getting local authority empty properties refurbished and back into use; and by supporting housing association projects of a similar kind. Bids will shortly be invited from local authorities for these additional resources which will then be distributed through the Department's regional offices.

Second, there are housing association dwellings standing empty and uninhabitable for lack of necessary major repair work. This problem arises when the properties were originally developed with local authority money, but the authority has refused to fund the repairs. In exceptional cases of this kind, the Housing Corporation is already authorised to provide funding. I have now decided to relax the rules so that the corporation may step in wherever the authority is genuinely unable to fund the repair work, on condition that, after repairs, the dwellings are let to homeless people.

Third, we have decided to bring forward specific legislation to allow local authorities, with the consent of the Secretary of State, to make payments to help tenants to buy in the private sector, thus creating vacancies for reletting. Evaluation of the schemes operated by the London boroughs of Brent and Bromley (under general powers) have shown that incentive payments can provide a cost-effective means of securing a useful number of vacancies for letting to those in bed and breakfast accommodation or on waiting lists; and they can help more families to achieve owner-occupation, by giving modest assistance. Schemes of assistance will generally be appropriate only where there are serious problems of homelessness and other measures cannot supply the answer. Authorities proposing schemes will be expected to establish suitable limits on the amount offered to individual tenants and to target assistance on tenants who could not afford to buy unaided. This proposal will help local authorities make more effective use of the stock in housing people in need.

Cash Limits

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of outturn in the current year on the DOE-LA1 cash limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The DOE-LA1 cash limit covers capital expenditure and receipts by local authorities in England on education, housing, transport, personal social services, and other services. On the basis of local authorities' third quarter expenditure returns, the cash limit is forecast to be underspent by about £750 million in 1987-88, similar to the forecast based on first and second quarter returns. The underspend is caused by capital receipts being substantially higher than forecast before the year.

Under the relevant end year flexibility arrangements, the DOE-LA1 cash limit for 1988-89 will be increased in due course by £141·7 million — five per cent. of the 1987-88 cash limit, provided that fourth quarter returns confirm an underspend of at least that size.

I and my colleagues responsible for services within the DOE-LA1 cash limit will therefore be making additional capital allocations for 1988-89. We propose to issue £100 million of these shortly, and a further £41·7 million when local authorities' budget returns for 1988-89 are available, provided these returns do not lead to a forecast overspend against the revised cash limit.

The sum available for my Department's services from the £100 million is £58·1 million. I propose to hold back a £5 million reserve to cover any claims for storm damage expenditure in 1988-89 on DOE services. I will be making allocations of £25 million to local authorities towards capital expenditure necessary to prepare for collection of the community charge, and my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning will be including details of £28·1 million extra capital allocations in an announcement he is making about housing matters today.

House of Commons (Works of Art)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reconstitution of the Committee to advise Mr. Speaker and himself on matters relating to works of art in the House.

Mr. Ridley: I am pleased to announce that Mr. Speaker and I have appointed a new advisory committee. There will continue to be nine members. They are my hon. Friends the Members for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack), for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price), for Salisbury (Mr. Key), for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) and for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) and the hon. Members for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Callaghan), for Warley East (Mr. Faulds), for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) and for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell). My hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South has agreed to be Chairman. The committee will hold its first meeting this month.

EMPLOYMENT

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently participating in the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: At the end of February 1988 there were 94,790 enterprise allowance scheme recipients.

ILO (Convention 131)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the United Kingdom has not ratified convention 131 of the International Labour Organisation.

Mr. Nicholls: International Labour Organisation convention 131 concerns "Minimum Wage Fixing with particular reference to Developing Countries". The convention was not ratified when first adopted in 1970, because, as its title indicates, it is specially directed at the situation in developing countries and its provisions were considered less appropriate to industrialised countries with a long tradition of determining wages by individual or collective bargaining. The present Government consider that wage determination is primarily a matter to be settled between employers and employees, and that ratification of the convention would not in any case be appropriate for the United Kingdom.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were out of work in the Eddisbury parliamentary constituency at the most recent count; and what were the figures in each of the last three years.

Mr. Lee: The following information is available from the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Eddisbury in February of each year since 1985. The comparison is slightly affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

Job Vacancies

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of notified job vacancies in each jobcentre covering the Tottenham constituency for each month since June 1979.

Mr. Lee: Tottenham constituency is covered by Tottenham jobcentre, but the information for Tottenham jobcentre is not separately available. Prior to April 1985, job vacancies in Tottenham and Edmonton jobcentre areas were notified to Wood Green jobcentre and combined with the Wood Green job vacancies. However, figures for Tottenham and Edmonton jobcentres combined are available from April 1985 and are as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Finance Bill

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Finance Bill will be published.

Mr. Major: The Finance Bill will be published on Thursday 14 April.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in the Official Report those commodities formerly, or currently, subject to zero value added tax rating, including all those in groups 1 to 17 listed in his note to the Select Committee on the Treasury and Civil Service and published by it on page 8 of its third report of Session 1987-88, (HC 248), in five separate tables to show items that (a) were zero-rated by Her Majesty's Government but have subsequently had their zero-rated status changed by virtue of actions taken, or requests made, by either the Court or the Commission of the European Economic Communities, (b) items currently the subject of infraction proceedings before the court of the European Economic Communities, (c) items currently zero-rated which have been the subject of specific pledges from Ministers concerning their continued zero-rated status, (d) other items of zero-rating subject to current proposals from the Commission of the Commission of the European Communities and (e) other zero-rated items not in categories (a) to (d) above, showing for each item in each table (a) to (d) the rate or band of rates applied, or proposed to be applied, together with the approximate annual revenue, or range of revenue, which has accrued or is likely to accrue to Her Majesty's Government, at 1988 prices for each category, with totals for each table and grand total, and in respect of table (c) footnote references to the respective principal pledge made.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 March 1988]: The information requested is given in the tables.

P-E Inbucon Report

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has now received from the National Museum of Wales its considered comments on the P-E Inbucon report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I received the museum's comments on 4 March. The museum's council has responded constructively and positively to the recommendations in the report. It has broadly accepted the recommendations, though with certain reservations. In particular, the council expresses concern that there should be the shortest possible delay in proceeding with the Cathays Park building project. My response makes clear that I have no intention of delaying matters longer than is necessary. I am placing a copy of the president's letter in the Library of the House, together with a copy of my reply. Officials will now engage in detailed discussion with the museum and draw up an action plan for the implementation of the recommendations. In that context we shall consider any case advanced by the museum for additional resources.

There is still a long way to go, but the council's response gives me confidence that the problems of the museum will be tackled expeditiously and effectively. Our common purpose is that the museum should be enabled to realise its full potential and take its proper place in the cultural life of the Principality.

Ethnic Monitoring

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the ethnic composition of staff in his Department; what is the total number of staff; and how many are (a) Welsh, (b) English and (c) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Peter Walker: A survey to provide information on the ethnic composition of staff in the Welsh Office will be carried out shortly as part of a phased programme of ethnic surveys across the Civil Service; the total number of staff is 2,204½ (full-time equivalents) who are not and will not be classified according to their country of origin within the United Kingdom.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those primary schools in Gwynedd which (a) have classes where Welsh is the sole or main medium of instruction of first or second language pupils, (b) have classes of first or second language pupils where some of the teaching is through the medium of Welsh and (c) teach no Welsh, or, where there are classes where Welsh is taught as a second language but not used as a teaching medium.

Hotels (Grading)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation is taking place on a scheme for hotel grading as a separate qualitative assessment from classification.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Wales Tourist Board has consulted all classified establishments, tourist associations, and local authorities in Wales. The board now intends to discuss with the industry the detailed implementation of the grading system it intends to introduce. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 22 March 1988 at column 52.

Loans and Grants

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects information for 1987 on loans and grants received by (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales to become readily available.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information for 1987 on all identifiable EC loans and grants received by Clwyd and by Wales will be available later this year.

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many mink farms currently operate in Wales; and what was the figure 12 months ago.

Mr. Peter Walker: One; nil.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the size and location of each mink farm currently operating in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Accommodation for 250 mink. Llanybydder, Dyfed.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many planning applications are currently pending for the establishment of mink farms in Wales.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many licences are current for the operation of mink farms in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. One application is under consideration in respect of a mink farm established in February 1988.

SCOTLAND

Bield Housing Association

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received recent representations from the Bield housing association regarding the level of public funding; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Mr. Alister Green, director of Bield Housing Association Ltd., wrote to me on 16 December, enclosing a copy of his association's annual report. He made particular reference to the level of funding for the provision of housing for the elderly.

Future provision of housing for the elderly within the public sector must be considered in the context of progress already made since 1979. In many districts provision now exceeds the widely used yardstick of 50 bed spaces per 1,000 elderly.

Officials from my Department are currently conducting research aimed at reassessing the requirement for specialised housing for the elderly. The results of that research will be fully taken into account in considering the future allocation of funds.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he received from the Scottish Special Housing Association the report on the results of its consultation with Scottish Special Housing Association tenants in Shetland;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the report submitted to him by the Scottish Special Housing Association on the consultation with Scottish Special Housing Association tenants in Shetland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Special Housing Association wrote to the Scottish Development Department on 12 February 1988 to explain its intentions in relation to the houses which they own in Shetland, in the light of the views expressed by their tenants. The letter was not primarily a report of the results of their consultation with their tenants, although it makes reference to the outcome. If the hon. Gentleman wishes to have specific information about the outcome of the consultation I suggest that it would be appropriate to direct his inquiry to the chairman of the association.

The association has decided not to withdraw from the ownership of houses in Shetland. Tenants who wish their houses to be sold to Hjaltland housing association will be free to continue discussions with that body. Houses which remain in the ownership of the Scottish Special Housing Association will continue to be managed on their behalf by Shetland islands council.

The Scottish Special Housing Association have written to all of their tenants in Shetland to notify them of these decisions. Shetland islands council, Hjaltland housing association and the Housing Corporation in Scotland have all been informed of the position.

Tree Felling

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will be taking any additional steps to monitor the amount of felling now that woodland profits are to be free of tax.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The felling of trees in Great Britain is controlled by the Forestry Commission in exercise of its powers under the Forestry Act 1967. Adequate arrangements are already in place for monitoring felling.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made as to whether felling licences will be sufficient to smooth the realisation of woodland profits in the light of the Budget tax proposals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is not aware of any reason why consideration of felling licence applications should be influenced by the changes in forestry taxation announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless persons in Scotland have previously been admitted to mental hospitals; and what this figure represents as a percentage of the total number of homeless persons in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

In the year 1986-87, about 250 applicant households in priority need had a household member vulnerable because of mental handicap or mental illness. This represents approximately 2 per cent. of homeless households.

Historic Building Grants

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of historic building grants which have recently been allocated within Angus district; and what proportion the grants are of the total allocated within Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For the three most recent financial years, the information requested is as follows:

	Angus district	Total for Scotland
	£	£	Percentage
1985-86	193,800	4,287,000	4·5
1986-87	56,900	3,809,000	1·5
[1]1987-88	339,000	6,000,000	5·7

[1] Provisional.

Education Expenditure

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of spending in Tayside on (a) primary education, (b) secondary education, (c) further education and (d) nursery education was met by Government grant and what proportion was met by the regional council in each year since 1979; and what were the respective cash figures for each category at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible to provide a breakdown as requested. Government grant in respect of local authority relevant expenditure, aggregate Exchequer grant, is composed of specific grants and the rate support grant. There are no specific grants available to finance any one of the broad categories of expenditure specified. RSG, by far the largest element of AEG, is paid in support of local authorities' revenue generally and is not hypothecated to individual services. It is not therefore possible to express RSG as a proportion of expenditure on particular services.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many shotgun licences and firearm certificates were issued within the Dundee area within the last eight years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics of the issue and renewal of shotgun and firearms certificates are recorded only on a police area basis. Tayside police statistics are not compiled on a way which would enable separate figures to be given for the Dundee area.

Free School Meals

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children in (a) Dundee and (b) Tayside region are currently in receipt of free school meals; and how many he estimates will lose this entitlement from April.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details regarding school meals are collected centrally on a regional basis and information taken from the 1987 census indicates that 7,921 pupils in Tayside region were in receipt of free meals. This figure is not broken down by entitlement, but it is estimated that supplementary benefit recipients, for whom the position will not change, represent about 70 per cent. of those receiving free meals. The remainder, who benefit because their parents are in receipt of family income supplement or by virtue of the authorities discretion will lose their entitlement, but, because the children's rates of family credit will take account of the cost of school meals, I expect that, overall, more pupils will benefit under the new arrangements.

Tayside Health Board

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Tayside health board regarding the authority's financial difficulties and suggesting the need for extra funds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No representations have been received this year.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the 1986-87 half-yearly overspend or underspend position of the Tayside health board broken down into districts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the expenditure of Tayside health board's units is not available centrally.

Housing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give his estimate of how many houses in the Dundee district authority area are below the statutory tolerable standards; and how many of those (a) lack one or more of the basic amenities and (b) lack a fixed bath or shower.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The most recent available information is set out in the table, which gives the numbers of dwellings below the statutory tolerable standard in the area of the city of Dundee district council and, of those, the numbers lacking one or more of the standard amenities (sink, hot water and inside WC). It also shows the numbers lacking a fixed bath or shower.

Dwellings below tolerable standard at 31 March 1986[1]

	Number
Number of dwellings below tolerable standard	1,470
Lacking one or more standard amenity[2]	1,470
Lacking a fixed bath or shower[2]	1,426

[1] Information on dwellings below tolerable standard is collected annually from local authorities. The latest figures available from Dundee district council are as at 31 March 1986.

[2] A dwelling may be recorded in both of these columns and there is therefore an element of double counting.

Heart Surgery

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of children currently waiting for heart surgery at each regional centre for heart operations in Scotland; and what is the average longest waiting time.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

	Glasgow	Edinburgh
Number of children (under 16yrs old) on waiting list[1]	35	16
Mean wait in days	77	145
Longest wait in days	569	267

[1] At 14 March 1988.

Rating Reform

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the constituencies of Scotland ranked according to the percentage of (a) losers and (b) gainers under the poll tax proposals, showing those percentages alongside that ranking; and if he will express these figures for both households and individuals.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available by constituency.

Pay Beds

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of pay beds available in the Tayside health board area on the latest available date; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table.

Year	Number of Authorised Pay beds
1979	5
1980	5
1981	5
1982	39

[1] Year	Number of Authorised Pay beds
1983	[3]9
1984	[3]9
1985	[3]9
1986	[3]9
1987	[4]9
[2]1988	[4]9

[1] As at 31 December.
[2] As at 23 March.
[3] Plus 2 emergency beds.
[4] Plus 4 emergency beds.

Tourism

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to assist the tourist industry in Dundee.

Mr. Lang: The Government, through their sponsor bodies, are already fully involved in promoting the development of Dundee's tourist industry. These bodies are always willing to provide assistance, advice and encouragement for worthwhile projects. The prime current example of Government activity is the Scottish Development Agency's participation in the work of the Dundee project in facilitating tourist-related developments at the waterfront site such as the RRS Discovery visitor centre. In addition, assistance has been provided to a number of projects, including the Stakis Earl Grey hotel, and the Scottish tourist board provides financial support for the City of Dundee tourist board.

YTS

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many YTS trainees in Dundee left the scheme to enrol in another scheme run by a different employer or a different managing agent in the current year.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the form requested.

Data are however available from a 100 per cent. survey carried out in the Grampian and Tayside area of all trainees who had left YTS schemes between April 1986 and September 1987. The response rate was just over 50 per cent. Of those 3,912 young people who replied, 530 (13.5 per cent.) had rejoined a YTS scheme. It is not possible to ascertain in any case whether the young person went to a different employer or managing agent.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in Dundee have had a benefit penalty applied to them by an adjudication officer for refusing to enter a YTS course or for leaving a YTS course early, for each month since the scheme began.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the form requested.

In the city of Dundee for the period from 1 April 1987 to 22 March 1988, a total of 204 young people have had a benefit penalty applied by an adjudicating officer either for refusing a YTS course or for leaving one early.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the number of years for which restrictions will be necessary on sheep movement in parts of Cumbria, following radioactive fallout after the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to my replies of 8 and 15 February at columns 62 and 467 respectively and to the reply given by my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary in another place on 8 February at columns 94-95.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many injunctions have been applied for and granted to restrain the Milk Marketing Board from transferring milk quota originally belonging to a producer in receivership to the new occupier in each year since 1984.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There have been none.

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many mink farms currently operate in England; and what was the figure 12 months ago;

(2) if he will give details of the licensing arrangements necessary for the establishment and operation of a mink farm;

(3) how many licences are current for the operation of mink farms in England.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As at 24 March there were 48 licences for the farming of mink in force in England. These licences covered 49 farms. One of these farms has ceased to keep mink and the licence expires this month. A year ago the number of farms licensed was 44.

Under the Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932 and The Mink (Keeping) Order 1987, the appropriate Department may at its discretion issue a licence for the keeping of mink except in certain areas of Great Britain specified in the Order. The fee, currently £115, and the manner in which mink are to be confined are specified in The Mink (Keeping) Regulations 1975 as amended by The Mink (Keeping) (Amendments) Regulations of both 1982 and 1987. Before a licence is issued the premises are inspected and an assessment made of the likely impact on farming and wildlife if mink were to escape from captivity.

Meat and Poultry (Hormones)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that no meat or poultry, in the production of which hormones have been used, is made available for sale to the British consumer without bearing a clear label indicating the fact.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My hon. Friend may be aware that the use of hormone growth promoters for fattening purposes has been prohibited in the United Kingdom since 1 December 1986.

In the light of this I do not believe that the labelling of meat or poultry would provide any further safeguard for consumers.

Irradiated Foods

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take following the announcement on 4 February that the Government accept the advice of the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods on the safety and wholesomeness of irradiated foods.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It may be that this technology, if properly controlled and applied may offer real health and economic benefits for the consumer in some food areas where the alternatives are not as safe or effective in ensuring keeping food sound and wholesome. However, we must look carefully at how this might be achieved in a controlled and phased manner before we can consider lifting the current ban on the use of irradiation on food in the United Kingdom.

I have therefore asked officials to report before the end of the year. I have particularly asked for advice on the criteria for assessing applications to use irradiation, what conditions might be imposed in giving any such permission including consideration of the availability of detection tests, arrangements for licensing and inspection of food irradiation plants, the monitoring of the extent of use of food irradiation, and a complete consumer information programme including appropriate food labelling provisions. In drawing up advice officials will take into account the sorts of controls that are applied by those countries, which includes some our European partners, where food irradiation is permitted.

We shall not make any proposals to amend or adjust the current general prohibition without the full public consultation required by the Food Acts.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate has been made of the additional cost of housing benefit from 1 April if it were given to those whose savings did not exceed £10,000 instead of the £6,000 proposed.

Mr. Portillo: The cost would be substantial. Precise estimates would depend on the nature of changes to the "tariff income" structure that currently operates for capital holdings between £3,000 and £6,000. The cost would of course be even higher if the capital limits for income support and family credit were increased in the same way in order to maintain the alignment of rules between the three benefits, which is an important achievement of the social security reforms.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of claimants whose housing benefit is delayed with his Department's Dundee offices.

Mr. Portillo I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many claimants of housing benefit in Dundee he estimates will receive lower benefits from April; (2) what is his estimate of how many pensioners in Dundee now receiving housing benefit will lose rights after the change in the social security system in April.

Mr. Portillo I regret that information relating to loss of housing benefit is not available for individual local authority areas.

Human Organs

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the National Health Service or any Government agency imports any human organs for transplant work in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The United Kingdom transplant service has reciprocal arrangements for organ exchange with similar organisations in other European countries. It also has an arrangement with the federally recognised organ exchange agency in the United States, the United Network for Organ Sharing, under which cadaveric kidneys surplus to United States requirements may be used to help patients in the United Kingdom.

Imported organs accounted for a very small proportion of the total transplants carried out in the United Kingdom. In the calendar year 1987, the following organs were sent from Europe:

Kidneys—6
Livers—4
Hearts and heart/lungs—13

(These figures exclude reciprocal arrangements with Dublin, which is served by the United Kingdom transplant service as if it were a United Kingdom centre).

Imports of kidneys under the arrangements with the United Network for Organ Sharing totalled 29 in the last quarter of 1987.

Elderly Patients

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the proportion of hospital beds occupied by patients who are (a) over 65 years and under 75 years and (b) over 75 years in Sunderland district health authority and the Northern regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available information is given in the table.

Estimated Percentage of In-Patients Occupying Beds in National Health Service Hospitals in 1985

	Patients aged 65-74 years	Patients aged 75 years and over
Northern Regional Health Authority	18	35
Sunderland District Health Authority	21	35

Air Conditioning and Ventilation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what public health policy initiatives he proposes to take in the light of the report on air conditioning and ventilation analysis by ACVA Inc., a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: As I and my noble Friend have explained when writing to my hon. Friend, the Government are actively reviewing current knowledge and research (including a major United Kingdom study, now published, which has been carried out by a private company). The report to which my hon. Friend refers is a useful addition to the literature.

There is increasing awareness of the opportunities offered by, and the problems associated with, air conditioning and ventilation. It would be premature to take any policy initiatives before these reviews have been completed.

South Cumbria Health Authority

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes in front-line staff in South Cumbria district health authority have been achieved over the last five years for which figures are available in both numbers and percentages.

Mrs. Currie: Between 30 September 1982 and 30 September 1986, front-line staff in South Cumbria district health authority increased by 88 whole-time equivalents (from 1,288 to 1,376) or by 6·9 per cent.

Crewe, Chester and Halton Health Authorities

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of (a) physiotherapists, (b) speech therapists, (c) radiographers, (d) chiropodists, (e) occupational therapists, (f) dieticians and (g) laboratory technicians employed by (i) the Crewe health authority, (ii) the Chester health authority and (iii) the Halton health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were treated in each specialty in (a) the Crewe, (b) the Chester and (c) the Halton health districts in 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Information about the numbers of patients using hospital beds will in future be available for financial years. Information about completed episodes of hospital care for 1987-88 are expected by late summer this year.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current waiting lists for (a) examinations, (b) operations and (c) beds in each speciality in each hospital in (i) the Crewe, (ii) the Chester and (iii) the Halton health district.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 8 March, at columns 176-7.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the projected levels of funding for the next three years for (a) the Crewe, (b) the Chester and (c) the Halton health districts, expressing year-on-year changes as a percentage in both cash and real terms.

Mrs. Currie: The funding of Crewe, Chester and Halton health authorities is a matter for the Mersey regional health authority. I understand that the region will be issuing revised financial guidelines to districts soon, and my hon. Friend may care to contact the regional chairman for this information.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the bed occupancy rates in each specialty in each hospital in (a) the Crewe, (b) the Chester and (c) the Halton health districts in 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Information about bed availability and bed occupancy is not yet centrally available for 1987. The information which will form part of the new information set recommended by the steering group on health services information will be available later this year and will relate to the financial year 1987-88. Data on bed usage will in future relate to ward classification rather than specialty and will reflect the number of unfinished ward stays at a specific point in time which will assist in estimating daily bed usage.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of staff employed by each office of his Department in the Tottenham constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The Tottenham constituency is served by only Tottenham local office. The most recent available information regarding staffing levels at social security local offices relates to 1 March 1988. The numbers of staff in post at Tottenham office on that date, and corresponding figures for previous years are as follows:

Date	Number
1 April 1979	148
1 March 1980	144
1 March 1981	151
1 March 1984	177
1 March 1985	179·5
1 March 1986	185·5
1 March 1987	202·5
1 March 1988	210·5

For 1979 only, the number given relates to 1 April as records of staffing at individual local offices prior to that date have not been retained. I regret I am unable to provide information for 1982 and 1983 as the relevant records have been destroyed in a fire.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the number of supplementary benefit claimants in each of his Department's offices covering the Tottenham constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

Tottenham Local Office

Date	Number of people receiving supplementary benefit
27 November 1979	9,328
2 December 1980	10,271
9 December 1981	12,978

6 December 1983	15,124
12 December 1984	16,083
11 December 1985	17,237
10 December 1986	18,073
17 November 1987	17,235

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

The constituency of Tottenham is served by the Tottenham local office, but their boundaries are not conterminous.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many households in December 1985, December 1986 and December 1987 were having weekly deductions made from their supplementary benefit for electricity and how many for gas (a) under £2 per week and (b) in each £1 band above £2 per week up to £30 per week.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not held for the dates requested. However, the annual statistical inquiry shows that in February 1986 supplementary benefit recipients were having deductions made from their weekly benefit for electricity and gas as follows:

Bands (£)	Electricity	Gas
0·01 to 2·00	4,164	2,465
2·01 to 3·00	9,268	3,938
3·01 to 4·00	10,403	6,405
4·01 to 5·00	16,681	10,820
5·01 to 6·00	18,046	15,514
6·01 to 7·00	17,873	16,913
7·01 to 8·00	19,462	19,986
8·01 to 9·00	15,982	16,359
9·01 to 10·00	12,663	13,161
10·01 to 11·00	10,739	9,275
11·01 to 12·00	10,558	6,415
12·01 and over	32,667	10,528

Information is not readily available for separate £1 bands over £12·01 per week.

Pensioners

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners currently in receipt of supplementary benefit will receive a transitional addition after 11 April.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that some 650,000 claimants who are, or whose partner is, aged 60 years and over will receive a transitional addition at 11 April.

Social Fund Officers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether each office of his Department has now recruited its quota of social fund officers.

Mr. Portillo: Social fund officers are existing departmental staff who have been redeployed from other duties. They form an integral part of the complement of each local office, but no central record is kept of how each manager deploys his available staff resources.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what training has been given to his Department's social fund officers.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 15 December 1987 at column 483-4.

Infant Mortality

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the results of his consultations with medical experts on the rise in infant mortality in 1986.

Mrs. Currie: As indicated by officials to the Select Committee on Social Services, we have not yet received any report of these consultations which are continuing. We shall consider whether further action is necessary once we receive their views.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further plans he has to publicise the need for cancer screening; what funds are currently available for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Personal invitations sent to women due for screening, followed by reminders both to women who do not respond and to their GPs, are the most effective single way of publicising cancer screening to those who need it. Health education activity in support of the cervical and breast cancer screening programmes will be carried out by the Health Education Authority within its overall budget next year of over £10 million. The HEA among others will be publicising the European code against cancer—which recommends regular cervical smears and, for women over 50, mammography—during EC Cancer Week from 1-7 May 1988 and EC Cancer Year in 1989. Publicity on cancer screening is also given by the Women's national cancer control campaign, which receives an annual grant of £84,500 from the Department.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities which have set up a computerised call and recall system for cervical cancer and those which have not; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 March at column 344.

Northern Regional Health Authority

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage change in (a) National Health Service funding in real terms and in cash terms and (b) employment of medical staff, from 1979 to 1988 in the Northern regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: Following is expenditure information derived from the annual accounts of health authorities comprising the northern region for 1979-80 and 1986-87 (the latest year available):

	1979-80 £ million	1986-87 £ million
Total Expenditure
Cash terms	473·9	957·6
At 1986-87 prices	790·9	957·6
Increases	Per cent.	Per cent.
Cash terms	..	102·1
Real terms	..	21·1

Notes:

1 The figure for 1979-80 has been expressed at 1986-87 prices by the use of the Gross Domestic Product deflator.

2 The figures include expenditure on family practitioner services. Such expenditure cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions but has been assigned on a geographical basis from the annual accounts of the family practitioner committees which account for it.

3 The figures exclude expenditure by special health authorities, etc providing central services for the National Health Service and expenditure met centrally by the Department.

Information on hospital and community health services medical staff for 1979 and 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, is set out as follows:

HCHS medical staff at 30 September 1979[1] and 1986 wtes Northern region

Nurse-Patient Ratios

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the nurse-patient ratio in (a) the Sunderland district health authority and (b) the Northern regional health authority for each of the last nine years.

Mr. Newton: Such information as is available is shown in the table.

Due to the 1982 National Health Service reorganisation, figures on a consistent basis for years prior to 1982 are not available for Sunderland district health authority. Figures for Northern regional health authority have been given for the same years for comparison. Nursing and midwifery staff in post figures are a "snapshot" on 30 September whereas patient figures include in-patients, out-patients, day cases and emergencies aggregated over a calendar year.

Due to the differing methods of collection, any ratio calculated would therefore be crude and could be misleading. Staff and patient figures have therefore been presented separately.

General Practitioners (Worthing)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the number of general practitioners in the area covered by the Worthing district health authority in 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the corresponding increase or decrease in costs.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is collected from family practitioner committees which are not necessarily conterminous with health authority boundaries. The number of unrestricted general medical practitioners in the area covered by west Sussex family practitioner committee (which includes Worthing DHA) has risen from 294 at 1 October 1979 to 360 as at 1 October 1986, the latest date for which figures are available. Information about the corresponding change in costs is not available centrally.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of full-time equivalent posts dedicated solely or mainly to detect false social security claimants in (a) the Dundee area, (b) Scotland and (c) Great Britain as a whole; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Precise figures are not available but it is possible to estimate the numbers of full-time equivalent posts on the basis of records of staff time expended on fraud-related work. The numbers of full-time equivalent posts each year since 1979 have been as follows:

	Dundee area	Scotland	Great Britain
1979-80	—	285	2,311
1980-81	—	244	2,336
1981-82	—	261	2,346
1982-83	12	251	2,185
1983-84	13	246	2,211
1984-85	14	258	2,204
1985-86	13	256	2,285
1986-87	12	238	2,390
1987-88	14	313	2,724

The figures given for the Dundee area relate to the local offices at Dundee, East and Dundee, West. Data for those offices prior to 1982 are not available.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his estimate of (a) the amount recovered and (b) the amount illegally claimed but not recovered from social security claimants prosecuted in the Dundee area for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Information on which to base an estimate is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Supplementary Benefit Adjudication Officers

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many supplementary benefit adjudication officers in the Dundee area have less than six months' experience of adjudication work; and how many of these are section supervisors.

Mr. Portillo: There are no supplementary benefit adjudication officers in the two local offices in the Dundee area with less than six months' experience of adjudication work.

Income Support

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled claimants in Dundee will receive a lower entitlement under income support than they currently receive.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 23 March 1988.

Benefits

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide an estimate of (a) the number of claimants in Dundee benefiting from transitional protection in April, and (b) the number of claimants in Dundee expected to lose that protection by April 1989 by benefit upratings, assuming benefit upratings in line with the Chancellor of the Exchequer's inflation estimates in the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available for individual areas.

Rent Rebates and Allowances

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the gross income level, assuming standard rate of tax and national insurance, if applicable, at which (a) rent rebate or allowance and (b) rate rebate, will cease to be payable to (i) a single pensioner, (ii) a pensioner couple, (iii) a family whose head of household is in employment with one dependent child and (iv) a family whose head of household is in employment with two dependent children under the revised housing benefit scheme to be implemented in April 1988.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 3 December 1987]: The information is in the table and is based on the average local authority rent and rates.

	Housing Benefit from April 1988
	Rent	Rates	Level[1]	Level[2]
Single pensioner (under 80)	15·30	6·40	68·72	69·18

Married couple head working 1 child	17·10	7·20	110·21	112·17
Married couple head working 2 children	18·35	7·70	122·06	124·10

[2] Rate rebate ceases.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the gross income level at which (a) rent rebate or allowance and (b) rate rebate would cease to be payable to (i) a single pensioner, (ii) a pensioner couple, (iii) a family whose head of household is in employment with one dependent child and (iv) a family whose head of household is in employment with two dependent children who in each case is paying: (a) the average local authority rent and (b) the average local authority rate given a rent taper of 33 per cent.

Mr. Scott: [holding answer 3 December 1987]: The information is in the table.

Housing Benefit until 31 March 1987

	Rent	Rates	Level[1]	Level[2]
Single Pensioner	15·30	6·40	76·07	75·49

Local Caseloads (Report)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the full report carried out for his Department by the social policy research unit at York university on the caseloads of local offices of his Department;

(2) whether the research carried out by the social policy research unit at York university on behalf of his Department was based on a study of the caseload of a sample of local offices of his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether the study carried out by the social policy research unit at York university, on behalf of his Department, covered local offices in areas of particularly high unemployment and, specifically those offices serving Glasgow, Maryhill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The social policy research unit carries out a number of surveys for the Department. In particular the unit was commissioned to carry out two pieces of work to help with the development of policy on the social fund. One study consisted of a survey of applications for single payments in 1986. The survey covered 42 local offices in a representative sample of areas, some of which would have had above average unemployment. The sample included Glasgow (Southside) but not Glasgow (Maryhill).

The second study was concerned with the reasons for the variation in single payment expenditure between local offices.

Articles based on the work are in preparation. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library as they are produced.

Foetal and Genetic Abnormality (Screening)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to facilitate the establishment of screening and counselling services for foetal and genetic abnormality in districts where they are currently unavailable.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 7 March 1988]: Health authorities received some guidance on screening services in the maternity services advisory committee's reports. The decision on whether to offer screening and referral for specialist genetic advice is a matter for the clinician. In the light of recent developments of DNA techniques in diagnosis we are at present considering how genetic services which include counselling can best be provided within the NHS.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

10. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to invite the various legitimate Northern Ireland political parties to make common cause against terrorism and the Irish Republican Army.

Mr. Tom King: It is my policy to enlist the full support of the constitutional political parties in Northern Ireland for the Government's efforts to defeat terrorism, from whatever side of the community it may come.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

11. Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on reviewing the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: The review of the working of the Intergovernmental Conference provided for in article 11 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement is not due until November. It is too early to comment on what may emerge from the review.

16. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has received any representations from the Irish Government under the terms of the Anglo-Irish Agreement concerning the recent shootings in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

17. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what communication he has had recently with the Government of the Irish Republic on matters falling within the ambit of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

18. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the accuracy of the information conveyed by Her Majesty's Government to the world press to justify the shootings in Gibraltar is to be discussed with the Government of Ireland under the terms of the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: There has been continuing contact with the Government of the Irish Republic over a range of matters, including the attempted terrorist atrocity in Gibraltar, and subsequent events. The precise nature of communications on matters covered by the Anglo-Irish Agreement is generally confidential.

41. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current working of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: The institutions of the agreement are, I believe, working to the benefit of Anglo-Irish relations, and of the law-abiding people of Northern Ireland, and the agreement continues to provide a sound and valuable foundation for progress there.

Small Businesses

12. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further steps he plans to take to encourage small businesses.

Dr. Mawhinney: The local enterprise development unit plans to increase its job promotion target from just under 4,000 in the current year to 5,000 jobs in 1988-89.

Wages

14. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what monitoring procedures he intends to introduce to check the effects of the Wages (Northern Ireland) Order on the level of young persons' wages; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We shall not be introducing any specific monitoring procedures. The high minimum rates set by wages councils for young people in relation to often more experienced adult workers are prejudicial to their employment prospects and the effects of the Wages (Northern Ireland) Order can only be beneficial to young people.

Angling

15. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to exploit the potential of angling for the Northern Ireland tourist industry; what incentives are offered to attract anglers from Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: In Northern Ireland, angling, and in particular coarse angling, has always been regarded as one of the Province's most valuable tourist products. The promotion and marketing of coarse angling have attracted world-class match anglers to the Province's many sponsored competitions, not least the 1982 world championships. The incentives on offer include capital grants for the provision of sea angling boats and reduced price fishing licences for tourists.

Hospital Services, East Antrim

19. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he gave to representations from East Antrim general practitioners, Larne and Carrickfergus borough councils and the Moyle Action Committee when determining the future level of acute, accident emergency and maternity services to be provided at Whiteabbey, Carrickfergus and Moyle hospitals in East Antrim.

Mr. Needham: I have only recently received a lengthy and detailed submission on a number of issues from the Moyle hospital action committee and the other groups listed. I am considering the points they have put to me and will be replying to them shortly.

Prisoners (Policy)

20. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans to review his Department's policy towards the treatment of life prisoners and persons detained at the Secretary of State's pleasure who committed crimes before, or at, the age of 18 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend indicated our general attitude to Secretary of State pleasure cases in his reply to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) on 25 February at column 429. He has noted the views which have been expressed by elected representatives, Church leaders and others and is considering whether any special action is called for. No decision has yet been taken.

Health and Social Services

21. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to the draft proposals of the Province's four area health and social services boards for health services provision in 1988-89.

Mr. Needham: It would not be right for me to comment on draft proposals on which boards themselves have not yet taken decisions. Once boards have taken decisions on the proposals, they will be submitting revised operational plans which I shall discuss with chairmen when I hold the accountability reviews.

33. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the chairmen of the four area health and social services boards in Northern Ireland to discuss the future of the health services in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met the chairmen of the health and social services boards on 9 March 1988. At that meeting we had a full and frank discussion of the immediate problems facing boards and also of the ways in which we might seek to improve financial planning in the longer term. To assist boards to rationalise services and introduce revenue-saving measures and thus ease their current financial problems, I have decided to increase their capital allocations for 1988-89 by £5 million.

37. Mr. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to the proposals of the four area health and social services boards to cut services in order to meet Government cash limits.

Mr. Needham: It would not be right for me to comment on draft proposals on which boards themselves have not yet taken decisions.

Once boards have taken decisions on the proposals, they will be submitting revised operational plans which I shall discuss with chairmen when I hold the accountability reviews.

42. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had on additional funding for health and social services provision in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd).

44. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many representations he has received concerning the future of health and social services provision in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The future of the health and personal social services is an issue of constant debate in Northern Ireland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I continually receive representations, both formal and informal, on this subject.

46. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the chairmen of the four area health and social services boards in Northern Ireland to discuss the future of the health services in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met the chairmen of the health and social services boards on 9 March 1988.

At that meeting we had a full and frank discussion of the immediate problems facing boards and also of the ways in which we might seek to improve financial planning in the longer term. To assist boards to rationalise services and introduce revenue-saving measures and thus ease their current financial problems, I have decided to increase their capital allocations for 1988-89 by £5 million.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

22. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to announce the first environmentally sensitive areas in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I am pleased to say that my noble Friend, Lord Lyell, announced the formal designation of the Mourne Mountains and Slieve Croob environmentally sensitive area on Monday 21 March.

Security

23. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation.

34. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the current security situation.

36. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest security situation in Northern Ireland.

39. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation.

Mr. Tom King: I refer right hon. and hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Duffy).

30. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has recently received on matters relating to security in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I have regular and frequent meetings with the Chief Constable and the GOC. Since the beginning of this year this House has had the opportunity to debate the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts 1978 and 1987 (Continuance) Order 1988 and I have listened with interest to the views of the hon. Members on this and on other occasions. I have also had discussions with leading Northern Ireland politicians and Church leaders and attended four meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Chinese Community (Complaints)

24. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the disciplinary inquiry into complaints from the Chinese community in Northern Ireland against Royal Ulster Constabulary officers to be completed.

Mr. Stanley: I understand the investigation by the RUC is continuing, but it is not possible to say when it might be completed.

Harland and Wolff

25. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how he assesses the cost effectiveness of the shipbuilding subsidies paid to Harland and Wolff.

Mr. Stanley: Cost effectiveness is assessed by reference to factors such as cost per man year by comparison with the potential cost of creating alternative jobs; the restoration of long-term competitiveness particularly through improving productivity and the rationalisation of physical facilities; and the maintenance of employment elsewhere in the economy.

Police Officers (Discipline)

26. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Northern Ireland Police Authority's progress in considering disciplinary charges for police officers above the rank of chief superintendent, in the light of Sir Philip Myer's report.

Mr. Tom King: I understand that the police authority has received Sir Philip Myers' report and is now considering its contents. As I have already said I will keep the House informed of further developments.

Rating Reform

27. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the additional financial burden which will be placed on Northern Ireland students studying in Great Britain, in that they will be subjected to a poll tax in Great Britain, while their parents pay full property rates in Northern Irland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No representations have so far been received, and the Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

28. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in securing the objective set out in articles 4(b) and 4(c) of the Anglo-Irish Agreement of 15 November 1985.

Mr. Tom King: The objective of devolution in Northern Ireland can be achieved only with the co-operation of the constitutional parties there. In order to establish whether a basis for such co-operation exists, I have been holding discussions over recent months with the leaders of the main parties and hope to have further talks with them in the near future.

Irish Foreign Minister

29. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Irish Foreign Minister; and what was discussed.

Mr. Tom King: I last met the Irish Foreign Minister at the Intergovernmental Conference on 24 February. A copy of the joint statement issued afterwards has been placed in the Library.

District Development Officers

31. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the responsibilities of a district development officer.

Mr. Needham: Outside the Belfast area, the district development officer service was absorbed into the planning service of the Department of the Environment on 1 April 1986 and the responsibilities of the former district development officers fell to that service. So far as Castlereagh and Newtownabbey districts are concerned, the duties passed to the Belfast development office.

The duties which were passed to the planning service included liaison with other Goverament Departments, district councils and statutory bodies, the co-ordination of emergency services, urban renewal schemes and the issue of property certificates.

Religious Discrimination (Employment)

32. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his letter to the Standing Advisory Committee on Human Rights concerning its report on "Religious Discrimination in Employment Practices".

Mr. King: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 2 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames).

Health Service (Funds)

35. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about his plans to provide additional funds for the Health Service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I have no plans to increase the level of revenue funding for 1988-89 for the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland beyond that already announced. Following representations from the chairmen of the health and social services boards, I have, however, decided to increase capital allocations by £5 million.

Housing Billl 1987

38. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to apply the proposals contained in the Housing Bill 1987 to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: We are currently giving careful consideration to the provisions contained in the Housing Bill before deciding whether and to what extent they would be beneficial to current housing policy in Northern Ireland.

Some of the proposals may not be wholly relevant to the Northern Ireland housing situation because of its different administrative arrangement.

Cross-community Understanding

40. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he is planning any new initiatives to help cross-community understanding.

Dr. Mawhinney: A number of measures have recently been taken, including the creation of a central community relations unit to advise on all aspects of relations between the two traditions in Northern Ireland, and a new scheme to support cross-community contact between young people. My right hon. Friend and I keep under review the scope for further measures which might assist in improving community relations. In that context I met the leaders of the four main churches on 21 March.

Departmental Staff

43. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of staff in the London office of his Department; and what percentage are non-whites.

Mr. Stanley: 114; of whom 14 per cent. are non-whites.

United States Investments

45. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with United States firms on the effect of the MacBride campaign on United States investments in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office have discussed the MacBride campaign with United States firms on a number of occasions, including during my recent visit to the United States earlier this month. In those discussions we have made clear our view that the campaign will do nothing to promote new United States investment in Northern Ireland with adverse consequences for those who are currently unemployed.

International Fund for Northern Ireland

47. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the International Fund for Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: The International Fund for Ireland published its first annual report last December. This sets out an impressive record of progress, including the establishment of seven priority programmes designed to stimulate economic activity in key sectors of the economy. The report notes that of the £54 million available to the board for disbursement, £48 million has already been committed across the priority programmes. The fund has announced commitments to specific projects totalling £8 million. The Government welcome the care with which the board has approached its challenging task and is confident that the fund will continue to fulfil its objectives of promoting economic advance and contact, dialogue and reconciliation throughout Ireland. We hope that further financial support may be channelled to the fund from friendly countries to enable its work to continue.

Fair Employment

48. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he or his Ministers have had with United States investors since the publication of his proposals to strengthen the employment laws on religious discrimination.

Mr. Stanley: During my visit to the United States this month I had meetings with four United States companies, one of which is already a major investor in Northern Ireland, to discuss the potential of Northern Ireland as an investment location.

Anglo-Irish Conference

49. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference is due to take place; and what is the proposed agenda.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to a reply I gave earlier to a question from the Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry).

Prisoners (Visits)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from Father Denis Faul and Father Raymond Murray regarding relatives' visits to Republican prisoners; what form the representations took; whether such visits are treated differently from visits to (a) loyalist prisoners and (b) visits to prisoners in mainland prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I am not aware of any recent representations being received in the Department from either Father Faul or Father Murray regarding the specific matter of relatives' visits to Republican prisoners.

There is no difference in the conduct of visits to Republican or Loyalist prisoners in Northern Ireland prisons.

Visiting arrangements for prisoners in mainland prisons are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Labour (Mobility)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to improve the mobility of labour between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. There already exists a degree of mobility, especially in areas adjacent to the border between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic. As members of the European Community, there are no restrictions on the movement of labour between any part of the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic.

Children (Education)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of four-year-olds attend (a) nursery education provision, (b) primary school and (c) pre-school playgroup provision;

(2) what proportion of three-year-olds attend (a) nursery education provision, (b) primary school and (c) pre-school playgroup provision.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 March 1988]: Available information is as follows:

Proportion of three and four-year-olds in education in 1986-87

	Age three		Age four
	Full-time per cent.	Part-time per cent.	Full-time per cent.	Part-time per cent.
Nursery Schools	4·6	5·5	5·0	2·7
Nursery Classes in Primary Schools	3·8	1·3	2·9	0·8
Primary Schools (primary classes only)	0·4	—	63·2	—

The information on pre-school playgroups is not available in the form requested. However, at 30 June 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the percentage of the combined numbers of three and four-year-olds who attended pre-school playgroups, including playbuses, was 24·2 per cent.

THE ARTS

Arts Expenditure

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much money per capita is expended on the arts in (i) London and (ii) the northern region.

Mr. Luce: The per capita figures in 1987-88 were as follows:

	Per capita
	Greater London £	Northern region £
(a) Grants to Regional Arts Associations	1·25	1·17
(b) Grants to RAAs, direct Arts Council clients, and South Bank (BFI excluded)	7·95	1·70

Excluding Greater London, the northern region receives the second highest per capita grant of the English regions, and its figure of £1·70 is £0·45 above the average figure.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT (Anthelmentics)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the rates of value added tax applicable in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the Republic of Ireland for anthelmentics for worming cattle in (i) dosing form and (ii) injection form.

Mr. Lilley: In the United Kingdom, anthelmentics for worming cattle are chargeable with value added tax at the standard rate. Animal feeding stuffs are, however, liable at the zero rate and if anthelmentics are incorporated, provided they do not change the nature of the product, the entitlement to zero rating is unaffected. I understand that, in the Republic of Ireland, anthelmentics in oral form, or added to animal feeding stuffs, are zero rated. If injected into the animal they are chargeable at the rate of 25 per cent.

Gross Domestic Product (Taxation)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the percentage of gross domestic product accounted for by taxation (a) in the financial year 1987-88, (b) in the financial year 1988-89 and (c) in May 1979

Mr. Major [holding answer 24 March 1988]: Taxes and national insurance contributions are estimated to have accounted for 37·9 per cent. of gross domestic product in 1987-88. The same percentage is forecast for 1988-89, after taking account of the Budget changes. No figures are available for individual months; for the financial year 1979-80, taxes and national insurance contributions accounted for 35·1 per cent of GDP.

Income Tax

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of total central Government revenue is currently attributable to income tax paid at each rate currently in force.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The available information is given in the table. The estimates are based on liability to income tax and not on income tax receipts which cannot be broken down into the different rates of tax.

Income tax liability in 1987-88

Rate per cent.	£ million
27	36,200
40	1,010
45	1,390
50	1,370
55	860
60	3,080
Total	43,900

VAT

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he is able to make, at constant prices, of the revenue from each region of value added tax in 1978-79 and in each subsequent year.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 24 March 1988]: I regret that the information is not available.

Inland Revenue (Savings)

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what savings in manpower and money he hopes to make in the Inland Revenue as a result of the changes to the taxation system which he announced in his Budget.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 21 March 1988]: Apart from the proposal for the independent taxation of husbands and wives, my Budget proposals (taken as a whole) would lead to significant reductions in Inland Revenue staff numbers. However, these are more than offset by the effects of independent taxation, which increases the number of taxpayers. The net result will be broadly neutral in 1988-89; an increase of around 100 staff in 1989-90; and larger increases in subsequent years.

WALES

Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in each month since October 1987 in each county of Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is set out in the table:

Children (Homelessness)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the annual figures for the number of children received into care by reason of homelessness; if he will give this information for Wales as a whole and for each local authority area; what are the latest figures for the number of children in local authority care where the reason for their admission into care was homelessness; if he will give this information for Wales as a whole for each local authority area for the years ended 31 March 1985, 1986 and 1987 or the three most recent years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Grist: The latest available information is given in the table which shows the number of admissions and children in care where the reason recorded for admission into care was homelessness:

Local authority	Number of children admitted into care on grounds of homelessness[1] in year to March			Number of children in care on grounds of homelessness at 31 March
	1984	1985	1986	1984	1985	1986

WALES	15	25	10	59	48	42

[1] The above figures relate to the admissions principally on grounds of homelessness. Other grounds for admission may include homelessness as a contributory factor.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Senior Fire Officers

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations concerning instances where senior fire officers have been appointed on the basis of factors other than their professional competence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Some concern about this is expressed from time to time. My right hon. Friend does prescribe by regulation basic requirements for promotions and appointments in the fire service, but it is fire authorities themselves who have the responsibility for making appointments. In discharging this function, it is clearly most important that authorities appoint those who are professionally best qualified for the posts.

Fines (Non-payment)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the numbers of cases of people who have received custodial sentences for non-payment of fines in the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (Table 7.3 of the latest issue, Cm. 210 for 1986) a copy of which is in the Library. Information for 1987 will be published later in the year.

Heysel Stadium Riot (Extradition)

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who paid the total cost of the extradition proceedings concerning the defendants in the Heysel stadium case to be held in Belgium; what was the total cost; and what the costs of the Merseyside police were.

Mr. John Patten: My reply to the hon. Member on 14 March gave the amounts so far identified as expenditure to be met by central Government. The £30,000 of police costs mentioned in that answer will be reimbursed by the Crown Prosecution Service. In addition, the Merseyside police have incurred expenditure of £182,000 which falls to be paid by the police authority, and is part of the expenditure in respect of which the authority receives grant under the Police Act 1964. The full cost of the case will be known only when legal aid costs borne by the Lord Chancellor's Department are settled.

Young Offenders

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of arrests made of offenders under the age of 17 years for each of the last five years; and if he will list the figures as a percentage of the total number of arrests;

(2) how many prosecutions were brought against persons under the age of 17 years for each of the last five years; and how many in each year resulted in convictions;

(3) if he will list the number of offenders under the age of 17 years who were (a) arrested, (b) prosecuted and (c) convicted by category of offence for each of the last five years;

(4) if he will list the number of offenders (a) arrested, (b) prosecuted and (c) convicted for each of the last five years who were under the age of 17 years by area.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", tables 6.1 and 7.7 and in more detail in supplementary tables S1.1(B) and S1.1(C) for proceedings at magistrates courts; and in tables S2.1(B) and S2.1(C) for proceedings at the Crown court; and in tables S3.3(B), S3.3(C), S3.5(B) and S3.5(C) for proceedings by police force area. Data on the age of persons arrested is not collected centrally. Copies of both these publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of persons (a) prosecuted, (b) convicted, and (c) imprisoned while under the age of 17 years who were subsequently (i) prosecuted, (ii) convicted and (iii) imprisoned when older than 17 years.

Mr. John Patten: The available information relates to a sample of offenders born in 1953 and followed up to the end of 1981. A total of 53 per cent. of males and 19 per cent. of females convicted before age 17 were subsequently convicted between ages 17 and 27. Further information on criminal careers is published in Home Office statistical bulletins: issue 7/85 "Criminal Careers Of Those Born in 1953, 1958 and 1963": and issue 35/87 "Criminal Careers Of Those Born in 1953: persistent offenders and desistance": copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the level of Sunday trading in Scotland and in other countries where trading restrictions have been liberalised.

Mr. Renton: A survey by MORI in 1985 found that in Scotland 16 per cent. of the shops in the sample opened on a Sunday. So far as other countries are concerned, I refer my hon. Friend to paragraphs 243-248 of the report of the committee of inquiry into the Shops Act, (Cmnd. 9376), copies of which are available in the Library.

Passports

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for a new passport, or to amend an existing passport, are currently waiting to be processed.

Mr. Renton: Applications for new or amended passports are being received at a rate of around 90,000 a week. It is estimated that some 365,000 such applications are at the various stages of processing within the six United Kingdom passport offices.

Ashwell Prison (Escape)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the escape of three men from Her Majesty's prison, Ashwell; whether they have yet been recaptured; and what steps are being taken to prevent a repetition of this incident.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the early hours of 12 March, 3 prisoners escaped from Ashwell by climbing over the perimeter fence. I understand that none of them has yet been recaptured. Inquiries into the incident are continuing and the need for further steps to be taken will be considered in the light of the outcome.

Media Ownership

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a further statement concerning media ownership.

Mr. Hurd: The legislative proposals which we shall bring before Parliament will include limitations on the participation of stations licensed by the radio authority in the publication of newspapers parallel to those regulating press investment in radio broadcasting.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the statistics of crimes recorded by the police in England and Wales in 1987 will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: The statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police in England and Wales in 1987 are published today in Home Office statistical bulletin 6/88. I have placed copies in the Library. The total number of crimes recorded in 1987 was 3·9 million, a rise of 1 per cent. over 1986. This compares with an average rise of about 6 per cent. per year since the mid-1950s.

A total of 3·7 million of these crimes were against property. There was a welcome fall in the number of burglaries in dwellings (down 5 per cent. to 483,000), especially in some of the large cities; and in thefts of motor vehicles (down by 5 per cent. to 390,000). These falls show that rising crime is not inevitable and should spur us on to a greater effort in preventing crime.

The Government view with concern the continuing rise in violent crime, which, by its nature, is less easily prevented. The more successful we are in preventing crimes against property, the more time is available for the police to devote to dealing with the most serious crimes. In 1987, the police clear-up rate for crimes of violence against the person rose from 71 per cent. to 75 per cent., and for more serious offences of violence against the person from 73 per cent. to 78 per cent. Overall, the clear-up rate rose from 32 to 33 per cent.

PRIME MINISTER

Merksworth High School, Paisley

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Prime Minister if she will accept the invitation of the Merksworth high school, Paisley, parents association to visit the school on Saturday 26 March, to view the school's educational facilities; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A reply has been sent to the invitation from the Merksworth parents' action group explaining that I would not be able to accept their invitation to the open day.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Single European Market

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what proposals he has to promote awareness in Northern Ireland of the proposed single European market in 1992;

(2) whether he has included Northern Ireland in his proposed programmes of breakfast meetings in major cities of the United Kingdom to promote awareness of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our campaign aims to ensure that business in every part of the country understands the importance of completing the single market by 1992. Our initial booklet has been sent to more than 2,000 firms in Northern Ireland. The programme of regional conferences includes one in Belfast this autumn. Further local initiatives are planned.

Public Companies (Accounting)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any proposals to reduce the burdens on public companies imposed under the accounting provisions of the Companies Act.

Mr. Maude: I have decided that the next Companies Bill should allow all listed public companies to supply shareholders with an abbreviated version of their annual report and accounts. The Bill will contain an enabling provision for regulations to be made subject to the negative resolution procedure, prescribing the minimum contents of these accounts and dealing with how they would be made available. Copies of the companies' full accounts would still have to be filed at the appropriate Companies Registration Office and be made available, as at present, free of charge to all shareholders who wanted to receive them. My Department will in due course issue a consultative document on the details of the regulations.

Insurance

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the 1975 European 2nd directive on freedom of service in insurance to be implemented.

Mr. Maude: The second directive on freedom of services in non-life insurance must be fully implemented within 24 months of its adoption being notified to member states. We hope that adoption of the directive will take place by the end of the German presidency in June, in which event the directive will come into force in mid-1990.

Insurance (Harmonisation)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to make an announcement on European Community harmonisation of life assurance and compulsory motor vehicle insurance.

Mr. Maude: I expect that in the latter half of this year the Commission will submit to the Council of Ministers proposals for directives to facilitate the freedom to provide services in the fields of life assurance and motor liability insurance. Also later this year I expect that the Commission will submit a proposal for a further Council directive harmonising the laws of member states relating to motor liability insurance.

Company Location (Irish Republic)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on attempts by the Government of the Irish Republic to induce British-based companies to locate their activities in Southern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I understand that the Government of the Irish Republic, in common with others, offer a range of incentives to inward investment by foreign companies including United Kingdom-based companies. This covers both the industrial and internationally traded services sectors and is administered by a number of state-sponsored organisations including the Industrial Development Authority (IDA), the Shannon Free Airport Development Company (SHADCO) and the Udaras na Gaeltachta. The IDA operate in the United Kingdom through its office in London.

The Government in the United Kingdom are fully committed to open markets in trade and investment and the Department of Trade and Industry is itself actively engaged in attracting investment into Britain through its Invest in Britain bureau.

Supermarket Price-fixing

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will refer the matter of supermarket price-fixing agreements to the Director General of Fair Trading;

(2) what evidence he has of the operation of price-fixing agreements by supermarket stores; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Office of Fair Trading is aware of allegations of possible collusion in the level and timing of price increases for goods sold in supermarket stores. The office is currently investigating these allegations to ascertain whether action may be justified under the provisions of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976.

Debts and Loans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will introduce legislation to require voluntary organisations which give advice to individuals concerning personal debts and loans to be licensed under the Consumer Credit Act 1974; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to require commercial organisations which give advice to individuals concerning personal debts and loans to be licensed under the Consumer Credit Act 1974; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will introduce legislation to require any organisation which gives advice to individuals concerning personal loans from the social fund to be licensed under the Consumer Credit Act 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Under sections 21 and 147 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, any voluntary or commercial organisations which carry on a business of debt counselling must be licensed by the Director General of Fair Trading.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Management in Schools Initiative

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for assisting the local management in schools initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I fully support this important and constructive initiative. My Department will provide £135,000 of assistance towards its costs for the production of a manual and training materials. These will provide a valuable source of practical advice for local authorities and schools in preparing schemes of financial delegation within the framework of the Education Reform Bill. The initiative deserves the attention and support of all those with an interest in this field.

ILEA (Reviews)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the dates and details of all reviews of the Inner London education authority carried out since 1964 (a) by Government and (b) by other bodies and individuals; and if he will place copies of reports of such reviews in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [holding answer 21 March 1988]: The report on this subject by the Royal Commission on Local Government in England was published in 1968. My Department published a review by Her Majesty's inspectorate of educational provision in inner London in 1980. This was followed by an internal review, the conclusions of which were reported to the House by the then Secretary of State on 4 February 1981 at column 296. My predecessor made a further announcement on the subject on 5 April 1984 at column 1124, in the context of the White Paper, "Streamlining the Cities". I am arranging that copies of the two centrally published reports are available in the Library of the House.

There have been many surveys carried out by outside bodies and individuals. Amongst the major ones are:

"No choice but to go: the case for the abolition of the Inner London Education Authority", Bow Publications, 1973;

The Marshall inquiry on Greater London, GLC, 1978;

"Arrangements for the provision, administration and financing of education in inner London", ILEA, 1980;

Report of the Committee on Education in Inner London, Conservative Party, 1980;

"The Inner London Education Authority after the abolition of the Greater London Council", Centre for Policy Studies, 1983.

DEFENCE

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the answer of 9 March, Official Report, columns 213-4, he will list by Civil Service grade the number of officials employed by his Department located outside London.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence employs officials in more than 430 different non-industrial grades and 530 different industrial grades. The requested information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Empty Properties

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, how many domestic properties owned by his Department in the parishes of Ambrosden, Arncott and Blackthorn in Oxfordshire have been empty for (a) up to six months, (b) up to one year and (c) over one year.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence does not own any domestic properties in either Arncott or Blackthorn parishes. However, of the 533 properties in Ambrosden, details of the 39 vacant at 20 March 1988 are as follows:

	Number
(a) Vacant for up to six months	23
(b) Vacant for up to one year	8
(c) Vacant for over one year	8
	39

The 39 vacancies can be further categorised as follows:

	Number
(a) Allotted to incoming families	2
(b) Undergoing modernisation due to be completed in May	11
(c) Undergoing repair or maintenance	10
(d) Undergoing refurnishing	6
(e) Vacant and available for immediate allotment	10
	39

Rechem International, Pontypool

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department uses the services of Rechem International, Pontypool.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. We have contracts with Rechem International for the disposal of toxic wastes at both the Pontypool and Southampton sites.

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands Development Corporation (Leasing)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect his statement of 9 March last, concerning leasing by councils, will have on any arrangements made by councils with the London Docklands development corporation for the provision of rented accommodation within the statutory area of that corporation.

Mr. Trippier: It is for individual local authorities to determine whether they will incur prescribed expenditure in any arrangements into which they enter with the London Docklands development corporation.

Homeless People

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific legislative powers currently exist for the provision of grant-aid to voluntary organisations providing emergency accommodation for the single homeless; and if he will make a statement indicating Government intentions regarding these powers.

Mrs. Roe: Section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 empowers my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and local housing authorities to give grants to voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness. My right hon. Friend has no plans to amend it.

In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has powers under schedule 5 to the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976 to give grants to voluntary organisations for providing temporary temporary board and lodging to people without a settled way of life. The provision of emergency accommodation by voluntary organisations may also be assisted, directly or indirectly, under more general powers such as the Local Government Grants (Social Need) Act 1969, the Housing Associations Act 1985, and the Local Government Act 1988.

Crown Premises, Richmond Yard

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ask for an estimate of the cost of the Property Services Agency providing a valuation of the Crown premises at Richmond yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No. It would serve no useful purpose.

Rating Reform

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has any proposals to provide relief from the payment of non-domestic rates to parish halls or similar public buildings;

(2) whether parish halls will be liable for the uniform business rate as proposed in the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Howard: Parish or village halls are presently liable to be rated and will continue to be liable after 1990. Registered charities presently receive 50 per cent. mandatory rate relief, which may be increased to up to 100 per cent. at the local authority's discretion. Local authorities may also give up to 100 per cent. rate relief to other non-profit-making social and recreational clubs and organisations. Some parish halls are run by charitable organisations, but others fall to be dealt with as non-profit making organisations. We intend to retain the same mandatory and discretionary reliefs under our proposals for rate reform.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any sites of special scientific interest that have been ploughed up for cereal growing in the last 12 months showing their habitat type; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Nature Conservancy Council is compiling the information requested in respect of cereal growing. I shall write to the hon. Member with the details shortly.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further progress has been made on the privatisation of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: I have decided to appoint Samuel Montagu and Co., merchant bankers, to advise the Government on the best method of effecting the sale of the Crown Suppliers.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits.

Mr. Trippier: The non-voted cash limit for urban aid expenditure (DOE/UA1) for 1987-88 has been increased by £0·75 million from £437·483 million to £438·233 million in respect of capital spending by local authorities on the inner cities initiative. This increase reflects a switch of provision within the inner cities initiative which was presented to Parliament in the Winter Supplementary Estimate for Class V, Vote 2 relating to expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in each month since October 1987 in each county of Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

[1] To 20 March.

In addition during this period, 575 sheep have been monitored at slaughterhouses.

Training Opportunities

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what opportunities for training and retraining for employment are now offered in west Belfast and other areas of high unemployment in the Province.

Mr. Needham: The following is a list of opportunities for training and retraining for employment currently offered in West Belfast:

(1) The Youth Training Programme
A two year Programme of training, further education, work experience, and job opportunities offered to 16 and 17 year olds.

(2) Boucher Road Training Centre
A modern industrial training centre which serves the West Belfast area and provides off-the-job industrial skills training for young persons and adults.

(3) The Attachment Training Scheme
Provides other full time training opportunities to unemployed adults, mainly with employers.

(4) The Job Training Programme
A recently piloted programme of directed training and practical experience for the longer term unemployed adult.

(5) The Entry into Management Programme
Provides opportunities for young persons wishing to enter management, redundant managers seeking re-employment and people wishing to develop new business ideas.

Similar opportunities are provided in other areas of high unemployment in the Province.

Homelessness

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what appropriate emergency accommodation for the single homeless is currently available to accept references from each of the health and social service boards in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 March 1988]: The information requested is:

	Number of places
	Board run	Voluntary
Eastern Health and Social Services Board	74	20
Northern Health and Social Services Board	—	—
Southern Health and Social Services Board	—	16
Western Health and Social Services Board	—	66
TOTAL	74	102

Notes:

These figures exclude places in common lodging houses and in voluntary hostels whose main functions is to provide long-stay accommodation, but where accommodation may be available in an emergency.

Single homeless persons may also be placed in:
accommodation provided by Boards for other purposes, eg homes for the elderly; temporary accommodation normally reserved for families;
private boarding houses;
other non-commercial accommodation (eg church premises) which may be used to respond to disasters which cause homelessness on a large scale.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement detailing the grants made in 1986-87 by Government Departments and the area boards to voluntary organisations providing accommodation for (a) the single homeless, (b) battered women and their families, (c) homeless families, and (d) ex-offenders.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 March 1988]: In 1986-87 the Department of Health and Social Services and the four health and social services boards paid grants as follows to voluntary organisations providing accommodation for homeless people:

	Mainly single persons	Mainly battered women and their families
DHSS
Simon Community Northern Ireland	17,463	—
Northern Ireland Women's Aid Federation	—	33,350
Open Door Resettlement Project	21,510	—
Northern board
Coleraine Women's Aid	—	14,169
Southern board
Craigavon Women's Refuge	—	4,000
Edward Street Hostel	6,000	—
Eastern board
Belfast Women's Aid	—	59,777
Extern	24,000	—

It is normal practice for homeless families to be accommodated temporarily in facilities managed by health and social services boards, where accommodation is available, or in boarding houses, with whom standing arrangements have been made in advance.

In addition, the Probation Board for Northern Ireland paid the following grants in 1986-87 to voluntary organisations providing accommodation for ex-offenders:

Extern:
"109" Hostel	57,000
Settle Scheme	18,000
Ormeau Centre	8,000
Castlereagh St. Hostel	3,000
Thompson House	56,000
Dismas House	22,000

Water Quality

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment is made, when planning permission is sought for any dump in Northern Ireland, of the possibility of leakage, leaching or run off from such a dump to any lake, river, stream or reservoir; by whom and under what legislative authority such assessments are made; whether the maintenance of water quality is taken into account in deciding whether planning permission is granted; and whether the term discharge is treated as encompassing any such leakage, leaching or run off.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 March 1988]: Where planning permission is sought for any waste disposal site, the environmental protection division of the Department of the Environment (NI) is consulted. That division is concerned with the maintenance of water quality and the need for a consent under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 and its views are taken into account by the planning service before any such planning application is determined.

In considering the possible effect of such sites on water quality, the environmental protection division considers a number of factors to determine whether the proposed site is suitable or can be made suitable for the disposal of refuse. A hydrogeological report is now required by the Department of the Environment (NI) as empowered by section 9(1) of the Water Act to accompany any application for consent. Planning permission for a waste disposal site would not issue unless a consent under the Water Act had issued or was likely to issue. The term discharge is regarded as encompassing any leachate or surface run off water.

Hayshed Bugging

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, on whose authority a bug was placed in the hayshed at Ballymeeny Road North in November 1982, prior to the death of Michael Tighe.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 17 March 1988]: It is not the practice to comment on such matters.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Middle East (Nuclear-free Zone)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any representations from any middle east states seeking United Kingdom assistance in forming a nuclear weapon free zone in the middle east.

Mr. Mellor: No. However, we regularly join consensus at the first committee of the United Nations on a resolution sponsored by Egypt proposing such a zone.

Israel (Nuclear Weapons)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Israeli Government to encourage them to sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Mellor: We take every opportunity to urge the Israeli Government to sign the non-proliferation treaty.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses on Israeli nuclear weapons capability.

Mr. Mellor: We have no evidence either to confirm or deny that Israel possesses nuclear weapons. Although she has refused to sign the non-proliferation treaty she has consistently declared that she will not be the first to introduce nuclear weapons into the region.

Mordecai Vanunu

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom ambassador to Israel has made any representations to the Israeli Government over the trial of Mordecai Vanunu.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Arms Control

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to invite a representative from (a) the verification technology information centre (VERTIC) and (b) the European proliferation information centre (EPIC) to participate in the next meeting of his ad hoc advisory panel on arms control and disarmament.

Mr. Mellor: Non-governmental organisations, including VERTIC and EPIC, have been periodically invited to discussions on arms control issues with Ministers and senior officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. This dialogue with NGOs will continue. I cannot at this stage anticipate whether these two bodies will be invited to participate in the next meeting of the ad hoc advisory panel.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing how many of the people in receipt of housing benefit in each year since 1979-80 were currently in employment, including self-employment; and how many were sick, unemployed, lone parents or retirement pensioners.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that we do not have full data in the form requested. The information available is set out in the table.

Average number of recipients of rate rebate[2] in the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88
Thousands

Year	Elderly	Sick and disabled	Unemployed	People in work	Others	Total
1985-86	4,120	550	1,340	340	670	7,020
1986-87	4,030	670	1,350	260	740	7,050
1987-88	4,040	670	1,260	260	800	7,030

[1] Separate figures were not collected for lone parents.
[2] The figures given are based on recipients of rent rebate, as all types of tenure—local authority and private tenancies, and owner occupation—are included. Most tenants receiving rent rebates or rent allowances also receive rate rebates.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to afford to married woman independent entitlement to housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: No. Housing benefit is calculated on the basis of the eligible housing costs of the household and in the case of a married couple the needs and resources of both spouses are taken into account. Housing benefit may be claimed by whichever spouse is liable to pay for the housing costs of the household.

Adult Training Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to amend the housing benefit regulations to allow those who participate in the adult training scheme to continue to receive housing benefit at the same level as they received before entering the scheme.

Mr. Portillo: Yes. In accordance with the assurance in paragraph 5.30 of the White Paper "Training for Employment" (Cm 316), we propose to take the necessary steps to ensure that all trainees' entitlement to housing benefit is unaffected by joining the new adult training programme. We are consulting the local authority associations at the moment over a suitable amendment to the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations.

Aspartame

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any evidence that the low-calorie sweetener aspartame is the cause of blindness, dizziness, severe headaches or confusion.

Mrs. Currie: I am aware of recent claims that aspartame can cause these effects. I have therefore requested the scientific evidence on which these claims are based. Any such evidence will be considered and the advice of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) which advises the Government on the safety of food additives, will be obtained as necessary.

We keep under review the safety in use of food additives. The COT has reviewed the scientific data on aspartame several times since it was first approved for use, but it has not altered its advice that aspartame is safe in use.

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many awards have been granted as a result of the whooping cough vaccine either alone or incorporated with other vaccines, in each year from 1979 to 1987; and in each case in which year the child was immunised originally and whether brain damage was part of the award.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the requested information is not available. The information which is available is set out in the table.

Vaccine Damage Payments Scheme
Number of awards made in the United Kingdom 1979-87 where pertussis vaccine containing a pertussis element was the claimed cause of severe physical or mental disablement

Year	Number of awards
[1]1979-80	460
1981	62
1982	30
1983	31
1984	24
1985	25
1986	14
1987	8

[1] This figure cannot be apportioned between 1979 and 1980 calendar years.

Taxes and Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the numbers of working single people and of earners with dependent families who will have marginal rates of tax and benefit withdrawal in excess of 70 per cent. in 1988-89; and what will be the combined total number of people in that situation, including earners and their dependants.

Mr. Scott: The latest readily available estimates, both including and excluding the Budget changes announced on 15 March, are shown in the tables:

Combined marginal income tax and benefit withdrawal rates 1988-89
Working heads of tax units (000s) Great Britain
Numbers facing combined rates of over 50 per cent.—in bands

Per cent.	Pre-Budget			Post-Budget
	Families with children	Couples and single people	Total	Families with children	Couples and single people	Total
90 to 99	55	5	60	45	0	45
80 to 89	370	10	380	285	15	300
70 to 79	85	20	100	150	20	170
50 to 59	0	0	0	0	0	0

Notes:

(i) Pre-budget figures are based on a 27 per cent. basic rate of tax and allowances up-rated by the retail prices index only.

(ii) Figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000 except [1] which are fewer than 2,500. Rows may not add due to rounding, and, in particular, the numbers floated off income-related benefits by the Budget total 30,000 not 25,000 as the table suggests.

(iii) Unlike answers to previous questions, the figures above fully reflect lower rate national insurance contributions. In addition, the figures are based on slightly revised estimates of earnings growth to 1988-89.

(iv) The total number of working heads of tax-units with more than 24 weekly remunerative hours is approximately 17 million. Those shown in the table therefore represent only 3 per cent. of the total.

Combined estimates of total numbers including heads of tax units, their partners and other dependants will be made available as soon as possible.

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why his Department is engaging in discussions regarding health warnings on Skoal Bandits in the light of his proposal to ban the product.

Mrs. Currie: In accordance with the provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 my right hon. Friend is consulting interested parties about the Government's proposal. Some months will elapse before representations have been received and considered. Should we decide to proceed, we propose that a further period will elapse before the safety regulations become effective. While these procedures are being carried out, we think it right for the public to be warned of the health risks they run if they purchase Skoal Bandits.

Primary Health Care (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the effect of clause 13 of the Health and Medicines Bill on the implementation of the recommendations of paragraph 13.7 of the Acheson report on primary health care in London, relating to improvement of practice premises and employment of ancillary staff.

Mr. Newton: Since the publication of the Acheson report in 1981, progress has been made towards the implementation of the recommendations of paragraph 13.7. The effect of clause 13 when enacted will be to reinforce the important role of family practitioner committees (FPCs) in securing continuing substantial improvements in family doctors' premises and in developing practice teams. In particular clause 13 will enable FPCs to target resources at areas of greatest need.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caernarfon, 18 March, Official Report, column 711, how many (a) direct and (b) indirect maternal deaths in England and Wales in 1982, 1983 and 1984 occurred in National Health Service hospitals without consultant obstetric units; and how many were associated with anasthaesia.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested will be available on the publication of the report on confidential inquiries into maternal deaths in England and Wales towards the end of the year.

Illegal Abortions

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking upon receipt of a letter from Mrs. Scarisbrick about the activities of Mr. Arnold Finks in relation to illegal abortions.

Mr. Newton: A thorough investigation into this case is being carried out by the Department and is almost complete. A reply will be sent to Mrs. Scarisbrick when it is completed.

Smoking

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish the fourth report of the Independent Scientific Committee on Smoking and Health; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) on 23 March at columns 158-59.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to take any action with regard to the failure of Manhattan 100s cigarettes to carry information on their tar band.

Mrs. Currie: I believe the right hon. Member is referring to a brand called United. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State informed him in his letter of 10 March, the matter is currently being investigated by the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship and the chairman, Sir Peter Lazarus, will write to him as soon as investigations are completed. Manhattan 100s do carry tar band information.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of National Health Service hospital beds closed during the past 12 months in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the west midlands area; and how many have been closed where the reason given by the hospital was financial difficulties.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information on hospitals approved for closure in 1987 is not yet available.

Consultants (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average amount of time a person in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the west midlands will now have to wait before being able to see a consultant in the National Health Service regarding ears and eyes difficulties.

Mr. Newton: Information about out-patient waiting times in not available centrally.

Operations (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average amount of time a person in: (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the west midlands will now have to wait for a National Health Service operation for eyes or ears.

Mr. Newton: The information for England for the latest available year is given in the table. Information for the rest of the United Kingdom is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Estimated median interval (in weeks) between the time a patient is placed on the waiting list and admission to a NHS non-psychiatric hospital for operations in 1985.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently estimated to be addicted to the benzodiazepine group of drugs; and what estimate of the incidence of dependence was made by the Committee on the Review of Medicines in its 1980 review of the benzodiazepines.

Mr. Newton: There are no precise figures to show the level or trend in benzodiazepine dependence but it was estimated in a report published in the Adverse Reaction Bulletin of June 1986 that perhaps half a million people in the United Kingdom were dependent on benzodiazepines. I have placed a copy in the Library. A report "Systematic Review of Benzodiazepines" by the Committee on Review of Medicines published in the British Medical Journal on the 29 March 1980, stated:

"the number dependent on benzodiazepines in the United Kingdom from 1960 to 1977 has been estimated to be 28 persons. This is equivalent to a dependence rate of 5-10 cases per million patient months".

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the perinatal rates for (a) the Airedale health district, (b) the Bradford health district, (c) the Yorkshire health region and (d) England, for (i) 1979 and (ii) 1986.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Perinatal mortality rate (stillbirths and deaths in the first week of life per 1,000 total live and still births) for selected areas.

Area of usual residence	1979	1986
Airedale HD/DHA	14·4	10·4

England	14·6	9·5

Notes:
HD = Health District 1979.
DHA = District Health Authority 1986.

Cleveland Child Abuse Inquiry

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will provide financial assistance to Cleveland county council and to the health authorities concerned in respect of their costs arising from the Cleveland child abuse inquiry.

Mr. Newton: Yes. In view of the exceptional nature and length of this inquiry I have decided to make available sums of £300,000 both to the county council and to the Northern regional health authority as a contribution towards the costs of the authorities.

Negligence

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of negligence or breach of statutory duty have been brought against (a) his Department and (b) health authorities in the last three years; whether such claims were covered by insurance; how much money was paid on settlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 1 February 1988, c. 483]: I regret that the table setting out the total compensation payments by health authorities for the last three years was incorrect. The following table gives the correct figures:

	£	Cases
1984-85	5,058,590	3,393
1985-86	7,434,817	3,697
1986-87	9,231,044	4,234

SCOTLAND

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of households which applied to be classed as homeless, by local authority, in each year from 1978-79.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

[1] Based on incomplete returns.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is available to indicate the levels of public expenditure in Scotland in meeting responsibilities to the homeless.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to separate out in the way requested public expenditure incurred in meeting the needs of the homeless.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is available to indicate the number of homeless households in Scotland in a given week.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information held centrally does not identify the number of homeless households in a given week.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the proceeds of sales of mental hospitals in Scotland in each of the next seven years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: One former mental hospital is currently surplus to Health Service requirements and is expected to be sold during the next financial year. It will be sold on the open market and the proceeds cannot therefore be estimated in advance. I am not in a position to forecast disposals and their proceeds in future years. It is a matter for health boards in the first place to consider closure and, after consultation with local interests, to seek the consent of my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless persons in Scotland have previously been admitted to hospitals with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many residential places have been provided in the community for patients discharged from mental hospitals in Scotland with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many residential places have been provided in the community for patients discharged from mental hospitals in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Statistics of the type requested are not held centrally. Such figures as are available for residential accommodation in the community reflect the total provision made by local authorities and voluntary bodies for mentally handicapped and mentally ill people already in the community as well as for ex-patients of mental hospitals. Provision of places for people with specific mental illnesses is not identified separately. The numbers of residential places made available in each of the last 10 years by local authorities and voluntary bodies was as follows:

31 March	Mental handicap	Mental illness
1978	[1]1,063
1979	1,087	168
1980	1,093	209

1985	1,773	608
1986	1,951	644
[3]1987	2,129	674

[1] 1978 statistics covered the mentally handicapped and mentally ill together.

[2] From 1983 onwards, statistics included details of provision in other establishments, such as group homes, of which local authorities were aware.

[3] 1987 figures are provisional.

Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in each month since October 1987 in each region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Housing Association Grant

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the distribution of housing association grant by settlement size for the period from 1979 to 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Housing association grant is a payment made in consequence of the approval of a project, under the approved development programme of the Housing Corporation in Scotland. The Secretary of State exercises control over the amount of public funding available to the housing association movement and the general categorisation of types of project through his approval of this annual programme.

No information is held by settlement size on the distribution of housing association grant or capital allocations to associations.

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific legislative powers currently exist for the provision of grant aid to voluntary organisations providing emergency accommodation for the single homeless in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Section 39 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 makes provision for the Secretary of State and for local authorities to give assistance to voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness. Assistance is also available under the Local Government Grants (Social Need) Act 1969.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants were made in 1986-87 by Government Departments and local authorities in Scotland to voluntary organisations providing accommodation for (a) the single homeless, (b) battered women and their families, (c) homeless families and (d) ex-offenders.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Some £400,000 in grant aid was provided by Scottish Office in 1986-87 via local authorities for the provision of hostel accommodation for ex-offenders, and a further £100,000 was given to voluntary organisations involved with the homeless, although not necessarily themselves providing accommodation. I do not have details of grants made by local authorities.

Children (Homelessness)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the annual figures for the number of children received into care by reason of homelessness; if he will give this information for Scotland as a whole and for each local authority area; what are the latest figures for the number of children in local authority care where the reason for their admission into care was homelessness; if he will give this information for Scotland as a whole for each local authority area for the years ended 31 March 1985, 1986, 1987, or the three most recent years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for Scotland, excluding Strathclyde, in the last three years for which figures are available is as follows:

Region	Admissions into local authority care in year ending 31 March by reason of family homelessness			Children in local authority care at 31 March by reason of family homelessness
	1984	1985	1986	1984	1985	1986
Borders	1	8	1	7	6	3

Highland	0	5	2	6	1	1
Lothian	2	1	0	9	4	4
Tayside	2	1	0	15	14	10

Scotland (excluding Strathclyde)	13	26	7	71	56	46

Information provided by Strathclyde regional council on admissions to care by reason of homelessness relates only to 1984-85 and 1985-86 when the numbers of children concerned were respectively 15 and 19. No information is available from Strathclyde on children currently in care for this reason.

The very difficult problems which can arise when dealing with homeless people call for the exercise of good housing management and close co-operation between all the agencies involved. The Government are committed to maintaining an effective legislative framework to help the homeless.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were registered as unemployed in Scotland on 1 October 1981; and what was the total on 1 October 1986.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. In October 1981 the number of unemployed claimants in Scotland was 302,362. The corresponding figure for October 1986 was 359,236. Due to changes which have taken place in the compilation of the statistics during the period these figures are not directly comparable.

Merksworth High School, Paisley

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will accept the invitation of the Merksworth high school, Paisley, parents' association to visit the school on Saturday 26 March to view the school's educational facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I has any plans to visit Merksworth high school at present.

YTS

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the occupancy rates on the YTS in Dundee are at the latest date and for equivalent dates for each month since the scheme started.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 March 1988]: Information in the form requested cannot be given except at disproportionate cost.

In Dundee local authority district at 26 February 1988 (the latest available date) there were 1,857 contracted places on YTS, 1,430 of which were filled (a 77 per cent. occupancy rate). For the same date in 1987, there were 1,409 contracted places of which 1,139 were filled (an 81 per cent. occupancy rate). These figures do not include occupancy rates on YTS schemes administered by the large companies unit, which does not break down figures to local level.

EMPLOYMENT

Unified Training Programme

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the proposed unified training programme; what problems with regard to its implementation have been drawn to his attention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about a range of matters concerning the new employment training programme, on which the recent White Paper "Training for Employment" announced that the Government had accepted in full the recommendations made by the Manpower Services Commission. The new programme will commence on 5 September this year, and the MSC is now making detailed arrangements for its implementation.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the English tourist board to discuss the encouragement of tourism in the north-west of England.

Mr. Lee: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the English tourist board to discuss the development and promotion of tourism throughout England, including the north-west.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the development of tourism in the inner cities.

Mr. Lee: As part of the Government's "Action for Cities" programme, the Engish tourist board is to run a campaign to help identify and develop the tourism potential of inner city areas. Inner city tourism will continue to benefit from the English tourist board's marketing initiatives as well as the section 4 scheme of financial assistance.

Disablement Resettlement Officers

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to increase the numbers of disablement resettlement officers.

Mr. Lee: I have no plans at present to increase the numbers of disablement resettlement officers. The matter will continue to be kept under review.

Special Aids

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training is given to those responsible for issuing aids under the special aids to employment scheme.

Mr. Lee: Technical officers who are responsible for the provision of advice on aids issued under the special aids to employment scheme, attend training courses designed to keep them abreast of technical developments. Courses are arranged in conjunction with manufacturers, suppliers and those major voluntary organisations for people with disabilities. They are also encouraged to attend exhibitions, read publications and liaise on a day-to-day basis with manufacturers, suppliers, local colleges, the medical profession and other health care professionals.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Manpower Services Commission offices holds stocks of items commonly requested under the special aids to employment scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Stocks of items commonly requested under the special aids to employment scheme are held centrally by the employment service.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average length of time between receipt of an application under the Manpower Services Commission special aids to employment scheme, and the date the equipment was delivered.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures available on the average length of time between receipt of the application for equipment under the special aids to employment scheme and the date the equipment was delivered. Typically, the period can vary from a few days to several weeks depending on the complexity of the case and the availability of the equipment.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each region the numbers and types of equipment issued under the Manpower Services Commission special aids to employment scheme for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: There is no information readily available on the types of equipment issued under the special aids to employment scheme for each of the last five years. Information on numbers is readily available only for the past four years, and is as follows:

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many adaptations carried out under the adaptation to premises and equipment scheme were to meet the needs of people categorised as (a) deaf without speech, (b) deaf with speech and (c) hard of hearing.

Mr. Lee: During the first six months of the current financial year, the number of adaptations carried out under the adaptations to premises and equipment scheme to meet the needs of people categorised as (a) deaf without speech, (b) deaf with speech, (c) hard of hearing were (a) 4, (b) 4, and (c) 3.

Aural Handicap

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many copies of the Manpower Services Commission leaflet EPL 38 "Employing someone who is deaf or hard of hearing", were issued in the last five years.

Mr. Lee: Approximately 10,000 copies of the leaflet EPL 38 have been issued in the last five years.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will provide details for each region of the average time between a new claimant's availability for work being queried and a decision being made by an adjudication officer.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the speed with which adjudication officers make decisions (that is, the time between their receiving a referral and reaching a decision) is monitored in a 5 per cent. sample of cases. The sample shows that, for the three-month period ending 31 December 1987, the percentage of all availability questions (on both new and existing claims and including decisions on availability during holidays) decided within four weeks of referral to an adjudication officer, for each employment service region, was as follows:—

	Availability Per cent.	Restricted Availability Per cent.
London and South East	81·8	81·8

Yorkshire and Humberside	95·5	96·3

Rural Areas

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the levels of unemployment in rural areas and the measures which his Department is taking to reduce them.

Mr. Lee: Information on unemployment in rural areas is not readily available. However, an independent unemployment analysis carried out for the Development Commission for Rural England suggests that rural areas are sharing in the general drop in unemployment. The analysis estimated that the average unemployment rate in the Development Commission's rural development areas as a whole fell from 10·4 per cent. to 9·7 per cent. in the year to April 1987. During the same period, the unemployment rate nationally fell from 11·5 per cent. to 10·9 per cent. National unemployment has continued to fall since last April, and is now 9·1 per cent. These further falls can only have further benefited rural areas.

My Department is playing its part with other interested Departments to foster these improvements, by providing active encouragement and support to enterprise. We are providing support for local enterprise agencies, tourism, and small businesses through our small firms service and a range of marketing improvement services. In addition, the full range of our employment, enterprise and training measures are available to help unemployed people in rural areas.

Education and Training (Tax Relief)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, pursuant to the answer of 18 December 1987, Official Report, column 829, he will place a copy of the joint Manpower Services Commission, Department of Education and Science and Inland Revenue guide to tax relief for employers' expenditure on education and training in the Library.

Mr. Nicholls: The guide to tax relief for employers' expenditure on education and training was published on 15 February 1988. Copies of "Tax, Training and Education — a Guide for Employers, Education and Training Providers" are being placed in the Library.

Hotel Grading

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultation is taking place on a scheme for hotel grading as a separate qualitative assessment from classification.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 24 March 1988]: Following extensive consultations with the serviced accommodation sector, the English tourist board has announced its intention of introducing a system of assessing quality standards as an addition to the existing crown classification system. The English tourist board is involved in detailed discussions with the industry and its trade associations on the best way to introduce the new scheme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beekeeping

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he plans to meet representatives of beekeeping organisations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no such plans at present. My officials have regular meetings with representatives of the national beekeeping organisations and keep me in touch with their views.

European Community Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met his counterparts from the other European Community states; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory) on 10 March at columns 323-24.

Green Pound

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the next devaluation of the green pound.

Mr. MacGregor: Green pound devaluations are best considered at the time of the annual prices fixing when all relevant factors can be taken into account.

Cereals

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what base year he intends to operate for the area of cereals set-aside scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: This and other conditions applying to farmers entering the set-aside scheme will need to be decided in the light of the detailed Community rules yet to be established.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the current studies into the proposed Severn barrage to be completed.

Mr. Parkinson: The Severn tidal power group's work programme is due to conclude at the end of this year.

UKAEA (SP-100 Project)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has had any commercial involvement in terms of advice consultancy or hardware and software development for the SP-100 nuclear powered space project;

(2) if there have been any commercial links between UKAEA's Culham laboratories and the SP-100 US space-based nuclear propulsion programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the UKAEA has had no commercial involvement in, or links with, this project.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 18 March, column 685, he will specify the exact nature of safeguards arrangements applied to South African origin uranium, giving details of date of entry into force and expiration of all such safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Specific safeguards arrangements are confidential to the parties involved.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he possesses on the practice of flag swapping on uranium consignments under Euratom safeguards control in European Economic Community countries, including flag swapping on uranium of United States, Canadian, Australian and South African origin.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 9 March 1988, at columns 200-1.

Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, 18 March Official Report column 685, why it is expected to take until the end of 1988 to bring the first four Sellafield particular safeguards provisions into force.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The particular safeguards provisions require detailed preparation and consultation.

TRANSPORT

A2 (Accidents)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on fatal and non-fatal accidents on the A2 between Lydden and Whitfield (A256) and Whitfield and Deal (A258) for each year since 1970; and what comparable figures are available for other similar roads in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information available is as follows:

	Number of accidents		Accident [1] rates

Lydden-Whitfield (A256)
1981	1	9	0·04	0·39

Random Breath Testing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the effectiveness of random breath testing in other countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We keep in close touch with international experience. Although some countries that have introduced random breath testing seem to have achieved dramatic reductions in their levels of drinking and driving, they are no more successful overall than we are in containing the problem. In Australia, for example, the introduction of random breath testing in some states has reduced the level of drinking and driving to around the current level in this country. It is not always straightforward to compare one country with another and to assume that changes in one social environment would work in another. In this country the police have wide discretion to enforce the law on drinking and driving. This led to more than 300,000 breath tests last year resulting in over 100,000 convictions.

London Docklands (Roads)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if the docklands northern relief road was taken over by his Department as a road scheme when the Greater London council was abolished; (2) what is the current official status of the docklands northern relief road; (3) what is the status of the London Docklands development corporation's proposals for the south Poplar link road and the East India dock link road; (4) what assumptions have been made about completion dates for London Docklands development corporation schemes known jointly as the docklands highway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On abolition of the GLC, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State became responsible for safeguarding the protected corridor of the proposed docklands northern relief road. The LDDC has developed proposals for docklands highways to provide access to developments within its area. These proposals, which include the south Poplar link road and the East India dock link road, follow the protected corridor. It is expected that they will have been completed by the early 1990s.

Dockland Link Roads

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what will be the status of the A13 between West India Dock road and the Leamouth road when the south Poplar and the East India Dock road are completed and linked to the A13 East India Dock road;

(2) what traffic management measures are proposed for the A13 between West India Dock road and Leamouth road once the south Poplar link road and the East India Dock link road are completed;

(3) whether heavy vehicles will be allowed along the south Poplar link road and the East India Dock link road, as well as along the A13 between West India Dock road and Leamouth road;

(4) what is the relationship, from the point of view of through traffic and local traffic, between the A13 junction improvement schemes and the docklands highway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The docklands highway and the A13, to be improved by the six schemes whose inclusion in the Department's road programme was announced on 7 March, will together provide for traffic moving to and from the docklands area, and through it. The Department has set up a working group with the London Docklands development corporation, local authorities, police and other interested parties to discuss traffic management, including heavy vehicles in the area. There are no proposals to change the status of the A13.

Trunk Roads

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether all trunk road schemes are subject to public inquiries including an examination of the purpose, function and design of schemes;

(2) if there will be public inquiries to examine the purpose, function and design of the six A13 junction schemes which he recently announced;

(3) what are the expected completion dates of the A13 junction improvements;

(4) what public consultation is to take place about the A13 schemes he announced on 7 March.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Public inquiries are normally required to be held into unresolved objections to orders authorising trunk road schemes. The scope of the inquiry depends on the nature of the objections.

It is too early to say what public consultation and inquiries may be necessary for the recently announced A13 schemes. We hope they will be completed by the mid-1990s.

Tiger Super Puma Helicopter

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the French DGAC to complete its air worthiness review of the AS332L Tiger Super Puma helicopter; and if he will make it his policy to publish the findings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is participating in the French DGAC airworthiness review of the AS 332L helicopter, which is expected to be completed shortly. It will be for the authority, which is wholly responsible for civil aviation safety regulation, to take any action on the outcome of the review.

Rail Network (London)

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to deal with congestion on the London rail network.

Mr. Channon: I have for some time been considering, with British Rail and London Regional Transport, the scope for improving and developing the railway network in London. A number of major improvements are already in hand at central London termini and I have authorised the purchase of additional rolling stock and expenditure to relieve congestion at a number of stations on the Underground. But the chairmen of BR and LRT both agree that more must be done. In particular, an urgent review is needed of capacity in the central area. We have therefore jointly established a central London rail study, to focus on these concerns in the light of present and future demand. The aim will be to develop a strategy for improving services, bearing in mind the need to maximise the use of existing assets. But I do not rule out the possible need for major extensions of London's rail infrastructure. I hope to have initial results in July. I am placing a copy of the terms of reference for the study in the Library.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Directorate

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information has been given to the staff of the driver and vehicle licensing directorate about the consequences of the proposed change to executive agency status.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are anxious that the staff in DVLD are given full information on the proposal so that they are not unnecessarily concerned about its implications. In common with the rest of the Department on 18 February, the day of the Prime Minister's announcement, DVLD staff received a message on the changes from the permanent secretary. They also received a personal message from the director and subsequently more detailed information in the form of a question and answer brief in the DVLD house journal. Staff will also be kept informed of any further development in this way. The content of the question and answer briefing is as follows.

Q1. What changes will be made at DVLD?

A1. The main changes at DVLD will be in the way the Directorate is financed, in its accounting systems, and in increased responsibility for personnel management. The changes will all be aimed at giving the Directorate greater freedom to manage its own operations and to achieve results. Ways of enabling staff to share in the benefits of improved performance resulting from the new agency status may also be possible. It is too early to be more specific.

Q2. Why has DVLD been identified as a candidate for possible Executive Agency status?

A2. DVLD is already a relatively autonomous unit within DTp. It is a large scale unit with unique executive functions. It already has many of the features of an executive agency. It has approved annual plans and administers the bulk of its expenditure and staffing under extensive delegated powers from the Department. It agrees with and reports to the Department on its performance targets. It has a very good record on improving customer service and of reducing its operating costs. The adoption of executive agency status should help consolidate these achievements and provide more freedom for DVLD to deliver the results required of it.

Q3. Will the staff of the new agencies remain subject to civil service pay and conditions? Will there be any redundancies as a result of further improvement in efficiency?

A3. Staff in the proposed DTp agencies would remain civil servants with appropriate nationally agreed pay scales. No changes are intended at present in basic conditions of service. The Trade Unions would be fully consulted should any changes in terms and conditions of service be contemplated in the future. DVLD's workload is currently increasing at 4 per cent. per year and it is anticipated that this will absorb any staff released through efficiency improvements.

Q4. If it goes ahead will any work move from Swansea?

A4. There may be some changes at the margins as much to do with work moving to DVLD as work moving away.

Q5. What will happen to the VROs?

A5. The VROs will be included in the proposed agency along with DVLC and DVOIT.

Q6. Will agency staff have the freedom to move back to the Department?

A6. Transfer arrangements for staff between agencies and their parent and other Departments will be retained. There would be some change in personnel management responsibilities exercised by DVLD but overall the present degree of freedom should remain the same.

Q7. Will the DVLD workload change as a result of these proposals?

A7. DVLDs workload is forecast to increase at 4 per cent. per annum and no changes are foreseen as a direct result of the proposed change in status.

Q8. Will DVOIT be included in the new agency?

A8. The current intention is that it should but its future status will be subject to review in the light of the operational framework agreed upon for the proposed DVLC agency.

Q9. Does the proposal imply criticism of DVLD?

A9. Rather the reverse. The proposals build on the considerable achievements of the Directorate by giving it more freedom to run it own affairs.

Q10. What about personnel management of VRO staff?

A10. This will be reviewed to see what the most sensible arrangement would be. There will be no significant changes in the level of service provided.

Q11. Have staff been informed of this development?

A11. All DVLD staff have received messages from the Permanent Secretary and the Director. The Departmental and local TUS have been informed.

Q12. When will DVLD become an executive agency?

A12. Decisions have still to be taken on whether or not DVLD should become an executive agency. If a decision is taken in favour a great deal will have to be done and this will inevitably take some time.

Q13. How will the new DVLD agency affect the local Trade Unions?

A13. It is not expected that there will be any immediate changes to the local TUS structure if the DVLD agency is set up but the position will need to be kept under review by both sides in the light of experience with the new organisation.

Q14. What will determine whether DVLD becomes an executive agency?

A14. If Ministers consider that changes in the form of Departmental and Treasury control, together with a reduction in Ministerial involvement in day to day operations, would give agency management the opportunity to improve the efficiency of their operations.

Cash Limits

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the 1987-88 cash limits on his Department's Votes.

Mr. Channon: Running costs expenditure on Class VIII Vote 4 is expected to be £300,000 higher than was provided for in the spring Supplementary Estimates (HC284). There will be a corresponding reduction to non-running costs subheads on that vote. Running costs expenditure on Class VIII Vote 2, which is in the same running costs limit as Class VIII Vote 4, has been reduced by £300,000 and the cash limit on Class VIII Vote 2 has been reduced from £187,594,000 to £187,294,000.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the progress of negotiations to end industrial action on the Woolwich ferry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The London borough of Greenwich is still trying to negotiate a settlement with the work force. I am meeting the leader of Greenwich borough council on 28 March to discuss the position.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many crossings have been lost as a result of industrial action on the Woolwich ferry between 1 April 1987 and the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Too many. Up to 24 March about 33,000 crossings have been lost.

London Transport

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the public subsidy to (a) London Underground and (b) London Transport in each year since 1979 at (i) outturn and (ii) constant 1988 prices.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is not possible to attribute these grants as between the Underground and other LRT activities, as grants were not so assigned when they were made. The figures for grants to London Regional Transport were as follows:

	Outturn Prices	January 1988 Prices
1979	148	269
1980	196	301
1981	216	299
1982	313	397
1983	339	412
1984-85	317	365
1985-86	323	349
1986-87	295	308
1987-88	239	239
1988-89	190	182

Victoria Place Road, Stoke

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the Victoria place road scheme in Stoke-on-Trent was not included in the 1988-89 transport supplementary grant settlement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Victoria place link, Stoke-on-Trent, was included in Staffordshire's transport policies and programme submission for 1988-89. It was not selected for transport supplementary grant support since the main works were not programmed to start until 1989-90. TSG funds are limited and grant is usually restricted to schemes already under construction or whose main works are due to start in that financial year.

Victoria place link was Staffordshire's third priority for TSG; its first two have been given grant aid. If put forward again next year with sufficient priority, the scheme will be considered on its merits in competition with schemes from other authorities for the funds available.

A50 Stoke

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the traffic flow was last measured on the A50 in Stoke-on-Trent, South; what was the number of vehicles counted on a 12-hour weekday; what was the corresponding heavy commercial vehicle count; and which major roads passing through urban areas in the west midlands have a higher traffic count.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest count was taken on the A50/A520 (Meir) junction in October 1987. The average weekday 12-hour flow was 23,900 vehicles of which some 19 per cent. were heavy vehicles.

Many roads through urban areas in the west midlands have a higher traffic count. In addition to the motorways, lengths of A34, A38(M), A41, A45, A435, A449, A456 and A457 within the west midlands conurbation all carry higher volumes.

M6 Stoke

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average vehicle count for a 12-hour weekday on the M6 adjacent to Stoke-on-Trent; and what is the corresponding number of heavy lorries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest 12-hour weekday average count on M6 is 61,300 vehicles (36·5 per cent. heavy vehicles) between junctions 15 and 16 and 66,700 vehicles (21·5 per cent. heavy vehicles) between junctions 14 and 15. Counts were taken in September 1987.

Traffic Counts

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the highest traffic count of (a) all vehicles and (b) heavy commercial vehicles on urban roads that has been reported to his Department in the last two years; what was the date of the count; and where was the road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A classified traffic count of 12 hours duration (7 am to 7 pm) for one day is taken as part of the Department's rotating traffic census. Counts are taken on one sixth of major road links each year so that all links are covered in six years. The classification "urban" is no longer used, being replaced by "built-up" where a section of road has a speed limit of 40 mph or less.

The highest traffic counts on built-up roads recorded in 1986 and 1987 are:

Date of count	12-hour count	Road	Location	Grid reference
All vehicles
13 October 1986	89,663 (90,089)	A4202	Park Lane, London	52801806
14 October 1987	73,380 (73,692)	A104	Woodford New Road, North East London	53991917
Heavy goods vehicles
22 April 1986	8,678	A405	North Watford between A41 and M1 junction 6	51102004
14 April 1987	14,228	A282	South of Dartford Tunnel	55581750

Figures in brackets include pedal cycles.

Traffic Congestion (Stoke)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the proposals supported by his Department designed to reduce peak hour traffic congestion in Stoke-on-Trent, South; what will be the expected benefit of each; and by what date completion of each proposal is expected.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Construction of a grade-separated junction at Hanford (A34/A500) is well advanced and should be completed by early summer. We also have in preparation a scheme to upgrade the A50 route between Blythe bridge and Queensway (A500). Subject to the completion of statutory processes work should start on this in 1992 and be completed in about two years.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to the answer of 8 March, Official Report, columns 153-4, he will list by Civil Service grade the number of officials in his Department located outside London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of staff in the Department by grade, both permanent and casual, located outside London on 18 March 1988 was:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Medical Research Council (Expenditure)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much the Medical Research Council will spend on research into (a) mental health and (b) schizophrenia in the forthcoming year; what this figure represents as a percentage of the Medical Research Council's budget; and what was the comparable percentage spent in each of the last six years.

Mr. Jackson: I am advised by the Medical Research Council that expenditure on mental health (including addiction) and schizophrenia research from 1981-82 to 1986-87 was as follows:

	Mental Health £ million	Percentage of MRC Budget	Schizophrenia £ million	Percentage of MRC Budget
1981-82	7·8	8	*	*
1982-83	7·9	8	*	*
1983-84	8·4	8	*	*
1984-85	9·2	8	0·5	0·5
1985-86	9·1	8	0·5	0·5
1986-87	9·4	8	0·5	0·4

* Figures not available

Expenditure in these areas in the forthcoming year will be determined by the Medical Research Council in the light of its scientific priorities.

Child Guidance Service

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he plans to take to ensure the continuation of the child guidance service in inner London after the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend will wish to discuss this matter with the inner London councils, the Inner London education authority and the relevant district health authorities, with a view to ensuring that an effective child guidance service is available to each new LEA.

Free School Meals

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children it is estimated will no longer qualify for free school meals in Bradford from April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1987, about 7,850 pupils in Bradford received free school meals, either because their families were in receipt of family income supplement, or through the operation of LEA discretion. From 11 April, the families of those in the former category will receive a cash benefit of £2·55 per week throughout the year under the new family credit scheme, which will also cover many in the latter category. Nationally, it is estimated that about 100,000 more school age children will benefit under the family credit scheme compared with those who currently receive free school meals under family income supplement and LEA discretionary schemes combined.

French Language

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the joint matriculation board's report on the number of pupils taking O and A-level examinations in French.

Mrs. Rumbold: The 1986-87 annual report of the Joint Matriculation Board shows a decrease in the number of French A level candidates, but an increase in the proportion taking French O-level and joint O-level/CSE. Comparable figures for all examination boards are not yet available. Under the Government's proposals for a national curriculum, a modern foreign language is a foundation subject at secondary level and will therefore form part of the curriculum for all pupils between the ages of 11 and 16. We expect the majority to want to offer it for public examination at age 16 and hope that the greater numbers studying a language to age 16 will also result in an increase in those continuing their studies to A or AS-level.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Atomic Energy Agency

81. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress on agreements to exchange and report information among member countries of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not yet available, as the International Atomic Energy Agency has not completed drawing up a list of member states which have entered into such agreements. The United Kingdom has entered into such agreements with Norway and Denmark and is currently discussing agreements with the Soviet Union, the Netherlands and the Irish Republic. The United Kingdom also has an agreement on similar lines with France, which was signed in 1983.

Central America

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take following the European ministerial conference in Hamburg on central American affairs.

Mr. Eggar: We continue to give firm support to the peace process. The commitments which the Community and its member states have entered into are recorded in the political and economic communiqués, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Sita Ram Maskey

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss the imprisonment of Sita Ram Maskey with the Nepal Government.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Maskey was imprisoned in May 1987 under Nepal's Public Security Act. His case is cited in the Amnesty International report on Nepal published in November last year. We have drawn the attention of the Nepalese Government to this report.

Vasili Shipilov

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of the Soviet Union about the continued imprisonment in a mental hospital of Vasili Shipilov.

Mr. Mellor: Vasili Shipilov was included on a list of human rights cases which my right hon. and learned Friend handed to Mr. Shevardnadze during his visit to the Soviet Union in February this year.

Refugees (Hong Kong)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the longest time that anyone has been in a closed camp for refugees in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: The longest time any refugee has been in a closed centre in Hong Kong is five years eight months.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of offenders under the age of 17 years (a) detained and (b) imprisoned for each of the last five years; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of the total number of prisoners detained and imprisoned for each of the years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information is given in the table. It is derived from chapters 2, 3, 4, 5 of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales, 1986" (Cm. 210), copies of which are in the Library.

Receptions (1) juveniles into prison department establishments in England and Wales: by type of reception 1982-86.

[1] Total receptions cannot be calculated by adding receptions in each category, because there is double counting.
[2] Provisional figures.
[3] Excluding fine defaulters and non-criminal prisoners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many 14-year-olds were in prison establishments on the last occasion for which figures are available; what information he has about the institutions in which they were held; how many were on remand; what information he has about the crimes for which those convicted were so convicted; how many previous convictions they had; and what information he has as to their ethnic origins.

(2) if he will show for each county or police force area (a) the number of 14-year-olds in prison establishments and (b) that number expressed as a proportion of the relevant age group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The home address of persons held in prison department establishments in England and Wales is not recorded centrally. The readily available information is given in the tables. There were no 14-year-old females held or males held on remand.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on which other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development or European Community countries place 14-year-olds in prison institutions.

Mr. John Patten: Comprehensive reliable information is not readily available. From such information as we have, some form of custodial sanction appears to be available for 14-year-old offenders in the following member countries of the OECD or the European Community: Canada, France, the German Federal Republic, Greece, the Republic of Ireland, the Netherlands, and the United States. The member countries where such sanctions appear not to be available are Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Spain and Sweden. We have no information about the remaining countries.

Economic League

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries have taken place into possible contacts between the Economic League and police forces in regions other than North Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not aware of any such inquiries.

Rates (Imprisonment)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women have received custodial sentences for non-payment of rates for each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of persons received on committal by magistrates' courts in default of payment of rates in each of the last 11 years is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 6.2 of the latest volume, for 1986, Cm. 210) copies of which are in the Library. The following table gives corresponding details of those received in 1982 to 1986 following committal by county courts.

Prisons (Facilities)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities exist for recreation and exercise, and how many square feet of exercise space are available, at each of Her Majesty's prisons at Birmingham, Leeds, Pentonville, Manchester, Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs and Holloway.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

	Facilities	Approximate outside exercise space square feet
Birmingham	gymnasium, multi-gymnasium, fitness/weight-lifting room, recreation room	65,000
Leeds	gymnasium, weight-training room	32,900
Pentonville	gymnasium, weight training room, remedial exercise room	87,800
Manchester	gymnasium, sports hall, weight-training room	30,900
Wandsworth	gymnasium, multi-purpose room	62,000
Wormwood Scrubs	gymnasium, multi-gymnasium, sports hall	72,600
Holloway	gymnasium, sports hall, swimming pool	27,000

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours' exercise per week prisoners receive at each of Her Majesty's prisons at Birmingham, Leeds, Pentonville, Manchester, Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs and Holloway.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Seven hours, weather permitting. In addition, there are varied opportunities for physical training.

Video Recordings Act 1984

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under the provisions of the Video Recordings Act 1984; and with what result.

Mr. John Patten: The Video Recordings Act 1984 is being introduced in stages, the first of which came into effect on 1 September 1985. The data held centrally, which may be incomplete, show no record of any prosecutions under the Act in 1985 and two in 1986. I would also refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 27 November at columns 365-66.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Juries

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Attorney-General on how many nights in each of the past five years juries in criminal trials have been sent to an hotel whilst considering a verdict; and what has been the total cost in each of those years.

The Attorney-General: This information is not readily available. It can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if she will set the precise responsibility which the Secretary of State for the Environment has in relation to forestry.

The Prime Minister: The Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible for environmental matters in England, and has an overall responsibility for nature conservation in the United Kingdom. He is therefore consulted by the Ministers with direct responsibility for forestry about the environmental implications of forestry policies. He is also consulted about those applications for planting grant on which the Forestry Commission has sought the views of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, as Forestry Minister for England, because there is an unresolved objection on environmental grounds from the relevant body or local authority.

PLO (Military Equipment)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister what procedures exist within the appropriate Departments to prevent the export of British military equipment to the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and whether she is satisfied that they are effective.

The Prime Minister: Export control procedures for military equipment seek to take account of all relevant factors, including the type of equipment, its proposed destination and its end use. It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose the nature of the checks made.

I am satisfied with the general effectiveness of the controls.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister by which Department information was possessed that the Lebanese company engaged in the transaction with Racal-Tacticom in 1982 had links with the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and when it was made known to that Department.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply given to my hon. Friend on 18 March, at column 688, by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Litter Collection (St. James' Park)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the purpose of the exercise involving the deposit and subsequent collection of litter in St. James' park on 22 March; what was the cost; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I attended the launch on 22 March of the Tidy Britain Group's series of projects designed to deal more effectively with the litter problem. The cost of the launch was less than £60.

WALES

Heart Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what private hospitals are being paid to perform the heart operations necessary to enable the South Glamorgan health authority to meet his target of 600 heart operations per year; and how much each hospital has charged per operation done to meet this target.

Mr. Grist: South Glamorgan health authority is funded by the Department to provide an agreed level of open heart operations. The involvement of the private sector by the health authority in order to meet the agreed target is a matter for the authority. As a consequence, the information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the cardiac surgeons employed by the South Glamorgan health authority are fulfilling their contracted National Health Service sessions to meet his target of 600 operations per year.

Mr. Grist: The consultant contracts are held by South Glamorgan health authority. The information requested is not available centrally.

ADAS

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many farmers in Wales have received fee-paying service from the Agricultural Development Advisory Service during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many farmers in Wales have applied during the last 12 months for the fee paying service given by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is not possible to distinguish between those who apply for, and those who receive, chargeable non-statutory advice: ADAS would seldom be unable to provide a service sought by a potential customer. In the first 11 months of the scheme, chargeable advice was provided to 4,731 customers.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much revenue has been received by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service for fee-paying service to farmers in Wales during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: In the 11 months to 29 February 1988, receipts for advisory services totalled £502,258.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service staff in Wales are fluent Welsh speakers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of fluent Welsh speakers employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales is 133.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in Wales; what were the corresponding figures for the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of people currently employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales is 354.

The information for 1 April (the nearest available date) in earlier years is as follows:

	Number
1983	377½
1984	366
1985	352
1986	347½
1987	356

Since ADAS reorganised in 1987 the figures include ADAS staff in Wales employed on the experimental husbandry farm and as national (United Kingdom) specialists. These officers were not included in the staffing figures to 1986 and the totals for 1983 to 1986 would need to be increased by about 40 to reflect the change in 1987.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to review the service given by members of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Services provided by ADAS are kept under continued review to ensure that the best possible advice is always available.

Wales and Marches Postal Board

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Wales and Marches Postal Board to discuss proposals to improve postal services in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Private Health Service Contractors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many people are employed by private health service contractors in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of people employed by private firms providing services to the NHS is not held centrally.

Brick Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many people are employed in the brick industry in Wales; and how many were employed in 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: Up-to-date information is not available, but census of employment data show there to have been 1,300 people employed in the manufacture of bricks, fireclay and refractory goods in 1978; and about 800 in the nearest comparable categories, structural clay products and refractory goods, in 1984.

Council House Rents

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average rent per council house in Wales in (a) 1979 and (b) 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The average weekly net unrebated rent of local authority dwellings in Wales was £6·32 in April 1979 and £17·91 in April 1987.

Government Employment and Training Measures

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are engaged in Government employment and training measures in Wales; what was the figure for expenditure on the YTS in 1986 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of people engaged in the following programmes in Wales at 31 January 1988 is as follows:

	Number
New Job Training Scheme	1,241
Youth Training Scheme	23,691
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	5,289
Community Programme	19,695
Community Industry	871
Job Release Scheme	712
Job Share Scheme	85
Jobstart Allowance	286
New Workers Scheme	1,930

Expenditure on YTS in the 1986-87 financial year was £51,985,000. The latest estimate of expenditure for the 1987-88 financial year is £58,092,000.

Local Authorities Staff

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of full-time staff employed by Welsh local authorities in 1979 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The number of full-time staff employed by Welsh local authorities in December 1979 was 108,388. The corresponding figure for December 1987 was 98,123.

Home Confinement

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards home confinement in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: District health authorities were given appropriate guidance in WHC(86) 69 issued in December 1986. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Electricity Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary for State of Wales if he will make a statement on the implications of the privatisation of the electricity industry for employment in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Employment in the privatised electricity industry in Wales will, as at present, be a matter for the industry itself. Electricity privatisation will bring new opportunities for the industry, for its employees and for the economy as a whole.

Rating Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the local authority associations in Wales about the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: We have received a number of written and oral representations from the Welsh local authority associations about the community charge.

Breast Screening

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on the implementation of breast screening in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I am pleased to announce that Dr. Deidre Hine has been appointed as director of the breast screening service in Wales. She is taking up her post, which is on the staff of the university of Wales college of medicine, today Premises have been acquired at 18, Cathedral road, Cardiff to house the Welsh breast screening centre. Screening should start at the centre later this year and the service will spread to the rest of Wales as quickly as possible. Our aim is for all parts of the Principality to be covered by a high-quality service by 1990.

Export Breakfasts

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of his two Welsh export breakfasts; and how many (a) business men and (b) officials he expects to attend.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 24 March 1988]: The catering costs, the hire of the venues, the costs associated with the presenter, the speakers, the equipment and the road crews came to £29,488·94 inclusive of VAT. The audiovisual element will be used generally by Welsh Office export staff and will feature in other presentations. Together, the two breakfasts stimulated a terrific turnout of almost 1,200 business men and women. Sixteen of my officials attended the Cardiff event, and 10 were at Rhyl. The breakfasts have already resulted in a considerable increase in inquiries for export services and have been widely praised by those who attended.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons were employed in the tourist industry in (a) the Bradford and (b) the Keighley travel-to-work areas at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Lee: The latest estimates of employees in employment in tourism-related industries, which relate to September 1984, are 8,200 for Bradford and 1,200 for Keighley. These estimates do not include the self-employed, for whom considerable estimates are not available.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people were on the enterprise allowance scheme in the London borough of Lewisham in 1986 and 1987, respectively; what proportion of these small businesses employed more than 25 people (a) in the first year of trading and (b) in the second year of trading; and what proportion failed in the first year of trading;

(2) if he will bring forward proposals to monitor the success rate of businesses started under the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. In the wider (inner London south) area, comprising Lewisham, Southwark, Greenwich, Bromley and Bexley, 1,506 people entered the enterprise allowance scheme in the 1986-87 financial year and 2,337 have joined so far in the 1987-88 financial year. Nationally, the rate of drop out during the allowance year has fluctuated within the range 11 to 16 per cent. since the scheme began.

The success rate of businesses started under the enterprise allowance scheme is already monitored though a programme of national surveys which was established when the scheme began. Latest evidence shows that 74 per cent. of those who complete a full year on the scheme are still trading six months after the allowance has ended, and 65 per cent. two years after the allowance has ceased.

The surveys also show that for every 100 businesses continuing six months after the allowance has ended, 71 people, in addition to the recipient of the allowance and any business partner, are employed at that time. Two years after the allowance has ceased, the number of additional people employed rises to 114 per 100 firms surviving.

Of those businesses which are employing others, at the 18-month point less than 1 per cent. are employing more than 20 people; the corresponding figure at the three-year point is around 3 per cent.

Training Project Programmes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the companies and organisations that have been invited to tender for Manpower Services Commission training project programmes in the last two years.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training project programmes were put to tender in 1985, 1986 and the latest figure for 1987 by the Manpower Services Commission; and what was the average value of the tenders.

Mr. Nicholls: The Manpower Services Commission did not keep a computerised central record of projects put out to tender until April 1987. From 1 April 1987 to 24 March 1988, 131 projects supporting the Manpower Service Commission's training programmes were tendered. The average contracted cost of these projects was £68,000. Information on the average value of individual tenders is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Restrictive Labour Practices

Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to look into restrictive labour practices.

Mr. Fowler: As part of their general concern to see the elimination of restrictive practices in all areas the Government have today referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) certain questions as to possible restrictive labour practices in television and film production, under the terms of section 79 of the Fair Trading Act 1973.

The reference has been made jointly by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department and myself, in exercise of the powers conferred by the Act.

The practices specified in the reference are those of (a) restricting the extent to which work is performed by workers who are not members of a particular trade union; and (b) requiring that minimum numbers of workers (whether or not of specified descriptions) be engaged on particular productions or tasks.

The questions referred are whether each practice exists; if so, whether it is a restrictive labour practice within the meaning of the Act; and what public interest effects there may be.

This reference is the first to be made under the provisions of section 79. It forms part of the initiatives which the Government have in hand following the report of the Peacock committee to promote efficiency and competitiveness in the industry. The Government believe that it will inform the steps now being taken within the industry in relation to changes in working practices to secure the future of all who work in it.

We anticipate that the MMC will be able to make its report by the end of this year.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretry of State for Employment what change there has been in the numbers earning double, treble and quadruple national average earnings since 1978-79; and what regional breakdown is available.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 24 March 1988] The numbers in the United Kingdom earning double, treble and quadruple national average earnings are estimated to have increased between 1978-79 and 1986-87 by 150,000, 90,000 and 50,000 respectively. These numbers include the self-employed. Regional data are not available.

YTS

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people aged 16 to 17 years completed a YTS training course in the London borough of Lewisham in 1987.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 23 March 1988]: Forty-nine young people completed a YTS training course in the London borough of Lewisham in 1987.

Two-year YTS commenced in April 1986 and young people who started a YTS course since then are not due to complete their training until 1988. Some 468 young people started YTS courses in Lewisham in 1987.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychosis have been discharged from mental hospitals in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Number of Discharges with primary diagnosis of schizophrenia

Year	Number
1977	2,983
1978	2,995
1979	3,069
1980	3,314
1981	3,348

Information is not yet available for 1987.

Rural Infrastructure (Plantation Timber)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the estimated cost to each of the regional authorities of Dumfries and Galloway, Highland and Border, of upgrading rural roads, bridges and other infrastructure to facilitate the extraction of plantation timber from remote hill and upland areas; and if he intends to lay business rates on such plantations in order to contribute towards the cost of such infrastructure.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The only information available is estimates prepared by the local authorities. Dumfries and Galloway regional council has prepared a programme totalling £13·3 million of road schemes to assist in the extraction of timber up to 1995. Highland regional council has included in its financial plan a total of £3·7 million for this purpose for the period up to 1992-93. Borders regional council is at present in discussion with the Forestry Commission in order to update its programme of schemes.

It is not intended to change the existing arrangements for the application of agricultural derating to woodlands.

Sudden Death

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish for each regional procurator fiscal jurisdiction (a) the number of pathologists employed, part-time or full-time, on sudden death procedure and (b) the number of police surgeons accredited to deal with sudden death procedures.

Mr. Rifkind: Pathologists are not employed by procurators fiscal but are instructed to perform autopsies in individual cases. It is only possible to provide the numbers of pathologists who are regularly instructed by procurators fiscal in each regional fiscaldom and these are as follows:

	Number
Glasgow and Strathkelvin	10
Grampian, Highlands and islands	5
Tayside, Central and Fife	3
Lothian and Borders	12
South Strathclyde, dumfries and Galloway	16
North Strathclyde	10

Police surgeons have a variety of duties but may be asked by procurators fiscal to assist them in sudden deaths cases. Figures are only available for the number of police surgeons in each police area rather than in each regional fiscaldom and are as follows:

	Number
Central	6
Dumfries and Galloway	1
Fife	6
Grampian	4
Lothian and borders	10
Northern	18
Strathclyde	98
Tayside	26

Forestry Grant Scheme

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will state the total hectareage for which moneys have been paid out under the forestry grant scheme from its inception in October 1981;

(2) if he will state the total amount paid out under the forestry grant scheme from its inception in October 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total amount paid out in grants to February 1988, the latest date for which information is available, was £23 million. This related to applications concerning 110,000 hectares of land.

Iceland (Electricity Imports)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has now received any proposals concerning the possible importation of electricity from Iceland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 23 March 1988 at column 140.

Uist and Galloway (Aerial Survey)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has concerning the results of the aerial survey of Uist and Galloway undertaken by the Scottish universities research and reactor centre; what action he proposes to take as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The results of the survey were presented to Scottish Office officials on 25 March and they are currently being assessed.

The survey was part of a research programme initiated by the Scottish universities research and reactor centre and was one in which the Scottish Office had expressed an interest. Prèliminary examination of the result indicates that they are not greatly different from what would be expected for the areas concerned from a knowledge of the rainfall during the passage of the cloud and of other factors.

Radioactivity (Aerial Surveys)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider commissioning the Scottish universities research and reactor centre to undertake a full aerial survey of radioactivity in Scotland to determine the residual post-Chernobyl effects and other concentrations of radioactivity.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Aerial surveying for deposited radioactivity is still at the development stage and is not yet proven or available for wider use. The widespread monitoring which was undertaken following the Chernobyl accident identified the areas of highest deposition and more detailed monitoring of the environment, livestock, crops and foodstuffs has been concentrated in those areas. The work is still continuing, and has shown that, except as regards sheep, radioactivity values, including those in soils, are well below levels at which action would be necessary.

Scottish Office (Permanent Under-Secretary)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the posts previously held by the recently appointed permanent under-secretary to the Scottish Office, giving for each post the date appointed and the grades at which the post was held.

Mr. Rifkind: Mr. Hillhouse joined the Civil Service in 1960. He first entered the Government communications headquarters and then transferred in 1962 to the Scottish Office, where he was assigned as an assistant principal to the Scottish Education Department, spending his first four years on a variety of short-term assignments. His career subsequent to his promotion to principal in 1966 is outlined below:—

Ford Plant, Dundee

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what direct personal contact he had with the Ford Motor company in the two weeks immediately preceding the announcement that the company would not be locating an electrical and electronic manufacturing plant in Dundee.

Mr. Rifkind: None. During that period all contacts with the company were being maintained through my officials in Locate in Scotland.

Inverclyde Initiative

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on Monday, 21 March, Official Report, column 15, he will estimate the number of jobs created by the Inverclyde initiative; of these, how many are full-time, and how many are part-time; and how many have been filled by (a) males and (b) females.

Mr. Lang: The Inverclyde initiative aims to stimulate local economic activity and create opportunities for employment. It does not in itself directly create new jobs. Information in the form requested is not therefore available.

Between March 1985, when the Inverclyde initiative was launched, and March 1988, 11,661 new permanent jobs and approximately 1,300 new temporary jobs have been created in Inverclyde district. A breakdown between full and part-time, male and female, is not available.

ENERGY

CEGB

9. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will next be meeting the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

48. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North, (Dr. Reid).

Nuclear Power Stations (Insurance)

14. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provision he anticipates being made to ensure that nuclear power stations have full insurance cover after privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: There are established arrangements under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 to provide compensation for claims for injury or damage arising from a nuclear incident. These arrangements satisfy our obligations under the relevant international conventions and are in line with the arrangements in force in most other western European countries.

Gas Disconnections

15. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the Gas Consumers Council document entitled "An analysis of Gas Disconnections."

Mr. Peter Morrison: I welcome the Gas Consumers' Council's report on disconnections. The council has found no evidence of a harder attitude on disconnections by British Gas since privatisation, but its report does recommend a number of important improvements to British Gas procedures.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps his Department takes to monitor the operation of the voluntary code of practice on gas disconnections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The code of practice on gas disconnections is not voluntary; it is required under condition 12 of British Gas authorisation. Under the condition, it is the responsibility of the Gas Consumers' Council and the Director General of Gas Supply to monitor the operation of the code.

Electricity Privatisation

16. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what organisations he has consulted since the publication of his White Paper on electricity privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: I am now discussing detailed arrangements with a wide range of parties, including the management, the unions and consumer bodies.

24. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what requirement he has placed upon the Central Electricity Generating Board to ensure that any coal-fired power stations sold by it to other generators maintain the highest standards of pollution control of gas and particulate emission, noise and wind-borne dust.

Mr. Parkinson: It is the responsibility of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution to determine whether and to what extent pollution control equipment is required at such stations. The level of noise generated is a matter for the appropriate local authority.

25. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many organisations have written to him as a result of the publication of his White Paper on electricity privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received representations from electricity consumers, unions, other interested bodies and nationalised industries and members of the public both before and since the publication of the White Paper.

46. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list his official outside advisers, including City institutions and others, who are being consulted on future plans for electricity privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: My official outside advisers on electricity privatisation are Kleinwort Benson Limited, Touche Ross and Co., Slaughter and May, Merz and McLellan, and Professor Stephen Littlechild of Birmingham university.

47. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received in connection with the powers of the regulator proposed by him for the electricity supply industry after privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received a number of representations on the proposed powers of the regulator.

Electricity Charges

17. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met representatives of (a) the Confederation of British Industry and (b) pensioners' organisations to discuss the proposed 9 per cent. increase in electricity charges; what is his latest estimate of the effects upon (i) the average costs of industry and (ii) the average costs of a pensioner couple living on the minimum state pension and supplementary benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I last met representatives from the CBI on 8 March and a pensioners' organisation on 15 December last year. The effect of the electricity tariff rises this April will be to increase industry's average costs by between one fifth and one eighth of 1 per cent; and to increase the average pensioner couple's household expenditure by about 35p a week.

Uranium

18. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what quantity of unprocessed uranium was purchased from South Africa by British Nuclear Fuels during the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: None. British Nuclear Fuels plc does not purchase unprocessed uranium from South Africa or anywhere else.

Electricity Council

19. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Electricity Council, and what subjects he proposes to discuss.

32. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the latest production figures for output per manshift in British Coal; and what were the comparable figures three years ago.

Mr. Parkinson: Deep-mined revenue output per man shift was 3·90 tonnes for the week ended 12 march. The average for 1984-85 was 2·08 tonnes.

26. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the tonnage expected to be produced by deep-mined and opencast operations in Scotland in 1988.

Mr. Parkinson: Output forecasts are a matter for British Coal.

Nirex

21. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of Nirex; and what subjects he discussed.

22. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what measures are currently being considered by his Department's Energy Efficiency Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department's Energy Efficiency Office continues to study a wide range of measures to help in improving efficiency in the use of energy. It is currently consulting with outside bodies about the possible development of schemes designed to recover the EEO's costs. I hope to announce the outcome of this work before the summer recess.

Coal Industry Dispute

23. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received seeking reconsideration of his decision not to raise with the chairman of British Coal the reinstatement of miners sacked during the 1984-85 coal strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: None, apart from those of the hon. Member.

Power Station, Kingsnorth

27. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive an application from the Central Electricity Generating Board for a new coal-fired power station at Kingsnorth on the Medway.

Mr. Parkinson: The timing of an application for Kingsnorth, if made, will be a matter for the CEGB.

Windmills

28. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the type of sites viable for giant windmills; and what representations he has received about the extent of visual intrusion consequent upon any projected building of such windmills.

Mr. Parkinson: The types of site considered to be viable for medium and large-scale wind turbine generators are those having medium to high wind speeds, in open terrain and which are located sufficiently far from the nearest habitation.

I have received a small number of representations from members of the public on experimental medium-sized machines currently under test.

An assessment of the environmental implications and public acceptability of renewable energy sources is a key element of my Department's current research and development programme. The programme is also examining constraints on the United Kingdom's total wind energy resource that would be imposed by such environmental factors as national parks, areas designated as being of outstanding natural beauty and urban land.

Electricity Area Board Chairmen

29. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to meet electricity area board chairmen; and what subjects he proposes to discuss.

43. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to meet electricity area board chairmen; and what subjects he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 24 March 1988, at columns 179-80.

Heat and Power Schemes

31. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his policy regarding public funding of combined heat and power schemes.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department encourages the evaluation of CHP schemes by assisting some feasibility studies by industry and commerce to establish whether CHP is the most energy efficient and economic option. If these studies show the developer that CHP is economically viable and affordable, then there is no need for public subsidy.

Coal Industry

34. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the long-term future of the coal industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of British Coal at regular intervals to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Coal Industry (Financial Support)

35. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on the proposed level of financial support for the coal mining industry in 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

39. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about the level of financial support planned for the coal mining industry in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Parkinson: I have noted the representations made in the House about the future level of financial support for the coal mining industry.

British Coal's external financing limit for 1988-89 has been set at £670 million. It is envisaged that this will be financed as follows:

	£ million
Restructuring grant	116·0
Other non-deficit grants	273·5
Net borrowing	280·5

The external financing limit for 1989-90 has not yet been agreed.

British Coal Enterprise Ltd.

36. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many jobs have been created by British Coal Enterprise Ltd. since its formation.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received a number of representations in relation to future expenditure levels for research into the renewable sources of energy, the most recent of which have come from Members of this House.

Over £124 million has already been invested by my Department in developing and promoting the renewable technologies and strong support will continue to be provided to ensure their full economic potential is realised. The public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288, published in January 1988) envisages around £50 million will be spent on research into these technologies over the next three years. Information for subsequent years is not available.

An energy paper setting out the Government's strategy in relation to renewable sources of energy will be published in June.

Nuclear Generation

38. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the minimum non-fossil fuel generated electricity in the privately owned electricity industry structure which he proposes for England and Wales he envisages will be generated from nuclear stations.

Mr. Parkinson: This will depend on a number of factors, such as relative fuel prices and the development of fuel technologies. But I would expect that in the early years after privatisation the major proportion will come from nuclear power stations.

Hinkley Point C Power Station

40. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to be in a position to announce the starting date for the public inquiry into the Central Electricity Generating Board application to build Hinkley Point C power station.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 21 March 1988 at columns 21-22.

CBI (Energy Costs)

41. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he proposes to have any further discussions at an early date with the Confederation of British Industry regarding energy costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I discussed electricity prices at a recent meeting with the CBI. I have agreed to speak to the CBI council on 12 May.

45. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the amount of coal mined in South Africa imported into the United Kingdom in each year since 1980.

Mr. Parkinson: The following is the amount of coal imported into the United Kingdom from South Africa for each year since 1980:

Year	Quantity '000 tonnes
1980	66
1981	80
1982	67
1983	58
1984	257

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) who will bear, following the privatisation of the electricity supply industry, the total costs and full responsibility for the safe disposal of nuclear waste;

(2) who will be responsible, following the privatisation of the Central Electricity Generating Board, for the decommissioning of nuclear power stations; and who will bear the cost for the decommissioning.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) on 22 March 1988 at column 68.

Coal (Sulphur Content)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will tabulate information available to him on the sulphur content of coal used (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in each other European Economic Community country for the purpose of power generation.

Mr. Parkinson: The average sulphur content of United Kingdom power station coal was 1·6 per cent. in 1986-87.

Information on the sulphur content of coal used in other EEC countries, for power generation alone, is not readily available. The following table, however, gives independent estimates of the average sulphur content of coals used for all purposes in each of the member states in 1983.

Electricity

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the average cost per kilowatt hour of electricity generation from the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Parkinson: The CEGB annual report for 1986-87 gives a figure of 3·365 p/kWh.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has received any proposals concerning the possible importation of electricity from Iceland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

National Nuclear Corporation

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the National Nuclear Corporation to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Parkinson: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 25 July to 29 July 1988.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if the plutonium exported to Belgium under the Euratom-UKAEA agreement of 3 May 1968 is currently still in the ownership of Belgonucléaire; if the safeguards provisions agreed to cover the export of this 180 kg consignment still exist; and what knowledge Her Majesty's Government possess regarding the current location of this plutonium;

(2) if 200 kg of plutonium exported under bilateral safeguards to the Federal Republic of Germany, for use in the NUKEM facility in Hanau, covered by an agreement between the UKAEA and Euratom dated 4 August 1969, is still owned and used by NUKEM; if any subsequent exports of safeguarded plutonium have taken place between United Kingdom companies and NUKEM; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson [holding answer 4 March 1988]: Deliveries of plutonium under these agreements were made under Euratom safeguards. The current location of the plutonium is a matter for the state concerned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Press Gallery

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the sums received from the Press Gallery in respect of accommodation and other services provided in the House; and when the sums concerned were reviewed.

Mr. Wakeham: No such payment has been received from the Press Gallery. Any review of this arrangement would be a matter for the Services Committee.

Line of Route (Refreshments)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Council if he will give consideration to making facilities available for refreshments for visitors on the Line of Route in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Wakeham: Existing refreshment facilities in the Palace of Westminster are already at full capacity and no other accommodation suitable for conversion to the use suggested is available. This situation is unlikely to change until after extra catering accommodation becomes available in the New Building. At that time, the Catering Sub-Committee of the Services Committee may wish to give the matter further consideration.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by Civil Service grade the number of officials in his Department located outside London; and what proportion they represent of all officials employed by his Department.

Mr. Ridley: The table shows the latest numbers of officials, by grade, in my Department (including PSA) located outside London and the percentage which those numbers represent of my total staff.

Grade	Number	Per cent.
3	9	0·03
4	12	0·04
5	35	0·12
6	128	0·40

9[1] (Higher Executive Officer)	2,049	6·33
10[1] (Executive Officer)	3,703	11·45
11[1] (Administrative Officer)	2,234	6·91
12[1] (Administrative Assistant)	1,960	6·06
Industrial staff	7,697	23·80

[1] Civil Service grades 3 to 7 are unified. In the non-industrial grades below grade 7 different occupational groups exist; for convenience these have been grouped in bands numbered 8 to 12 which are broadly equivalent to the general grades shown in parentheses.

Tree Preservation Orders

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, following the loss of trees through the hurricane, he has any plans to review tree preservation orders in the south of England.

Mr. Moynihan: Reviewing, and where appropriate varying, individual tree preservation orders is the responsibility of the local planning authority. The Department is undertaking a wide-ranging review of tree preservation legislation and procedures, and this will take into account the implications of the losses of trees in last autumn's storm. In addition, as I said in the Adjournment debate on March 22, our intention is to take prompt action to remedy the specific problem that now exists following the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of Bell v. Canterbury city council.

Warrington-Runcorn New Town

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each year since the inception of Warrington-Runcorn new town the square footage of factory space (a) allocated and (b) filled; and if he will give an estimate of the number of jobs created and safeguarded in so doing.

Mrs. Roe: Since 1981, when the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation was formed, the annual completions, and occupations of factory space, and the numbers of industrial jobs resulting are as follows:

	Factory floor space (sq ft)
	completed	occupied	Jobs created
1981-82	683,200	519,865	1,294
1982-83	585,025	525,050	852

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of his Department's research project on tenants' views on the future of certain estates in Nottingham.

Mr. Ridley: My Department is not carrying out any research on the future of any housing estates in Nottingham. A small sample of tenants in the city are, however, along with others in other places, being asked to identify the factors which are important in their choice of landlord. The cost of the interviews in Nottingham is approximately £1,550.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have informed his Department during the last six months of the possible transfer of their housing stock (i) to a newly created company, (ii) to a housing association, (iii) to a friendly society or (iv) to a private trust; which local authorities have informed his Department that they firmly intend to make such transfers of their stock; and which local authorities have so far submitted outline or detailed proposals of this kind for approval by his Department.

Mrs. Roe: A number of authorities have contacted the Department over the past six months to discuss the possible transfer of their council housing to other bodies. With the two exceptions stated later, those discussions have been informal. If a local authority decides that it wishes to transfer its housing, it will need to consult tenants fully before applying to the Secretary of State for consent to the transfer. No authority has yet submitted an application.

The Department has received outline proposals from Bournemouth borough council and Rochford district council.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury, Official Report, 20 January, columns 749-52, how many additional units of (a) ordinary housing accommodation, provided by local authorities by refurbishing their empty dwellings, (b) hostel accommodation, provided by local authorities by buying and converting empty private dwellings, (c) hostel accommodition, provided by housing associations by buying and converting empty private dwellings and (d) other forms of accommodation are expected to be provided in (a) Greater London, (b) the south-east, and (c) the south-west giving this information: (i) for each of these regions and (ii) for each local authority in these regions, which has received an additional housing capital allocation.

Mrs. Roe: The information requested, based on estimates by the authorities concerned, is given in the following table:

Policies (Market Research)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what market research on policies has been funded by his Department before such policies have been agreed to by the House.

Mr. Ridley: The Department carries out no market research. Research is carried out to assist in the development and evaluation of policies but not to obtain information for the purpose of "marketing" them.

Crown Premises (Valuation)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1), pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 461, why the Property Services Agency was not felt to be capable of establishing the true commercial rent for the Crown premises at Richmond yard;

(2) whether the contract to value the Crown premises at Richmond yard was subject to tender or was a single source contract.

(3) how much money is set aside by the London region of the Property Services Agency for funding private sector valuations of Crown premises.

(4) what are the criteria for deciding whether or not to have a private sector valuation of Crown premises.

Mr. Chope: It is the Government's policy that Departments should be charged a full market rent for the accommodation they occupy. As the first new freehold office to have been built in Whitehall for many years, it was especially important to obtain an entirely independent assessment of the market rental value of Richmond house to ensure that the full costs of occupation were borne by the Department concerned.

The normal procedures for seeking independent professional advice were followed by the Property Services Agency in this case, taking into account the known experience and suitability of consultancy firms for the particular task. A tender was not considered appropriate in this case, the fees being settled by negotiation with the selected firm in accordance with commercial practice.

It is the Government's policy that Departments should place work in the private sector wherever appropriate and a substantial proportion of the Property Services Agency's work is undertaken by private consultants. The agency's London region make provision in their annual estimates for such work in the estates field, including valuations. Specific requirements for the latter are not always known at estimates time, and no specific sum is set aside in the estimates for this latter purpose.

Water

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the procedure for the payment for water consumed through an underground leak during the trial period of metering; and how the sewerage return rate will be calculated.

Mr. Colin Moynihan: As with existing metered supplies, customers in the trial areas will be charged on the basis of the amount of water which passes through the meter, including any water that leaks from supply pipes on the customer's side of the meter. However, provided that there has been no obvious negligence or deliberate abuse by the customer, most water undertakers will adjust abnormally high metered consumption due to a leak back to a typical figure for measured consumption, on condition that the customer repairs the leak where it is the legal responsibility of the customer. This would apply both to the measured water supply charge and to the sewerage charge, which will be assesed on the usual fixed percentage of clean water supplied. The water industry is considering issuing a code of practice which would make a clear statement about the adjustment of bills in cases of leakage.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the code of practice for the water metering trial areas; and when the contractors for the Isle of Wight installation will be announced.

Mr. Moynihan: We do not intend to publish a code of practice for the water metering trial areas. Subject to the enactment of the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill, each metering trial scheme will have to be approved under clause 4 by my right hon. Friend the Secretry of State, who may make his approval subject to conditions. Water undertakers are already required to make such schemes available to the public. In addition, schedule 1 to the Bill and regulations to be made under clause 5, will form a water metering code, which will apply to metering generally, as well as to the trials. The choice and timing of appointment of contractors to install meters during the course of the proposed trial on the Isle of Wight is a matter for Southern Water, although my right hon. Friend will need to be satisfied that all undertakers involved in the trials have made satisfactory arrangements to ensure that contractors who need to enter people's homes to carry out installation work are properly vetted.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households have had their water supplies disconnected in each year between 1982-83 and 1987-88.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: The number of households disconnected by water authorities in England and Wales was as follows:

	Houses
1982-83	1,171
1983-84	2,685
1984-85	2,148
1985-86	4,562
1986-87	7,400

Figures for 1987-88 are not yet available.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what publicity has been produced by his Department to announce the new financial arrangements for customers of water authorities in the light of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: I understand that, as part of the publicity arrangements for the social security reforms, the Department of Health and Social Security is sending a leaflet explaining income support to all existing supplementary benefit claimants. This leaflet includes advice on paying water charges. Other explanatory leaflets available to the general public also include advice on the new benefit provisions.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what arrangements he has made with local authority environmental health officers for the monitoring of water disconnections to domestic users by (a) the water authorities and (b) the private water companies after 11 April; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements he has made with the private water companies for them to publicise to consumers the new financial arrangements that will be in force on 11 April;

(3) what arrangements he has made with the private water companies about monitoring the effects of the new financial arrangements for water supplies after the enforcement of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: None. Disconnections are the responsibility of individual water undertakers. The water industry operates a strict code of practice on disconnections which is explained in its leaflet "Water Services Bills—How to get help if you can't pay your bill". It advises people who have difficulty paying their water charges to get in touch with their water supplier. It also explains that advice can be obtained from the citizens advice bureau or consumer advice bureau, and that people on supplementary benefit should contact their local social security office. These arrangements have worked well in the past, and I am confident that they will continue to do so.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to monitor the disconnections of water supply to domestic users after 11 April.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: Information on the number of disconnections for non-payment is collected annually by the Department from each water authority. We have no plans to change this arrangement.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of water disconnections that occurred for each of the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: Figures are collected by the Department on an annual, not a monthly, basis.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases have been reported in the past 12 months in the Houghton and Washington area of water containing nitrate in excess of the European Economic Community recommended levels.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: None.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will be responsible for monitoring the implementation of legislation associated with European Community directives on raw and drinking waters when water authorities are privatised.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales will be responsible for monitoring the implementation of legislation associated with EC directives on drinking water quality when water authorities are privatised. The National Rivers Authority will be responsible for monitoring to assess compliance with EC directives on raw water quality. Ultimate responsibility for ensuring that EC requirements are met will, however, continue to lie with Her Majesty's Government.

Buildings (Logbooks)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to bring forward proposals for the introduction of a system of logbooks for buildings, with particular reference to their maintenance record and potential hazards; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from Mr. Chris March of Salford university and Mr. Steve Carwell of Leeds polytechnic about their proposals for a system of logbooks in relation to buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have received no representations from Mr. March and Mr. Curwell relating to logbooks for buildings, but I am aware of their study into hazardous building materials. While I am naturally concerned that materials used in the construction of buildings should not have a deleterious effect on the health of users and occupiers, I am not convinced that the introduction of a system of logbooks would be a practical way of dealing with the problem. A study of "Health and the Building Regulations" was undertaken as part of a current review of the regulations, and further work relating to the health effects of indoor pollution is included in my Department's research programme. Some action has already been taken to deal with a number of specific hazards including lead and asbestos.

Planning Appeals

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in each of the years since 1979 he has overruled his inspector's advice on planning appeals in (a) Suffolk county and (b) Waveney district.

Mr. Waldegrave: Between 1 January 1984, the earliest date for which such information is available, and 31 December 1987, there was only one planning appeal from Suffolk in which the Secretary of State's decision was contrary to the inspector's recommendation, following a public inquiry. That appeal did not come from Waveney.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has of the approximate percentage of petrol stations in each region of the United Kingdom where unleaded petrol is currently available; and what information he has on comparable national figures in respect of the other principal countries of western Europe.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: Figures provided by the United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association on the percentages of petrol stations in the United Kingdom which sell unleaded petrol are as follows:

	Per cent.
England and Wales	3·7
Scotland	3·8
Northern Ireland	1·5

Percentage figures are not available on a regional basis but at 15 February the numbers of stations were:

	Per cent.
Wales	27
Scotland	59
Northern Ireland	14
England:
East Midlands	42
Eastern	102
Greater London	98
North West	70
Northern Region	13
South East	114
South West	67
West Midlands	53
Yorkshire and Humberside	54

The total number is growing rapidly.

Other countries of western Europe fall into one of two categories: either unleaded petrol is available at virtually all retail outlets, or, as in the United Kingdom, it is in the process of becoming more widely available. The Federal Republic of Germany and Switzerland fall into the former category, France and Italy into the latter. For these two countries, the approximate percentages of retail outlets selling unleaded petrol are:

	Per cent.
France	1·6
Italy	2·5

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide information available to him on the regional breakdown of the numbers of unleaded petrol outlets; what studies his Department has either commissioned or undertaken into the projected growth path of unleaded petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: On the first part of his question, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) today.

Figures provided by the United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association show that in mid-February there were 715 stations in the United Kingdom selling unleaded petrol. The number of outlets is expected to increase rapidly following the Budget. It has already increased to 800 and by the end of 1988 there are expected to be over 2,000.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the names and professional designations of the members of the Unleaded Petrol Group, indicating which interest groups they represent respectively.

Mr. Moynihan: I chair the group. The non-governmental organisations represented, with one name for each, are:

Non-governmental Organisations	Names	Professional Designations
Automobile Association	Mr. M. W. R. Frost	Head of Consumer and Current Affairs
Association of Fleet Car Operators	Mr. J. J. Hughes	National Secretary

The Departments of Energy, of Trade and Industry and of Transport, HM Customs and Excise and the Scottish Development Department are represented at official level. The United Kingdom national committee for the European Year of the Environment was represented during the year.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what kind of information about those companies on the Crown Suppliers' approved list of suppliers he intends to release to commercial bidders for the privatised Crown Suppliers' operations; which companies are involved; whether he will seek their permission to release the information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government do not intend to disclose to third parties information provided to them in confidence without the agreement of the parties concerned.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce a financial institution to advise on privatising the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 25 March to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns).

Rate Precepts

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a list of the rate precepts in the shire counties for 1988-89; and if he will indicate how much is given to each county under each council's spending programme for the year expressed as an amount per person in each county; how much would be given to each county as an amount per person if the councils spent at their GRE assessment levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows:

Rating Reform

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether students attending universities in Great Britain whose parents are resident in Northern Ireland will be required to pay the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: All full-time students attending universities in Great Britain will be required to pay 20 per cent. of the personal community charge for the area in which they have their term-time address.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what, assuming the full replacement of rates by the community charge and the implementation of the proposals in the Local Government Finance Bill for non-domestic rates and the grant system, in 1988-89 (a) for England, (b) for each class of local authority and (c) for each local authority, showing precepting authorities separately, the following items in pounds per adult would be (i) the community charge without safety net, (ii) the safety net, (iii) needs grant, and (iv) redistributed non-domestic rate revenue, showing also the corresponding 1988-89 domestic rate poundage and, in pounds per adult, the average rate bill and local authority expenditure.

Mr. Ridley: I do not have information which is sufficiently complete upon which to make these estimates. I will publish estimates in due course. The hon. Member is, of course, aware that we do not propose to allocate either revenue support grant or non-domestic rates separately to precepting authorities.

District General Hospital (Norwich)

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when a public inquiry will be held into the plans to site the second district general hospital for Norwich at Colney; and when notice was first given of the inquiry.

Mr. Waldegrave: The non-statutory public inquiry into the East Anglian regional health authority's proposals will begin on 12 April 1988. Written notice of the inquiry was first given to the regional health authority and to the South Norfolk district council on 3 March, in keeping with the six-week minimum notice period applicable to statutory inquiries under the Town and Country Planning Acts. Copies of statements and documents have been available for public inspection at the district council offices since September 1987.

New Hospitals

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public inquiries have been held into the siting of new hospitals since 1 April 1983 in the United Kingdom; and if he will state the amount of notice given in each case.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is not immediately available. I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Superglass Insulation Ltd.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what part was played by the Association for the Conservation of Energy in drawing up the list of approved materials for the home insulation grant scheme;

(2) what representations were made to his Department to include products of the Superglass Insulation Company of Clydebank and Stirling in the list of approved materials for the home insulations grant scheme;

(3) if any products of the Superglass Insulation Company in Clydebank and Stirling are included in the list of approved materials for the home insulation grant scheme;

(4) if the Scottish Development Agency made representations to his Department regarding the inclusion of Superglass insulation board in the list of approved materials for the home insulation grants scheme.

Mrs. Roe: Superglass Insulation Ltd. have only sought the inclusion of one product in the schedule of approved materials under the homes insulation scheme, but as this did not achieve BSI registration until 1 January 1988, it could not be included in the new scheme made by Ministers in mid-December. No representations were received from the Scottish Development Agency, or anyone else, about including this company's products in the current list. The Association for the Conservation of Energy plays no part in drawing up the schedule.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many waste disposal sites there are in the United Kingdom; and how many were the cause of methane gas explosions during the last 12 months.

Mr. Moynihan: There are approximately 5,110 waste disposal facilities in the United Kingdom, of which some 4,156 are landfill sites. Of these, some 2,100 are capable of generating methane. Information on incidents associated with methane gas from landfill sites is not collected centrally. However, the Department is aware of three explosions in the last 12 months associated with this phenomenon.

Stockport

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the new data to calculate traffic flow for Stockport were compiled; why this affected the grant related expenditure calculations; why the formula was implemented in the current financial year; and why there was a consequent loss of grant for Stockport.

Mr. Chope: In assessing the relative need of authorities to spend on highways maintenance account is taken of the length of roads for which an authority is responsible, and relative road usage particularly by heavy goods vehicles. Estimates of road usage are produced by the Department of Transport based on measured flows at selected sites within each local authority area. The Department of Transport has recently changed the method of estimating road usage and in particular now takes account of flow estimates for all appropriate sections of road rather than only a sample of measuring sites. In the 1988-89 rate support grant settlement, we included these improved estimates of road usage in the highways maintenance GRE. Authorities that were thereby assessed to have higher relative road usage received more grant, whereas authorities such as Stockport that were assessed as having lower relative road usage received less grant.

Defective Houses (Grants)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will ensure that the following applications, identified by their reference number and applicant's surname, for grant towards the repair of defective Cornish unit style former council houses, submitted to his Bristol office on 25 February, and still awaiting notice of determination, receive such determination not later than Friday 25 March, so that mortgages to finance the non-grant covered repair cost may be obtained before the law as to tax allowance on mortgages alters on 5 April: P.R.C.1 (Greenslade), P.R.C.3 (Sydenham), P.R.C.6 (Pickering), P.R.C.7 (Cotterell), P.R.C.8 (Rawding), P.R.C.9 (Maglov), P.R.C.11 (Harvey), P.R.C.12 (Cross), P.R.C.13 (Smith), P.R.C.14 (Harvey), P.R.C.17 (Morgan), P.R.C.22 (Bullivant), P.R.C.23 (Mathias), P.R.C.24 (Parsons), P.R.C.25 (Gibbons) and P.R.C.26 (Dakin); and if he will also ensure that the application P.R.C.28 by Mr. Smith on 8 March is determined by 25 March;

(2) if he will make it his policy to give notification of the acceptability of grant applications for repair of defective Cornish unit former council houses, submitted to his Bristol office on 25 February and 8 March, so that applicants are able to obtain mortgages for the rest of the repair cost before the taxation provisions applicable to such mortgages alter adversely on 5 April.

Mrs. Roe: All applications for higher expenditure limits under the housing defects legislation are dealt with as quickly as possible, and preferential treatment cannot be given to individual cases. However, irrespective of whether such decisions have been given, owners may be able to arrange loans to cover the possible extent of costs that they may need to bear themselves, and should seek their own professional advice on this.

Sports and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 20 January, Official Report, column 960, regarding the introduction of competition into the management of local authority sports and leisure facilities, he is now able to make a statement on the responses to the relevant consultation paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: We have yet to complete our detailed consideration of the more than 350 responses to consultation. If we do decide to apply the competition provisions of part I of the Local Government Bill to the management of sport and leisure facilities, we shall lay an order to that effect after the Bill becomes law. The nature and timing of the order-making procedure (including the necessary consultation which would have to be undertaken on the terms of the Order), would preclude the implementation of compulsory competition for the management of sport and leisure facilities in April 1989. If we do go ahead, some delay beyond that date is inevitable. My right hon. Friend will make a statement about implementation for the activities listed in the Bill shortly.

Water Authorities (Billing Lists)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to require water authorities to have the approval of his Department before permitting the use of their billing lists by direct mail services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 March 1988]: No.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has of the proceeds of sale of mental hospital sites in Northern Ireland in each of the next seven years.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to close any of the major psychiatric or mental handicap hospitals in Northern Ireland in the foreseeable future. As a result, the disposal of property will depend on whether it is possible to rationalise services on the existing sites in order to free specific areas for sale. Accurate estimates of the extent of such sales cannot therefore be made at this stage.

Homosexuality (Inquiry)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information was available to his Department on previous investigations carried out into allegations of homosexuality amongst prominent persons by the chair of the inquiry into children's homes and hostels, Sir George Terry, as chief constable of the Sussex police.

Mr. Stanley: A copy of the complete report on the investigations undertaken by Sir George Terry was received by the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Patient Treatment

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is his policy towards National Health Service patients from areas of the United Kingdom where waiting lists are above the national average being offered treatment in Northern Ireland;

(2) whether any National Health Service districts in Northern Ireland are making available their excess capacity to National Health Service districts in other parts of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The services provided by the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland are available to all residents of the United Kingdom. However, for reasons of geography it is unlikely to be practical or cost-effective to reduce waiting lists by transporting patients from the mainland for treatment. In addition, the planned rationalisation of acute services in Northern Ireland means that there will be little scope to absorb any significant additional work load from outside the Province.

Private Health Care

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy towards the size of the private health care sector in Northern Ireland relative to that in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government welcome the contribution at present being made by the private health care sector and would be happy to see further co-operation between the private and public sectors in the provision of health care in the Province.

Nurse Recruitment and Training

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there are any plans for the National Health Service in Northern Ireland to recruit and train nursing staff for other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) wrote to all health authorities in Great Britain in May 1987 drawing attention to Northern Ireland's capacity to recruit and train a range of staff, including nurses, for other parts of the United Kingdom. Three regional health authorities subsequently sought assistance to recruit Northern Ireland school leavers into their nurse training programmes. The Northern Ireland National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has agreed to circulate recruitment advertising material on their behalf and to draw attention to the job opportunities in these regions during school visitation programmes. No health authority has yet asked the Northern Ireland Health and Personal Social Services to recruit and train nursing or any other staff on its behalf.

Local Authority Members (Oaths)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his current policy towards the introduction of an oath for local authority members; when he expects to bring forward legislative proposals for such an oath; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: The Government are considering the introduction of a written declaration abjuring support for terrorist violence, as a condition of election to district councils in Northern Ireland. No final decision has yet been reached.

Hayshed Bugging

Mr. Tam Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what legal authority a bug was placed in the hayshed at Ballymeeny Road North in November 1982, prior to the death of Michael Tighe.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 21 March 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him on 25 March 1988, at column 241.

Homelessness

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement detailing the Government's intentions on funding in 1989-90 for the Housing Executive to fulfil its proposed new responsibilities to the homeless in Northern Ireland, indicating how much of such funding will be additional and indicating the calculations and considerations involved in arriving at the Government's decision.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 24 March 1988]: The resources currently devoted by the health and social services boards to helping homeless people would be transferred to the Housing Executive if the proposal that it should take over responsibility for homelessness is accepted by Parliament.

Future bids by the Housing Executive for additional funding to meet the needs of the homeless would be assessed within the framework of public expenditure surveys.

It is estimated, taking into account the current expenditure of the health and social services boards that additional expenditure of about £300,000 per annum might be required initially.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Marine Fish Farming

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to promote the development of marine fish farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Assistance for the development of marine fish farming is already available from a number of Government sources and from the European Community. In addition, the R and D effort of the Fisheries Departments involves work on species suitable for cultivation in sea water.

Peanuts

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received seeking regulations to prevent pet shops selling contaminated peanuts for human consumption, particularly by children.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received two representations on this subject.

As I said in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 17 February, at column 677, it should be self-evident to the public that feed sold in pet shops was not intended for human consumption.

Sheep Exports (Restrictions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions were placed upon sheep moved between 25 April and 20 June 1986 from the designated areas of Cumbria to Staffordshire for further export to (a) EEC countries and (b) other third countries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None. There was no designated area in Cumbria before 20 June 1986.

Fishing Fleet

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present restrictions on non-pressure stock licences, in particular as they affect the Lowestoft fishing fleet.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 25 March 1988]: These restrictions were introduced last August on a holding basis to ensure that United Kingdom quotas are preserved for the United Kingdom fishing industry. I am continuing to keep the restrictions under close review.

Cod

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current evidence of cod stocks in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 25 March 1988]: Taking account of scientific evidence including that on the strength of the 1985 year class on which the North sea cod stock will be heavily dependent in 1988, the total allowable catch for the stock in 1988 has been set at 160,000 tonnes. The annual and international process of obtaining and analysing scientific evidence should be completed when the Advisory Committee for Fisheries Management meets from 16 to 26 May 1988 and will provide the basis on which considerations would be made by the European Community in cnsultation with Norway of revisions, if any, to the courrent level of TACs.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is yet in a position to give details of the proposed legislation to ensure that no irradiated food is made available for sale to the consumer in the United Kingdom without the fact being clearly labelled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 March 1988]: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucestershire West (Mr. Marland) on 24 March at c. 207.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies

76. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what representations he has received as to possible agencies to be set up in accordance with the proposals in "Improving Management in Government: The Next Steps" in addition to the first 12 announced by the Prime Minister in February.

Mr. Luce None. The project manager is considering a number of suggestions from officials in Departments which he will put to me in due course.

Reform (Public Expenditure)

78. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what is his estimate of the effect on public expenditure of implementing the recommendations of the efficiency unit report, "Improving Management in Government: The Next Steps."

Mr. Luce The Government strategy on public expenditure remains unchanged, but we are always seeking ways of achieving better value for money.

Briefing Sessions

79. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what is his policy towards the provision of briefing sessions by his Department for hon. Members.

Mr. Luce I attach great importance to the provision of briefing for hon. Members on all sides of the House on the work of the Civil Service and current developments in government. In 1986 and 1987, three briefings were given on management reforms in government and on the work of the Management and Personnel Office. Earlier this month the Civil Service college organised two briefing seminars on the work of the Civil Service for hon. Members who first entered the House at the beginning of this Parliament.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Job Decentralisation

80. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new proposals he has to decentralise Civil Service jobs from the south-east of England to Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 18 January to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) at column 475-6.

Income Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reduction in projected tax receipts for 1988-89 would result from reducing the rate of income tax to 40 per cent. for those at present paying tax at a highest marginal rate of (a) 60 per cent., (b) 55 per cent. and (c) 50 per cent. and (d) 45 per cent., assuming the 40 per cent. tax rate applied on all taxable income above £18,701.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table shows the reduction in income tax liabilities in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income resulting from the abolition of tax rates higher than 40 per cent. for taxpayers at each of the higher marginal rates. The calculations assume that the 1987-88 income tax regime is indexed to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory formula before the higher tax rates are reduced to 40 per cent.

Reductions in income tax liabilities by marginal rate:

Marginal rate per cent	Tax reduction £ million
45	40
50	150
55	180
60	1,710
Total	2,080

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of what a 1p, 2p, 3p, 4p, 5p, 6p and 7p cut in the standard rate of income tax would represent as a percentage of gross earnings before tax for (i) a married man and (ii) a single man on (a) 75 per cent., (b) 80 per cent., (c) 90 per cent., (d) 100 per cent., (e)

125 per cent., (f) 150 per cent., (g) 175 per cent. and (h) 200 per cent. of national average earnings, assuming that his earnings are his only source of income.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 March 1988]: The information is in the table.

The calculations assume that the man's earnings are his only source of income. Average earnings are those for men in all occupations paid at adult rates who work a full week and whose pay is unaffected by absence. The level of earnings in 1988-89 is a projection based on the assumptions given to the Government Actuary for reviewing national insurance contributions in paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1987. The single person's allowance, married man's allowance, basic rate limit and rates of tax for 1988-89 are those announced in the Budget on March 15.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the income of a married man with two children on average earnings was taken in direct taxation in 1979; and what is his estimate for October.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A married man on average earnings with two children under the age of 11 paid 14·4 per cent. of his income in tax (net of child benefit) in 1978-79; under the proposed regime for 1988-89 he will pay 11·0 per cent. Average earnings are those for men in all occupations paid at adult rates who work a full week and whose pay is unaffected by absence. The level of earnings for 1988-89 (£244·70 per week) is a projection in accordance with the assumptions given to the Government Actuary for reviewing national insurance contributions in paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1987. The estimate for 1988-89 is therefore provisional.

Betting Duty

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of betting duty collected on-course and off-course in each of the four districts in Northern Ireland in each of the years ended 31 March 1985, 31 March 1986, 31 March 1987, and from 1 April 1987 to date.

Mr. Lilley: No separate figures are kept of the amounts of betting duty collected in Northern Ireland. The on-course betting duty was abolished with effect from 29 March 1987.

Tax Rates and Work Incentives

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the Treasury of the report by Professor C. V. Brown of Stirling University on tax rates and work incentives commissioned by his Department.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This study was initiated in 1978 and consisted of a survey of households followed by analysis of the data and econometric modelling by the University of Stirling.

The survey work was carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and cost some £400,000. The data—with full documentation—have been placed in the ESRC data archive and are available to other researchers.

The analytical work at Stirling cost some £200,000 and was funded by the Treasury. Twenty two technical working papers have been published. The report is in the Library of the House.

Interest Rates

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what policy objectives, besides the control of inflation, influence the determination of United Kingdom interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: As the Chancellor made clear in his Budget speech, short-term interest rates remain the essential instrument of monetary policy, and, within a continuous and comprehensive assessment of monetary conditions, they are set at the level necessary to ensure downward pressure on inflation in the framework of the MTFS.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average pound/deutschmark exchange rate affecting deutschmark purchases by the United Kingdom monetary authorities over the past 12 months.

Mr. Lilley: It is the long-standing practice of successive Governments not to comment on market tactics or reveal details of the asset or currency composition of the reserves.

Liquefied Petroleum Gas

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial incentives there are for the use of liquefied petroleum gas in cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Liquefied petroleum gas, when used as fuel for a road vehicle, bears excise duty at half the leaded petrol rate per liquid litre. This gives it a substantial fiscal advantage over petrol.

Take-home Pay

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much in real terms he expects take-home pay for a married man with two children on average earnings to have risen between 1978-79 and 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I expect that his real take home pay will have risen by 27½ per cent. between 1978-79 and 1988-89.

PLO (Military Equipment Sales)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any current investigations are being undertaken by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise into possible sales of British military equipment to the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Customs are investigating a number of companies suspected of illegally exporting military equipment to the middle east but the investigations are not centred on any particular organisation in that area.

Debt Interest

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year since 1978 the general Government gross debt interest in cash and real terms and for the years 1988-89 to 1990-91, the planning figures for general Government debt interest in cash and real terms.

Mr. Major: Following is the information.

Public Corporations (Borrowing)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will break down the figure of £1·2 billion for public corporations' market and overseas borrowing given in the 1988 Financial Statement and Budget Report into its component parts in order to account for the difference between this figure and the figure of £0·8 billion given in table 6.4 of Cmd. 288-1.

Mr. Major: There are coverage and measurement differences between the figures for public corporations' market and overseas borrowing in Cm. 288 and the Financial Statement and Budget Report. The figure of −£1·2 billion shown in the 1988 Financial Statement and Budget Report relates to the market and overseas borrowing of all public corporations as measured for the public sector borrowing requirement. It is not possible to break this down into estimates for individual industries. The figure of −£0·8 billion shown in table 6.4 of Cm. 288-I relates to the figures included in the planning total and does not therefore include the market and overseas borrowing of all public corporations as explained in chapter 4 of Cm. 288-I. The major reason for the change between Cm. 288-I and the FSBR arises from nationalised industries switching their net borrowing from the market to Government. In part this reflects the early repayment of expensive public sector foreign currency debt given the high level of the official reserves and the removal of any interest rate benefit on new overseas borrowing under the official exchange cover scheme.

Financial Statement and Budget Report

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year since 1978 the figure for "other national accounts adjustments" as defined in table 1.2 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1987-88 in cash and real terms and the planned figures for 1988-89 and 1990-91.

Mr. Major: The figures requested are as follows:

Other national accounts adjustments

£ billion

	Cash	Real terms[1]
1978-79	1·7	3·2
1979-80	2·8	4·6

Land and Buildings (Departmental Sales)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for the year 1987-88 the sales of land and buildings by Department as in the form of his answer of 27 January 1987, Official Report, column 229, giving the gross figure for purchases of land and buildings for 1987-88.

Mr. Major: The table shows sales and purchases of land and buildings by department for 1987-88. The figures include sales and purchases by local authorities and new towns as well as central government and are consistent with the figures published in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 288.

National Accounts Adjustments

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will break down for "other adjustments" given in table 1:2 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1988-89 to show (a) capital consumption, (b) privatisation proceeds not treated as negative general Government expenditure, (c) grants and loans to some public corporations and PTEs, (d) valued added tax refunded, (e) pension increase payments, (f) employers' statutory sick pay scheme and (g) other.

Mr. Major: The outturn figures for national accounts adjustments are given in detail in the public expenditure White Paper each year, see for example Cm 288-I, table 6.4. Annual data for earlier years and quarterly data for the current year are given in "Financial Statistics" table 2.4. Figures for the later years are overall estimates and the individual components would be subject to considerable margins of error.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax paid in respect of the tax year 1987-88 by a married man aged 51 years with no dependent children who is in receipt for that year of a salary from his employer of £1 million, assuming he has a mortgage of £30,000, a business enterprise scheme investment of £40,000, an investment of £800,000 in a new enterprise zone unit trust of which 94 per cent. is attributable to building costs and where 50 per cent. of the purchase price is borrowed in circumstances where guaranteed rent receivable equals the interest outgoing, and an investment in forestry for which a schedule D basis is claimed and for which net revenue costs in the year amount to £10,000, and who makes a contribution to a retirement annuity scheme amounting to £195,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 7 March 1988]: Liability to income tax in 1987-88 would be nil.

Income Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) working families with children and (b) childless people in work had incomes below the tax threshold at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The table provides an estimate, derived from family expenditure survey data, of the number of single people and married couples with full or part-time earnings in 1988-89 for whom allowances and reliefs exceed their income. Also shown are the number of married women estimated to have earnings below the wife's earned income allowance but whose husbands pay income tax.

	Thousands of tax units of working age
	With children	Without children
With one earner but not paying income tax	400	750
With two earners but not paying income tax	75	50
Paying income tax but where the wife earns below the wife's earned income allowance	1,300	575

Revenue Contributions

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the proportion of total receipts from (a) income tax, (b) value added tax and (c) national insurance paid by the top (i) 1 per cent., (ii) 5 per cent. and (iii) 10 per cent. of tax payers in 1978-79 and 1987-88;

(2) if he will estimate the proportion of total receipts from (a) income tax, (b) value added tax and (c) national insurance paid by the bottom (i) 1 per cent., (ii) 5 per cent. and (iii) 10 per cent. of taxpayers in 1978-79 and 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 23 February 1988]: The available information is given in the table. I regret that reliable estimates of the income tax liability and national insurance contributions of the bottom 1 per cent. and the bottom 5 per cent. of taxpayers are not available and no estimates of the proportion of value added tax paid by percentiles of income taxpayers are available. Income tax estimates for 1987-88 are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal income and are therefore provisional.

	Percentage of total income tax liability	Percentage of employees' national insurance contributions

Top 1 per cent.	11·2	2·0
Top 5 per cent.	24·0	10·0

Bottom 10 per cent.	1·0	3·0

Taxation and National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the percentage of gross earnings deducted in tax and national insurance for (i) a single man and (ii) a married man on the following gross salaries (a) £4,000, (b) £5,000, (c) £6,000, (d) £7,000, (e) £8,000, (f) £9,000, (g) £10,000, (h) £11,000, (i) £12,000, (j) £13,000, (k) £14,000, (l) £15,000, (m) £20,000, (n) £25,000, (o) £30,000 and (p) £50,000.

(2) if he will give the percentage of gross earnings deducted in tax and national insurance for (i) a single man and (ii) a married man on the following gross salaries after taking account of the changes in the Budget of 15 March (a) £4,000, (b) £5,000, (c) £6,000, (d) £7,000, (e) £8,000, (f) £9,000, (g) £10,000, (h) £11,000, (i) £12,000, (j) £13,000, (k) £14,000, (l) £15,000, (m) £20,000, (n) £25,000, (o) £30,000 and (p) £50,000.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 25 January, Official Report, columns 18-20, if he will make a further statement on progress in implementing the monitoring of the ethnic origin of the Government's own employees; and what results have so far been achieved therein, with particular reference to the pilot schemes which have been introduced.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

The final stage of the programme of ethnic origin surveys of staff in post is almost finished. The results of the remaining phases of these monitoring surveys will be published later this year. The results of the pilot promotion monitoring projects are not yet available. The Civil Service Commissioners will be reporting shortly on the results of their monitoring of recruitment.

In the meantime, two other positive initiatives are in progress. First, my officials are exploring the feasibility of designing a short pre-employment training course for near-miss candidates for the executive officer competition with a view to enhancing their work—relevant skills and their capacity to compete on merit. I hope this will be of particular benefit to black and Asian candidates who, currently disproportionately, fail the qualifying test for this competition.

Second, the Civil Service Commission has carried out an advertising campaign designed to attract more black and Asian men and women to apply for professional and technical vacancies. The early results are encouraging, with over 500 inquiries in response to these advertisements.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give a breakdown of staff, in whole-time equivalents, for Great Britain for the National Health Service in the numbers of (a) doctors and dentists, (b) nurses and midwives and (c) others for the years 1960, 1982, 1986 and 1987;

(2) if he will give the breakdown of staff for the National Health Service, in whole-time equivalents, for Great Britain in the numbers of (a) medical and dental, (b) nursing and midwifery, (c) professional and technical, (d) works, (e) maintenance, (f) administration and clerical, (g) ambulance and (h) ancillary; and if he will also show the totals for the years 1979, 1982, 1984, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Newton: The details as requested are shown in the table.

Notes:
Data on a consistent basis are not held for 1960.
Figures for 30 September 1987 are not yet available.

[1] Includes staff at the Dental Estimates Board, Prescription Pricing Authority, London Post-Graduate Special Health Authorities and Family Practitioner Committees, and equivalent organisations in Wales and Scotland.
[2] Figures are independently rounded to nearest one hundred (100) whole time equivalents.
[3] Includes all permanent paid, honorary and locum staff.
[4] Not adjusted for reduction in nurses' working hours during 1980-81 (from 40 to 37·5 hours per week).
[5] Not adjusted for transfer of Operating Department Assistants from Ancillary to Professional and Technical staff group on 1 April 1984.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the full £25 million allocated for waiting list reductions has been spent in 1987-88; and how many operations will have been paid for from this fund.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities are on course to spend the total £25 million allocated to them in 1987-88 on the treatment of an additional 100,000 in-patient and day cases. Final details will not be available until after the end of the financial year.

Housing Benefit

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will estimate the changes in the weekly amount of housing benefit payable to a person with the following amounts of capital (a) £5,100, (b) £6,100, (c) £7,100, (d) £8,100, (e) £10,100, (f) £12,100 and (g) £15,100, as a result of the April changes.

Mr. Portillo: With a capital holding of £5,100, changes in housing benefit entitlement will vary, depending upon how much interest is received at present, because that will affect entitlement under the current scheme. At £6,000, entitlement to benefit will cease altogether. Those with capital above £6,000 may or may not qualify for housing benefit under the present scheme depending on the interest which they receive and on their other income.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the numbers claiming housing benefit in each housing authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 21 March 1988]: The information available is given in the table. The figures represent the estimated numbers of benefit recipients in each authority. The number of unsuccessful claims is not available.

Alcohol (Cancer)

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the declaration by the International Agency for Research on Alcohol in October 1987, asserting a causal relationship between alcohol consumption and cancer of the oral cavity, he has any plans to invoke his powers under section 11 of the Consumer Protection Act of 1987 to restrict or to bar the sale of alcoholic beverages; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. Heavy drinking of alcohol is only one of the risk factors associated with cancer of the oral cavity. There is no good evidence of any significantly increased risk from sensible drinking. The risks of oral cancer and of cancers of the gullet and upper digestive tract rise significantly for people who drink and smoke.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list how many prescriptions for benzodiazepines have been issued by general practitioners for each of the last five years; and what was the average quantity of drugs per prescription for each of these years.

Mr. Newton: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of prescriptions for benzodiazepines dispensed by community pharmacists in Great Britain for each of the last five years was as follows:

	Millions
1982	29·7
1983	28·7
1984	28·0
1985	25·7
1986	25·4

The figures for 1987 are not yet available.

It is not possible to construct a meaningful overall average quantity per prescription because benzodiazepines are dispensed in a variety of formulations (for example, tablets, capsules, suppositories and elixirs) and most are offered in several different strengths.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by region the amount and value of benzodiazepines prescribed by general practitioners for the last five years.

Mr. Newton: The information is not available in the form requested. Information on benzodiazepines can be extracted from data from the hypnotic and sedative and tranquilliser therapeutic categories of drugs. These data are broken down by region in the table. Benzodiazepines account for about 85 per cent. of the prescriptions for hypnotics, sedatives and tranquillisers.

Number and net ingredient cost of prescriptions for hynotics, sedatives and tranquillisers (millions)

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many homeless persons in England and Wales have previously been admitted to hospital with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses.

Mrs. Currie: I regret I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks as it is not centrally collected for England. The information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many residential places in the community will be provided for those discharged from mental hospitals in each health region in England and Wales in each of the next seven years;

(2) how many residential places have been provided in the community for patients with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses discharged from mental hospitals in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years;

(3) how many residential places have been provided in the community in each health region in England and Wales for patients discharged from mental hospitals in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not available. The number of places in homes and hostels for the mentally ill in each local authority in England is published in "Homes and Hostels for Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People"; a copy of which is in the Library. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mental Hospital Sites (Sales)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the proceeds of sale of mental hospital sites from each health region in England and Wales in each of the next seven years.

Mrs. Currie: The information routinely collected on forecast of sales proceeds relates only to the coming three financial years and is not broken down into care groups. Information in respect of all surplus sites for the next three years is as follows:

Community Care

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates he has for expenditure on community care in (a) each health region in England and Wales and (b) each health district, for each of the next three years.

Mr. Newton: The Department does not hold estimates of expenditure for the provision of community care in the form requested, nor does it generally identify funds for specific purposes such as the provision of care in the community within its overall allocations to regions, or in its indicative figures for local authority social services expenditure. It is for regions and districts to determine, within a national framework of health care priorities, and in the light of local needs and circumstances, how all their resources can best be used. So far as local authorities are concerned, it is for them to determine the level and balance of their expenditure on the provision of social services.

Broad strategies of expenditure were outlined in regions' strategic plans, and annual regional short-term programmes give estimates of expenditure at a regional level for community services which would included provision of community care. Detailed figures for 1988-89 are not yet available and no figures are available for the following two years.

Expenditure on the Health Service in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which health regions in England and Wales (a) have provided bridging funds for local care of patients discharged from or excluded from mental hospitals and (b) not so provided.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 5 February 1988 at column 800.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the monitoring of the follow-up of care in the community for mentally ill people, which regional health authorities were asked by his Department to carry out in their districts in the care in the community and joint finance circular (HC 83/6).

Mr. Newton [holding answer 14 March 1988]: The monitoring of progress within each region is a regular feature of the annual review meetings which Ministers hold with regional chairmen. Information provided by regions indicates that the development of locally based community-oriented mental illness services is at present rather patchy but there is evidence of a continuing build-up of such services. Our policy remains that the reduction of hospital provision should not take place without steps being taken to ensure appropriate alternative arrangements.

Hospital Hostels

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what experiments in hospital hostels for discharged mental patients have been conducted in each health region in England and Wales; what lessons have been learnt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has been associated to some degree with the establishment of three hospital hostels whose work has been subject to careful evaluation; these are in South East Thames, Wessex, and North Western regions. I am aware that in some other regions there are similar hospital hostels, that is accommodation in which a small group of long-stay patients requiring 24-hour medical and nursing supervision are provided with in-patient care in an informal domestic environment.

The evaluations have reported encouragingly on the quality of life obtained, and we intend such units to form a permanent part of district pyschiatric services. For this reason, we have funded a series of seminars in different parts of the country designed to spread knowledge, among both psychiatric professional staff and planners, of the best ways of meeting the needs of those people chronically disabled by mental illness who may need long-term in-patient care, whilst avoiding the institutional environment of traditional long-stay wards.

Griffiths Report

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the covering letter from his Department which has accompanied the circulation of the Griffiths report to district health authorities.

Mr. Newton: Copies of health notice (88)8, which accompanied the circulation of Sir Roy Griffiths' report to health and local authorities, family practitioner committees and community health councils, have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will consult representatives of Health Service staff, voluntary and other relevant organisations regarding proposals made by Sir Roy Griffiths in his report to him, "Community Care: Agenda for Action".

Mr. Newton: We will take account of any views put to us by interested groups or organisations as part of our consideration of Sir Roy Griffiths' recommendations.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any assessment of the number of additional social workers that would be required to implement the Griffiths report on residential care for old people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We will take any implications for social work into account as part of our consideration of both Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care and the report of the review of residential care chaired by Lady Wagner.

Medical Laboratory and Pathology Staff

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the Management Advisory Services report on medical laboratory scientific officers.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Management Advisory Services' manpower planning group report on the review of pathology services staffing is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to respond to the report by Management Advisory Services on pathology services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We intend to circulate the report to health authorities and others in the near future after consideration by the NHS Management Board and regional chairmen.

Ward Closures

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report all wards or units closed for financial or other reasons in the North Western regional health authority; and if he will indicate the reason in each instance.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Riverside DHA (Hospital Closures)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Riverside district health authority issued the consultation document concerning the closure of the Westminster, the Westminster children's, St. Mary Abbots, and the West London hospitals; and what is the normal length of a consultation period for proposals of this nature.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the consultation document issued by Riverside health authority on the "Westminster and Chelsea Hospital Project" was issued to the Riverside community health council on 1 February 1988, and to other bodies listed on its formal distribution list in the week up to 9 February. Comments were requested by 1 May 1988.

Health authorities are required by the NHS (Community Health Council) Regulations 1973 to consult community health councils about proposed service change; the regulations do not specify a time limit. We also expect authorities to consult other interested bodies and the arrangements for this are set out in circular HSC(1S) 207. We recommend there that health authorities should require comments "within a period of three months".

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what rules or guidance govern the attendance of chairpersons of regional health authorities at party political functions relating to the Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: There are no such rules or guidance.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he has received any proposals that regional health authorities should be encouraged to privatise assets or operational activities, other than land, buildings or equipment; and whether he plans to introduce legislation on this matter;

(2) whether any regional health authority has, within the past five years, privatised assets or operational activities valued at more than £1 million, other than land, buildings or equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Every regional health authority has awarded contracts to private contractors for some operational activities where this represents better value than in-house services. NHS management recognises competitive tendering as a valuable management tool in testing the efficiency of its services. The Government have no wish to inhibit such enterprise where it is cost-effective and represents good value for money in the particular local circumstances. We have no plans for legislation on this matter. Information is not centrally available on the number of individual contracts with a value in excess of £1 million which have been negotiated by regional health authorities.

Northern Ireland (Tax Benefits)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tax benefit tables, taking account of rent and rates levels in Northern Ireland, to show the net weekly spending power of (a) a single person, (b) a married couple with no children, (c) a couple with a child aged 11 years, (d) a couple with two children aged eight and 11 years, (e) a couple with three children aged eight, 11 and 15 years, (f) a couple with four children aged three, eight, 11 and 15 years, (g) a single person with two children aged eight and 11 years, and (h) a single person with two children under four years of age, with weekly earnings of (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £110, (vii) £130, (viii) £140, (ix), £150, (x) £160 and (xi) £170 under (1) the existing tax and benefit system and (2) the new system to be implemented in April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that it is not possible to produce average rent and rates figures for Northern Ireland similar to those previously published for Great Britain.

AIDS

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the incidence of anonymous testing of patients for the human immuno-deficiency virus without their consent.

Mr. Newton: The Department does not have information about all the research that may be taking place, but I am advised by the Medical Research Council and the public health laboratory service that none of the studies currently being funded by them involves the anonymous testing of patients without their consent.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given to hospital authorities on the testing of patients for the human immuno-deficiency virus without their consent.

Mr. Newton: The Department has not issued specific guidance to health authorities on the need for HIV antibody tests to be carried out only with the consent of the patient. However, we have always stressed that tests should be carried out only on a voluntary basis and in a context of pre-test and post-test counselling. The precise details of how, and in what circumstances, tests are discussed with patients is primarily a matter for the individual professionals guided by their professional bodies, and the health authorities concerned.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 613, he will state how many automated systems for cervical cancer screening have been considered by his Department; and when a final decision as to funding of such systems may be expected.

Mrs. Currie: The expert panel chaired by the Department's chief scientist on 26 February reviewed 13 separate applications for funds to support developments in this field.

In the light of the panel's views, the Department is now exploring putting together a package of interrelated work. This is being done as speedily as possible.

Departmental Research Funding

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 613, what is his definition of the phrase "scientific merit" as a criterion for assessing projects for research funding by his Department.

Mrs. Currie: The scientific merit of proposals submitted to the Department is determined through critical review and assessment of the objectives and methods proposed for each study. The costs and resources proposed for the study are also taken into account.

The research objectives are reviewed to ensure that the scope, nature and purpose of the work is clearly described, that the work envisaged will make a contribution to existing knowledge or theory and not simply replicate existing data, and that the anticipated results hold promise of exploitation and applicability. The policy relevance of the research objectives is also assessed. The plan of research is reviewed to ensure that it is appropriate and relevant to the subject area of the study and most important that the research objectives are likely to be achieved by the methods proposed, although by the very nature of research this cannot be guaranteed.

General Practitioners

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what sterilisation standards are laid down for general practitioners; what steps are taken by his Department to monitor them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Sterilisation standards for general practitioners are not laid down centrally. This is a matter of good professional practice and advice is available in publications such as the British Pharmacopoeia.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are taken by his Department to seek to minimise the dangers of cross-infection in general practitioners' surgeries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: General practitioners are required under their terms of service to provide proper accommodation for the provision of general medical services. This includes adequate safeguards to minimise the dangers of cross-infection. Family practitioner committees have powers to inspect general practitioners' surgeries to ensure that they meet the proper standards.

Dentistry (Hepatitis)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the recommendations made by the expert group on hepatitis in dentistry have been implemented; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what standards are required by his Department for sterilisation equipment used by dentists; what steps are taken to ensure such standards are met; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what sterilisation standards are laid down by his Department for dentists; what steps are taken to ensure those standards are maintained in dentists' surgeries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The report of the expert advisory group on hepatitis in dentistry was published in 1979 and was distributed to all dental practitioners at that time. Its recommendations have been incorporated in both undergraduate and postgraduate training courses since then.

The procedures recommended in the report were re-emphasised in guidance prepared for surgeons, anaesthetists and dentists on the transmission of HTLV (HIV) and issued in April 1986 to all dentists under cover of a letter from the chief dental officer, since the procedures are essentially the same for all blood-borne viruses. It included advice on methods of achieving the sterilisation of non-disposable instruments and equipment.

General dental practitioners are required under their terms of service to furnish their surgery with adequate equipment, and to use adequate skill and attention in providing treatment. Any dentist who fails to do so renders himself vulnerable to disciplinary proceedings. These could lead to charges of serious professional misconduct brought by the General Dental Council, with the possibility, if found guilty, of erasure from the dental register.

Benefits

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the value of (a) the ordinary rate of supplementary benefit for a single householder, (b) the ordinary rate of supplementary benefit for a couple, (c) the long-term rate of supplementary benefit for a single person living alone and (d) the long-term rate of supplementary benefit for a couple, expressed as a proportion of average earnings in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The information is contained in tables 5.6 and 5.7 of the "Abstract of Statistics for Index of Retail Prices, Average Earnings, Social Security Benefits, and Contributions—August 1987", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit and (b) family income supplement in the borough of Sunderland.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

	Figure
(a) Supplementary benefit	36,743 (latest available figure —17 November 1987)
(b) Family income supplement	Figures not available

Note: The figure for (a) relates to the two local offices which serve the Borough of Sunderland. The boundaries are not conterminous.

Hospitals and Wards (Closure)

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospitals or wards in England and Wales in respect of which he has received notice of (a) permanent closure or (b) temporary closure since 1 November 1987.

Mrs. Currie: General information on hospitals approved for closure in 1987 is not yet available. Information on temporary closures is not held centrally. The following proposals for specific closures have been referred for ministerial decision since 1 November 1987. Only closures which have been opposed by the relevant community health councils are routinely referred to Ministers. I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales for information on hospitals in Wales.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) of 10 March, Official Report, columns 347-8, if he will give the figures for income under section 65 as adjusted by the hospital and community health services pay and prices deflator.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Salford and South Manchester Health Authorities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the financial position of (a) Salford health authority and (b) the South Manchester health authority.

Mr. Newton: The allocation of resources to individual health authorities is a matter for the regional health authority. I understand both authorities will benefit from record levels of revenue funding in 1988-89 which includes allocations from the waiting list fund, the special bridging fund and central funding for AIDS.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on which date the Minister for Health, the right hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton), first received a request for a meeting with hon. Members about the financial position of South Manchester health authority; and on what date he decided not to meet them.

Mr. Newton: I received the request from the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) on 29 February. My office contacted him on 8 March with the offer of a meeting with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health. This offer was declined.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what factors he considered in forming a judgment that he would meet hon. Members about the financial position of Salford health authority; and which factors were considered by the right hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton), the Minister for Health, in forming a judgment that he would not meet hon. Members to discuss the financial position of South Manchester health authority.

Mr. Newton: Decisions to meet delegations are dependent on the circumstances of each request and the commitments of Ministers. I was aware that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health was willing to meet the hon. Member, an offer he refused.

Departmental Offices, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what strengthening arrangements have been made to the partitioning separating officials from the public in his Department's offices in Law Russell house, Vicar lane, Bradford, and Leeds road, Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In December 1987, a claimant climbed over a protective interview screen at Law Russell house after damaging the surrounding framework. Contractors are currently strengthening the partition supports. At Leeds road office, two existing private interview rooms are being fitted with protective screens and counters.

Departmental Offices (Social Security Act 1986)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department's local offices take under the terms of the Social Security Act 1986 to make themselves aware of the objectives of charitable organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: It is for local office managers to decide how best to do this. As a matter of good administration, local offices will be expected to keep themselves informed about the objectives of charitable organisation in the future, as they have also had to do in the past.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines his Department issues to his Department's local offices on their obligations under the Social Security Act 1986 with regard to the information they keep on charitable organisations, and the use they make of any such information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Guidance in the social fund manual explains that consideration of help which might be available from another source, including a charity, is mainly appropriate to applications for crisis loans; and then only provided that there is a realistic expectation that the help would be available, and available in time, were the applicant to seek it.

Social Security Regulations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will meet Age Concern and other associated voluntary groups in Wales to discuss the impact of the April 1988 Social Security Regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Any representations from voluntary bodies in Wales to meet Ministers of this Department will always be given full consideration.

On 10 March my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Social Security met pensioner representatives including representatives from Welsh pensioners and discussed a number of topics, including the social security reforms which take effect from April.

District Health Authorities (Chairmen)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what criterion his Department has employed to select the 21 new district health authority chairmen and to reappoint the other district health authority chairman;

(2) if he will state the criterion his Department employs when deciding to replace district health authority chairmen.

Mrs. Currie: In considering these important posts, we seek to appoint people of the highest calibre. We take account of a wide variety of factors, such as personal qualities, knowledge of the NHS, management or other relevant experience and age. The majority of chairmen not reappointed had indicated previously that they did not wish to be considered for a further term. Some were not reappointed on age grounds. It is also necessary to bring in some new people to provide fresh insights. The decisions not to reappoint some chairmen in no way reflects on them personally.

Blood Transfusion Service

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to place in the Library a copy of the report on the future of the blood transfusion service.

Mrs. Currie: It is intended that the report on the organisational study of the national blood transfusion service of England and Wales, prepared for the Department by National Health Service management consultancy services branch, will be placed in the Library with the consultation paper discussing the options for change once this has been prepared.

School Meals and Welfare Milk

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is expected to be the cost in 1988-89 of the £2·55 per week per child compensation for the loss of free school meals and free welfare milk in the family credit rates;

(2) what proportion of the £220 million extra spending on family credit mentioned in the Official Report, 27 October, column 181, is accounted for by the compensation for the loss of free school meals and free welfare milk.

Mr. Portillo: The net cost (after allowing for the cost of free school meals and free welfare milk which would otherwise arise) is around £65 million. This represents around 30 per cent. of the extra spending on family credit.

Housing Benefit (Sunderland)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate how many people will receive a reduction in housing benefit in the borough of Sunderland from April;

(2) if he will estimate how many people will lose their entitlement to housing benefit in the borough of Sunderland from April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information relating to loss of housing benefit is not available for individual local authority areas.

Income Support and Family Credit (Sunderland)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many people will receive (a) income support and (b) family credit in the borough of Sunderland from April.

Mr. Portillo: No local estimates are available of the number of people who will receive income support and family credit from April.

NHS Performance Indicators

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will make the National Health Service performance indicators for 1986-87 available in the Library.

Mr. Newton: We hope to make the indicators available later this week.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has as to why

Hampstead, Preston and Bloomsbury district health authorities have large estates in relation to the resident population in their health districts; and if there has been a recent review of their property usage;

(2) what information he has as to the reasons for the numbers of staff in the ancillary, building and maintenance, administrative and clerical, professional and technical categories which Halton district employs in relation to its patient work load;

(3) what information he has as to the reasons for the level of costs of administrative and medical record keeping in the leading London hospitals and the Bristol Royal infirmary;

(4) what information he has as to the reasons for the size of the complement of consultant and senior doctors in general medicine in the Barking and Havering district;

(5) what information he has as to why expenditure by West Birmingham, Richmond and Twickenham, Rugby, Central Manchester, Merton and Sutton and West Lancashire district health authorities on building maintenance is relatively high in relation to other authorities; and what plans are there to review their performance in this respect.

Mr. Newton: I assume my hon. Friend's questions were stimulated by an analysis of Health Service indicators. Although the purpose of the indicators is to raise questions at all levels about health service performance in delivering services to patients, most of the reasons behind detailed variations shown by indicator analysis can only be identified at local level where the analysis can be informed by local knowledge. This is why in our approach to the use of the indicators — full details of which will be announced in a forthcoming health circular — we have concentrated on ensuring that detailed local analyses are undertaken and on monitoring the results and the action taken. My hon. Friend may therefore wish to direct his specific questions about the reasons for these variations between districts and regions to the district or regional authorities concerned.

He will additionally wish to be aware that there is at present an initiative underway throughout the NHS to ensure that under-used properties are either disposed of or put to better use.

South East Thames Regional Health Authority

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list how many consultants are (a) full-time, (b) maximum part-time and (c) part-time in the South East Thames regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 17 March 1988]. The information requested is shown in the table.

Hospital medical and dental consultants in South East Thames Region at 30 September 1986

	[1]	[2]
(a) Whole time	[3]451	442
(b) Maximum part time	445	445
(c) Part time (including honorary staff)	351	187

[1] Figures are based on number of contracts.
[2] Whole time equivalents, rounded to nearest whole number.
[3] May also be working in other regions.

In-patients

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average length of time spent in hospital by (a) each private pay-bed patient and (b) each National Health Service patient; and if he will break this figure down by each specialty and for each region and the special health authorities.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 1 March 1988]: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. The numbers in the central data sample are too small for reliable estimates to be made for private patients at regional level. The available information is given in the following table: all figures are for 1985.

Estimated number of discharges and mean duration of stay (days) of National Health Service and private patients from National Health Service non-psychiatric and non-maternity hospitals, by specialty

THE ARTS

Library Services (Old People)

54. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received, prior to February 1988, from library authorities about making library services to local old people's homes the subject of competitive tendering.

59. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Arts what evidence he has of a desire by library authorities to make library services to local retirement pensioner homes subject to competitive tendering.

Mr. Luce: None so far. Library services to old people's homes is one example of services which, I suggest in my Green Paper, might be put out to competitive tender. The Government want to encourage library authorities to contract out services where this will produce greater efficiency or economies of scale.

Business Sponsorship

55. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to review the business sponsorship scheme for the arts in the light of the annual report of the Association for Business Sponsorship for the Arts for 1986-87, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: As I announced on 26 January, the scheme has been revised and strengthened for 1988-89. The budget will be increased by over 70 per cent. from £1·75 million to £3 million to reflect the growth in sponsorship and will be operated in two six-monthly periods, on the basis of allocations reflecting the take-up pattern in previous years. This should ensure that adequate resources are available throughout the year.

Public Library Service

56. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Arts what consultations he had with local authorities prior to publishing his Green Paper, "Financing Our Public Library Service."

Mr. Luce: None. The period of consultation is now taking place. Before I exercise the proposed power to make regulations on fees and charges, I will consult further those representatives of local government as appear to be appropriate.

Library Services (Norfolk)

57. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has about the level of expenditure per capita on library services by Norfolk county council.

Mr. Luce: Information about public library expenditure is included in the statistics collected and published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. In the latest year for which information is available, 1986-87, Norfolk county council spent £4·84 per head of resident population.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

58. Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister for the Arts to what extent those engaged in the arts have benefited from the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) earlier today.

Heritage (Funding)

60. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the extent to which plural funding can aid the preservation of Britain's heritage.

Mr. Luce: I am convinced that the co-operation of public and private interests is essential to preservation of the heritage. The national heritage memorial fund often works in partnership with the private sector in contributing to heritage appeals. Its many successes in recent years demonstrate the value of this approach.

Opera

61. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what he is doing to encourage opera in the regions.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council is allocating an extra £1·5 million in 1988-89 for increased touring in regions outside London. I would expect opera companies to benefit from this increase.

National Theatre

62. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the National theatre to discuss its level of Arts Council funding.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman from time to time, most recently on 27 September last year. Funding decisions relating to the National theatre are a matter for the Arts Council.

Marketing Skills

63. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what encouragement he is giving to the development of marketing skills by arts organisations.

Mr. Luce: I continue to be very interested in ways in which arts organisations can be encouraged to market themselves more effectively. As I told the House on 25 February at column 307, I am supporting two new initiatives in 1988-89 which will help arts bodies to become more skilful at marketing: a distance learning package and a programme of training courses for top management.

Libraries (Services)

64. Mr. Waller: To ask the Minister for the Arts what services are currently provided free to commercial organisations by public libraries.

Mr. Luce: There is considerable variation in library authority practice. However, the services provided free to commercial organisations include reference and information services and book-lending and reservation services.

Libraries (Funding)

65. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the level of public funding of libraries, in the light of the proposals in the Green Paper Cm. 324.

Mr. Luce: None.

70. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what consultations he will be having in relation to the Green Paper on the financing of libraries.

Mr. Luce: My Green Paper invites public comment on the measures put forward. when I have fully considered all the views expressed, I will, as necessary, consult formally on the means to give effect to the Government's objectives.

Private Patronage

66. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement about the prospects for enhanced private patronage of the Arts consequent upon the Budget tax changes.

Mr. Luce: I warmly welcome the Budget announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The reduction of the higher rates of income tax to 40 per cent. will ensure that high-earning individuals have more disposable income to invest as well as to give in charitable donations. Doubling the ceiling on payroll gifts from £120 to £240 per annum will make it more attractive for donors to select a wide range of charities to receive their gifts (they may choose up to eight), among which I hope arts charities will figure prominently.

Theatres (Funding)

67. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister for the Arts what estimates he has made of the financial assistance that will flow to the theatre from his incentive funding policy.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council is looking to incentive funding to generate increased income of £2 from private sector sources for every £1 of taxpayer's money.

Community Library

68. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Minister for the Arts if, following the announcement of the closure of Kingswood library by Southwark London borough council and the publication of the Green Paper on the financing of libraries, he will give consideration to allowing alternative agencies to provide community libraries in cases where the relevant local authority is unwilling or unable to provide this service.

Mr. Luce: Statutory responsibility for providing a comprehensive and efficient public library service rests with the London borough of Southwark. My Green Paper does not propose any changes in responsibility, only that library authorities should consider contracting-out as a means of providing services more efficiently and effectively. There is nothing to prevent a private library seeking to provide a service to the public being financed by voluntary contributions or private sector sponsorship.

Inner-city Regeneration

69. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the extent to which the arts can aid the regeneration of the inner cities.

Mr. Luce: I have been impressed by the arts contributions being made to inner-city regeneration, which I have seen during regional visits. I commend the efforts of the Arts Council and regional arts associations to build on these by presenting opportunities to developers and business interests.

Museums, Galleries and Libraries

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his involvement in the formulation of corporate plans for national museums, galleries and libraries.

Mr. Luce: I believe that it is vital that the trustees and staff of the national museums and galleries and the British library have a clear view of the objectives of their institution, of the means by which those objectives can be attained and of the targets against which their achievements will be measured. It is important too that objectives and achievements should be reviewed regularly to take account of new developments.

In 1986 I asked each of the national museums and galleries and the British Library to produce a strategic or corporate plan looking five years ahead, and to roll forward the plans annually.

The institutions are now putting the final touches to the second round of planning, and I am meeting each of them in turn to discuss their plans.

British Theatre Association (Library)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the terms of reference of the working party currently investigating the British Theatre Association's library.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 23 March 1988]: The terms of reference are as follows:

Given that there is to be no additional public funding of the library, to consider—

(a) whether it is possible for the library to balance its income and expenditure; and

(b) if this is not possible, what would be the best way in which the library's functions could be carried on and to report to the director of the BTA.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what he estimates would be the cost of disposing of the contents of the British Theatre Association's library in relation to (a) relocation and (b) staffing.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 23 March 1988]: I have commissioned a study of the BTA library, which is to consider, among other things, the best way in which its work could be carried on if it could no longer operate independently. This will include an estimate of costs.

"The Urban Renaissance"

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the research and publication cost of the Arts Council's paper "The Urban Renaissance".

Mr. Luce [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The total cost of the published pamphlet was £5,410, divided thus:

Research and consultancy costs (the paper forms a part of a larger research project)	1,400
Time of Arts Council's permanent staff	1,000
Printing and distribution	3,010
	5,410

Museums

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what initiatives are currently being developed in the area of museum collections management.

Mr. Luce: Museums and galleries are increasingly aware of the importance of developing clear policies of collections management which relate to their overall aims and resources. I am keen to encourage this. The museums database project, recently undertaken by the Museums Association, identified this as a key area where further research would be of practical help to museum managers.

I have decided therefore to commission a study in conjunction with the Museums Association, to look at the wider resource implications of maintaining and managing museum collections. The study will examine, and attempt to quantify, factors such as display and storage space, curatorial and conservation costs, cataloguing and stocktaking costs and will emphasise the need for effective accountability for collections. The study will look also at the opportunities for improved public access to collections.

I am particularly pleased that the initiative for such a study has come from museum professionals. The study will be undertaken by consultants experienced in the field of museums management and is expected to take nine to 12 months to complete. Information and advice will be gathered from a wide range of museum personnel and from a representative survey of institutions—national, local authority, university and independent. I am confident that the report will provide valuable information and practical guidance for all those responsible for efficient management and decision-making in museums and galleries.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Records

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the progress of the current review examining the civil defence implications of computerising heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle records; and if a copy of the report will be placed in the Library;

(2) if he will make a statement on the likely expenditure implications of the introduction for civil defence purposes of computerised vehicle records.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The vehicle inspectorate and good operator licensing records are being computerised for reasons other than civil defence. Consideration is being given to the possibility of using these records to locate vehicles in any type of emergency. The internal departmental papers forming part of this consideration are not appropriate for placing in the Library.

Unsafe Vehicles (Sale)

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce legislation to make it a criminal offence to display for sale a vehicle in an unsafe condition and to give local authority trading standards officers the power to authorise routine inspections.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The offence already exists in section 60 of the Road Traffic Act 1972. We have agreed with the Director General of Fair Trading, trading standards organisations and representatives of the motor trade and consumers the desirability of improving section 60 to make it easier to enforce and apply. We are also discussing with them the powers of inspection.

Airports (Delays)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to reduce delays for passengers at British airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Passenger flows at airports are influenced by a variety of factors, most of which are the responsibility of the airport operator. The Government seek to ensure that their own airport activities — including customs and immigration control — cause no unnecessary delay.

Roll-on/Roll-off Ferries (Inspection)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what form statistics are now available for the two years and two months prior to the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise concerning inspections of ro/ro ferries by marine surveyors.

Mr. David Mitchell: These statistics are available in the form quoted by my right hon. Friend in his reply on 10 March at column 294.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the reason for the change in recording methods of inspection of ro/ro ferries by marine surveyors before and after the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise, and the date of this change.

Mr. David Mitchell: The reason for changing the method of recording the inspections of ro/ro ferries was to ensure that all such ships and their on-board operation practices were being inspected. The changes dated from 6 March 1987.

Herald of Free Enterprise (Marine Surveyors)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement of the relative priorities of different tasks performed by marine surveyors both (a) before and (b) after the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise.

Mr. David Mitchell: Statutory surveys are generally given first priority by marine surveyors but the safety inspections of United Kingdom and foreign ships are also given a high priority. Since the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise an increased proportion of surveyor effort has been directed towards the inspections of United Kingdom and foreign ro/ro passenger ferries.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on (a) the total number of inspections completed by marine surveyors on the Herald of Free Enterprise, (b) the number completed in port, and (c) the number completed at sea in (i) the 10 years five months prior to its sailing and (ii) since its registration.

Mr. David Mitchell: During the construction period of the Herald of Free Enterprise in Bremerhaven prior to the issue of the first passenger and safety certificate in May 180, numerous visits were made by marine surveyors from my Department. The vessel was first registered on 29 May 1980. Subsequently, the Herald of Free Enterprise was surveyed and certificated by marine surveyors from my Department as follows:

Date	Place	Passenger and Safety Certificate
March 1981	Amsterdam	Renewed
February 1982	Amsterdam	Renewed
February 1983	Bremerhaven	Renewed
January 1984	Dover	Extended
March 1984	Newcastle	Renewed
February 1985	Newcastle	Renewed
February 1986	Newcastle	Renewed
February 1987	Dover	Extended

Several visits to the ship were made in connection with each renewal of the passenger and safety certificate to survey the ship and her equipment.

Passenger and safety certificate surveys are conducted in port, apart from sea trials prior to the issue of the initial certificate, and the two surveys for extension of certificates noted above.

Road Accidents

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of (a) road accidents and (b) fatalities which occur amongst (i) children (ii) adults in inner-city areas, (iii) suburban areas and (iv) rural areas; and what estimates he has of the relative rates per head of population.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not available.

The STATS 19 road accident reporting system does not identify inner-city areas or distinguish between suburban and rural areas.

Lydden and Dover Eastern Docks

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 129, he will place in the Library a copy of the standard cost benefit analysis in respect of the A2 dualling between Lydden and Dover Eastern docks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Helicopters (Coastal Rescue)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost to public funds per annum of providing a helicopter for coastal rescue work; how many such helicopters are on stand-by for the south Devon coastline; how many times these helicopters have been used in the last three years for cliff rescue; and what is the cost of each such operation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Helicopters are provided for a wide variety of civilian and military marine and aviation search and rescue tasks and the cost of coastal rescue cannot be separately identified. The overall cost in 1987-88 is some £61 million, falling mainly on the Defence vote.

There are helicopters available for coast rescue duties on the south Devon coast at RNAS Culdrose (5), RAF Chivenor (2) and at Lee-on-Solent (2). The Navy detachment at Lee is shortly to be withdrawn and replaced with a contract helicopter provided by the Department of Transport.

Helicopters were asked to assist in cliff rescue operations in Devon on 10 occasions over the last three years, as follows: 1985 (4), 1986 (4), 1987 (2).

Breeches Buoy Equipment

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 482, he will give in the Official Report a detailed breakdown of the individual cost per station per annum of retaining breeches buoy equipment.

Mr. David Mitchell: The individual cost per station per annum of retaining breeches buoy equipment is approximately £1,400. This figure is made up as follows:—

	Cost (£)
Payment to auxiliary in charge for maintenance of equipment—2·5 hours per week at £2·17	282·00
Trailer replacement and maintenance	200·00
Replacement and maintenance of equipment	466·00
Replacement line-throwing pistol (present system now obsolete and unobtainable)	150·00
Rockets, Ten per annum at £30·00 each	300·00
Total	1,398·00

The figures for replacement rocket equipment are approximate, and should be taken as a minimum.

Woolwich Ferry (Electronic Warning Signs)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of discussions he has had with Newham council about the replacement of the electronic warning signs on major roads leading to the Woolwich ferry; and if he will make a statement on when he expects these signs to be back in action.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are currently considering cost estimates from Newham for the replacement of the signs. A solution of the current industrial dispute at the ferry will avoid much of the need for such signs and this still remains our aim.

Airports (Flight Delays)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many air flights were delayed by up to (a) one hour, (b) three hours, (c) six hours and (d) 12 hours within the period of 12 months for which records are available at the following airports: (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick, (c) Stansted, (d) East Midlands, (e) Manchester, and (f) Leeds/Bradford.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information sought by my hon. Friend is not held centrally; I suggest that he approaches the airports concerned direct.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the percentage share of the British domestic market for manufactured goods held by British manufacturers in 1979; and what was the percentage share held in 1987.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that 73 per cent. of the United Kingdom home demand for manufactured goods was met by United Kingdom manufacturers in 1979. This compares with an estimate of 65 per cent. for the 12 months to September 1987, the latest period for which figures are available.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish a list of the names of those persons who have been referred by the stock exchange surveillance department to his Department following inquiries into insider dealing in stocks and shares.

Mr. Maude: No.

Arthur Bell and Son plc and DCL (Takeover)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline the current situation regarding his Department's inquiry into the takeover of Arthur Bell and Son plc and DCL by Guinness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The investigation into the affairs and membership of Guinness plc continues.

Lebanon (Military Equipment)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what the name of the company in Lebanon to which military equipment was erroneously sent in 1982; what was the specific nature of the company's links with the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and what specific links existed between that company and Racal-Tacticom;

(2) what disciplinary action has been taken regarding the error in 1982 which allowed an export licence to be given to a consignment of military equipment to be sent to a Lebanon company with links with the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and what departmental procedures have been established to prevent a repetition of this incident.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have nothing to add on these points to the reply I gave on 18 March to my hon. Friend.

Plastics (Exhibition)

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to plastics to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Monday 9 May to Friday 13 May.

United States Space Station

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what United Kingdom participation (a) is currently fulfilled and (b) is expected in the United States space station project.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 March 1988]: European involvement in the international space station programme will be through the European Space Agency's Columbus programme. This is an optional programme of the agency and for the present the United Kingdom will not be participating in it, but we are continuing to discuss this with our partners in ESA.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the European Space Agency has any current involvements or is planning any involvement with the United States space station project.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 March 1988]: The European Space Agency will, through its Columbus programme, be participating with the USA, Canada and Japan in the development of a manned space station. The European involvement will be principally through a laboratory for microgravity research on the core space station, an independently orbiting unmanned experimental module for long duration experiments in space and a polar orbiting platform, mainly for earth observation.

Horizon 2000

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on developments in the Horizon 2000 space project.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 March 1988]: the Horizon 2000 space project, which was agreed by the Ministers of ESA member states in 1985 and considered again in 1987, is a space science programme spread over 20 years. It comprises four major cornerstone missions together with a number of smaller missions. Preparations are under way for the first cornerstone mission. However, the United Kingdom has not agreed to ESA proposals for increased funding for the five-year period 1990 to 1994, the programme having already benefited from a 27 per cent. increase agreed for the period 1985 to 1989. In the circumstances, some modifications to the programme as originally conceived are likely, and this is currently under consideration by ESA.

Nissan

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions took place with Nissan as part of the negotiations leading to the offer of Government grants for the plant at Sunderland, regarding the availability of a partially or totally non-unionised work force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 March 1988]: The availability of a partially or totally non-unionised work force did not form part of the negotiations with Nissan which led to the offer of Government financial assistance for the Sunderland plant. Nissan was concerned to establish an effective working relationship with the United Kingdom trade union movement and it subsequently signed an agreement with the Amalgamated Engineering Union, membership of which the company encourages.

Tour Operators (Surcharges)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether his Department has investigated the practice by tour operators of charging customers for fuel surcharges in respect of aeroplane flights;

(2) when he or his representatives plan next to meet the Association of British Travel Agents;

(3) whether he or his representatives have ever discussed the question of fuel surcharges with the Association of British Travel Agents.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 25 March 1988]: Specific provisions about the levying and explanation of surcharges are contained in the tour operators' code of conduct drawn up by the Association of British Travel Agents in consultation with the Director General of Fair Trading. I am already examining this matter to ascertain whether such charges are justified and are clearly explained to customers. The Director General, who monitors the effectiveness of such codes, has told ABTA that he is concerned about recent media reports of excessive fuel surcharges. ABTA is expected to make a considered response in the near future. My Department is in close touch with the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) on this issue and I shall be meeting OFT officials with officials from the Civil Aviation Authority in April to discuss the position. I plan to meet ABTA representatives shortly after that.

Internal Market

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the extent to which approximation of member states' value-added tax rate on all items is essential for the completion of the internal market.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) on 14 January 1988 at column 442.

DEFENCE

Exercise Outback 88

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the ports at which Royal Navy ships will call during Exercise Outback 88;

(2) if he will state (a) those countries in which defence equipment will be displayed by the Royal Navy for commercial purposes in Exercise Outback 88, and (b) what assessment he has made of their human rights record.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The detailed planning of the Royal Navy task group deployment is still in progress, and it is too early to give a list of all the countries which the task group is likely to visit. However, the deployment will include visits to Malta, Singapore, Brunei, Hong Kong, Thailand, and Papua New Guinea, as well as participation in the Australian bicentennial celebrations. The purpose of the deployment is to exercise with the forces of our friends and allies, and to demonstrate a British naval presence in the areas to be visited. In the process, it will naturally provide an opportunity to display a wide range of British defence equipments in the ports to be visited. The Government do not permit the export of equipment to countries with a record of human rights violations when it is felt likely that the equipment in question might be used for internal repression.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any of the Royal Navy ships involved in Exercise Outback 88 will be carrying nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is our policy neither to confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons on board Royal Navy vessels.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which other navies will be exercising with the Royal Navy in Exercise Outback 88;

(2) if he will list those areas in which the Royal Navy will be exercising in Exercise Outback 88 (a) with the Unites States navy, (b) with the Royal Australian navy and (c) with other navies; and if he will state the purpose of these exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Arrangements for the Royal Navy task group to exercise with the navies of other countries during Outback 88 are not yet finalised. However, I can say that during the deployment the task group will be participating in two exercises with nations which are party to the five-power defence arrangements: a maritime exercise and an air defence exercise in the South China sea area. The task group will also exercise with the United States navy, and with the Royal Australian navy and probably various other navies off Australia after the fleet review in Sydney in October. The purpose of these exercises, as with all such exercises, is to maintain the fighting effectiveness of our naval forces.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's capabilities in the North Atlantic of the absence for six months of the Ark Royal and other Royal Navy ships in Exercise Outback 88;

(2) if he will list the Royal Navy ships that will participate in Exercise Outback 88 (a) by port of departure, (b) by date of departure and (c) by date of return to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The task group is due to deploy from Portsmouth in mid-June, returning to the United Kingdom in mid-December. The task group will consist of Her Majestys ships Ark Royal, Edinburgh and Sirius, together with the Royal Fleet Auxiliaries Fort Grange, Olwen and Orangeleaf. The ships will remain assigned to NATO, and we retain the option not to deploy the group or to recall it to the NATO area in the event of an emergency.

Psychological Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish all figures available to him on the number of armed forces personnel and civilians who attended psychological operations or psychological warfare courses since 1973, including such figures as do not distinguish between those courses and others run at the same institution.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 7 March 1988 at column 59, in which I gave the information which is available on numbers of Ministry of Defence personnel who have undertaken psychological operations training.

I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a similar question on 27 October 1976, Official Report, column 263, covering the period 1973 to 1976. The original records upon which this answer was based, and records for the period 1976 to 1982, are no longer available and were destroyed in 1978 and 1982 as these were no longer required.

Forged CIA Documents

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the use of forged CIA documents by the armed forces in Northern Ireland from 1971 to current date.

Mr. Freeman: I am unaware of any evidence that such documents have been used at any time by the armed forces in Northern Ireland.

Captain Fred Holroyd

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who sat on the full medical board in the case of Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) on 1 July 1975; and if he was informed of its conclusions.

Mr. Freeman: It is not my Department's policy to name individual officers acting in any particular case.

Captain Holroyd (retired) was informed of the findings of the full medical board which sat on 1 July 1975.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date in June 1975 the special confidential report on Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) was written; who wrote it; and whether Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) was informed of its findings.

Mr. Freeman: The special confidential report was initiated by Captain Holroyd's commanding officer on 5 June 1975. Captain Holroyd was subsequently informed of its findings.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what date in 1982 assistance was given by his Department to the Royal Ulster Constabulary inquiry into the allegations of Captain Fred Holroyd (retired);

(2) what was the nature and scope of the assistance given by his Department to the Royal Ulster Constabulary inquiry in 1982 into the allegations of Captain Fred Holroyd (retired).

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence responded appropriately on various dates to inquiries and requests for assistance from the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what Army regulations the special investigation branch of the Royal Military Police carried out their investigations into the allegations of Captain Fred Holroyd (retired).

Mr. Freeman: Assistance to civil police forces is given in accordance with Queen's Regulations for the Army and the Provost Manual.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the answer of the 29 February, Official Report, column 422, the full Army medical board held on 1 July 1975 formally sat as a result of consideration given to the special confidential report written in June 1975.

Mr. Freeman: No. The full Army medical board proceedings were entirely separate from the special confidential report.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 29 February, Official Report, column 422, if the special confidential report relating to Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) written in June 1975 was subsequently amended.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Service Personnel (Psychiatric Treatment)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what redress is available for those Army service men and women casualty-evacuated to a military psychiatric hospital as a result of false information provided by superior officers.

Mr. Freeman: The individual may appeal under section 180 of the Army Act 1955.

Service Personnel (Downgrading)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 29 February, Official Report, column 422, under what regulations the downgrading of Army service men and women could have been recommended before 1975.

Mr. Freeman: The regulations under which medical downgrading of Army personnel may have been recommended before 1975 will have been contained in the following publications: The PULHEEM'S administrative pamphlet (1972); Regulations for Army Medical Services (1954); Queens Regulations for the Army 1961; the Army Commissioning Regulations 1971 and PULHEEM'S—A Joint Services System of Medical Classification 1951.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1), pursuant to the written answer of 29 February, Official Report, column 421, what is the significance in respect of the duties an individual is assessed as capable of performing of a medical report which recommends in a clinical summary of a patient's condition that the patient be medically downgraded from 'S2' to 'S3' on the PULHEEM'S system;

(2) if he will list the terms used under (a) S2 and (b) S3 of the PULHEEM'S system of medical reports.

Mr. Freeman: The terms used under the PULHEEM'S system of medical classification are as follows:

S2. "emotionally fit to perform Army duties adequately under full combatant conditions in any part of the world."

S3. "although having a history of emotional instability is at present well adjusted and fit to serve in any part of the world in a role which is not primarily a fighting one".

Royal Engineers Surrey Troop, Castledillon

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which members of the Royal Engineers survey troop stationed at Castledillon in 1974-75 belonged to Army units other than the Royal Engineers;

(2) how many officers and of what rank served in the Castledillon, Royal Engineers survey troop in 1974-75;

(3) what role the Royal Engineers survey troop was carrying out whilst stationed at Castledillon in 1974-75;

(4) how many service men and women served in the Royal Engineers survey troop stationed at Castledillon from 1974-75.

Mr. Freeman: Detailed information on this unit, which is not now deployed in the Province, is no longer available. The role of a Royal Engineer field survey is to provide or process aerial photographs, ground surveys and mapping for the Army as required. The strength of such a unit at that time varied between about 30 and 40, depending upon its specific task, and usually included two officers.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what unit the Royal Engineers survey troop stationed at Castledillon in 1974-75 was guarded.

Mr. Freeman: The RE squadron based at Castledillon at that time would have been responsible for the overall security of the base.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the numerical designation of the Royal Engineers survey troop stationed at Castledillon in 1974-75.

Mr. Freeman: 4 Field Survey Troop, Royal Engineers.

Army Medical Board

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances a full Army medical board sits in the absence of the patient when medical reclassification is being considered.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 11 December 1987 at column 311.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards there are to prevent false information being given by commanding officers on special confidential reports to the Army medical authorities concerning officers under their command who may be undergoing medical assessment.

Mr. Freeman: The individual who is the subject of a special confidential report or a medical report may appeal under section 180 of the Army Act 1955. Special confidential reports are distinct from medical reports.

Medical Reports (False Information)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards there are to prevent false information being given on medical reports.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave on 29 February 1988 at column 422.

Northern Ireland Training and Advisory Team

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the role and composition of those elements of the Northern Ireland training and advisory team based in Northern Ireland from 1973 to the current date.

Mr. Freeman: Detailed organisational information on this is no longer available. There is no Northern Ireland training and advisory team (NITAT) currently in Northern Ireland. The role and composition of the NITATs are as described in my reply to the hon. Member on 29 February at column 422.

AWACS

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the progress being made on the AWACS programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: The E-3 AWACS programme is progressing well. The RAF looks forward to receiving the first aircraft as agreed.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many jobs have been created in defence industries as a result of the Boeing AWACS offset arrangement; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many offset jobs have been initiated in civilian manufacturing industries as a result of the Boeing AWACS offset arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Boeing's offset obligation to the Ministry of Defence is a financial one and will be measured in terms of the value and quality of contracts placed. Although we would expect the net effect on job numbers to be favourable, the Department has never set a target for jobs.

Air Combat Manoeuvring System Platforms

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nationality of the successful tenderer for the contract to build six air combat manoeuvring system platforms in the North sea; what was the value of the contract; and how many United Kingdom-based firms or yards tendered for the contract.

Mr. Sainsbury: The project referred to is a private venture to which my Department has made no commitment.

Royal Navy (Engineer Officers)

Miss Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action is taken by him to ensure that training for Royal Navy engineer officers takes account of developments in the wider engineering field.

Mr. Freeman: Most Royal Navy engineer officers are trained to a degree standard at the Royal Naval engineering college (RNEC), Manadon. Like other higher education institutions, RNEC needs to keep itself informed of, and take into account as necessary, developments within its own sphere of activity. The mechanism for such communication and consultation is often provided by advisory bodies and it has, therefore, recently decided to form an advisory council for the RNEC with the following terms of reference:

"To advise the Admiralty Board, with particular regard to the role and work of the Royal Naval Engineering College on matters relating to:

(a) higher education and the award of first and second level degrees.

(b) national qualifications and training of Chartered Engineers; and

(c) research and funding thereof."

Professor Sir Hermann Bondi, KCB, FRS, has kindly accepted an invitation to serve as chairman of the advisory council, whose membership will include four ex officio representatives of the Ministry of Defence:

the Director General Naval Manpower and Training;
the Chief of Staff to the Commander-in-Chief Naval Home Command; the Chief Naval Engineer Officer; and the Deputy Chief Scientific Adviser.

The following have also kindly accepted an invitation to serve on the advisory council:

Lord Caldecote KBE, DSC, FEng
Mr. T. N. Corkhill MSc, BSc, CEng, MRAeS
Professor B. Crossland CBE, MRIA, FEng, FRS
Professor D. E. N. Davies CBE, FEng, FRS
Professor M. G. Farley CEng, FRAeS, FIMechE, FIProdE, CBIM
Mr. A. Frodsham CBE

155 mm Dual Capable Gun

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the date upon which the 155 mm dual capable gun started in service.

Mr. Sainsbury: The current 155 mm dual capable gun first entered United Kingdom service in 1967.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States air force proposal to site a deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell is in connection with the strategic defence initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The tracking station is not part of the SDI programme.

Operational Support Unit

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and function of the operational support unit of the Ministry of Defence police; of which section of the Ministry of Defence police it is a part; when it was first set up in its current role; what is its annual budget; and whether it is autonomous from local Ministry of Defence police units in the areas in which it is deployed.

Mr. Sainsbury: the operational support unit (OSU) was set up on 1 April 1984, and comprises 50 MDP officers commanded by a chief inspector. Their primary role, which has remained unchanged, is explained in paragraph 9 of Cmnd. 9422, but they are also available to reinforce any MOD police detachment under pressure for any policing task, or to police MOD locations normally without MOD police should a need arise.

The OSU is an independent unit reporting direct to MOD police headquarters, but when deployed comes under the operational command of the senior MOD police officer at the location.

The OSU does not have a separate budget; its basic staffing costs are of the order of £775,000.

ENVIRONMENT

EC (Non-quota Textile Scheme)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what money is available for allocation in the final round of bids under the European regional development fund non-quota textile allocations scheme; what bids have been submitted for consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: £13·2 million of grant remains available under the textile non-quota special measure, for which applications worth £4·3 million have been received. £37·9 million of grant has already been awarded under this measure.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals there are for an EEC scheme to replace the European regional development fund non-quota textile scheme on its expiry.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

None. However, as stated in my answer on 3 March, at columns 641-42, to which I would refer the hon. Member, small and medium sized firms throughout Great Britain may now apply for consultancy grants under my Department's enterprise initiative. In the urban programme area of Burnley these are available at the higher (two thirds) rate.

Separate figures are not available for the United States or (since the EC took collective action on CFCs in 1980) for the United Kingdom. Sales within the EC are as follows:

Pollution Paper No. 15

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to commission research to update the findings of his Department's pollution paper No. 15 of 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Pollution paper 15, published in 1979, reviewed research on chlorofluorocarbons and their effect on stratospheric ozone.

The Department now supports a broadly based programme of research into stratospheric ozone; I refer the hon. Member to my replies of 2 November 1987, at column 437, and 17 March 1988, at column 645. In addition, the stratospheric ozone review group presented an assessment of our current understanding (which updates pollution paper 15) to the Department last August. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House. A follow-up report from it is due this autumn.

Rockwool and Glasswool Fibre

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the cancer risks of rockwool and glasswool fibre padding; how many houses have this material installed; what steps he is taking to minimise any risk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer to the reply by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 1 December 1987, at column 551, on the health risks to householders from man-made mineral fibre (MMMF) loft insulation. Rockwool and glasswool fibre padding are forms of MMMF widely used for loft insulation. They are also used in new buildings for cavity wall insulation. Only limited information is available on rockwool and glasswool cavity wall insulation but this indicates that the risk to health from them is of no more consequence than that from loft insulation. Information from Audits Great Britain Ltd. suggests that at the end of 1986 14 million households at most had these materials installed as loft insulation. The Department has no information on the number of houses with rockwool or glasswool cavity wall insulation. The risk to health from these materials is extremely small, but people handling them are advised to wear a face mask conforming to BS 6016 or BS 2091 to reduce the risks still further. The Secretary of State has published further advice in the booklet "All about loft, tank and pipe insulation," which is sent to persons seeking assistance under the homes insulation scheme.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Ridley: The Department's financial records relate to financial years. In 1986-87 DOE (Central) spent £5·7 million on management and other consultancies (including computing). The forecast outturn for 1987-88 is £4·7 million.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount spent by the Property Services Agency in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Ridley: Expenditure by the Property Services Agency, on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases, in 1987 was £3,572,487.

Local Authorities (Superannuation Funds)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to table regulations allowing local authorities to charge administrative expenses of superannuation funds directly to those funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The proposal to charge the administration expenses of local government superannuation funds to those funds was the subject of statutory consultations with representatives of local government and others in 1987. In the light of those consultations my right hon. Friend expects to make later this year the amending regulation effective from 1 April 1986 charging the above expenses to the funds.

RNAD, Coulport

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment of what material the floating jetty for the RNAD, Coulport, is to be constructed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Tenderers are free to make offers using either concrete or steel for the pontoons.

Chemical Warfare Research (Marmosets)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available on attempts by the Government of the Netherlands to secure marmosets from the United Kingdom for the purpose of chemical warfare research; and if he proposes to take steps to prevent such animals being exported for such purposes.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has no information on attempts by the Government of the Netherlands to secure marmosets from the United Kingdom for the purpose of chemical warfare research.

Litter

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific proposals and projects are currently in operation to combat littering in the urban centres of the north-east.

Mr. Moynihan: Projects currently in operation to combat littering in the north-east include Operation Clean-up at Middlesbrough under the urban programme and Tidy Britain Group's projects on cleaning and renovating the railway corridor between Newcastle and South Tyneside and cleaning areas on the River Tyne, together with a Tidy Up Middlesbrough campaign. The Tidy Britain Group has an ongoing programme to combat litter in collaboration with all sections of the community in all the urban centres of the north-east.

Rating Reform

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet completed his consideration of responses to the consultative paper "Non-Domestic Rates: Amendments to the Rating Legislation in England and Wales", published in July 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have today written to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) setting out the Government's conclusions, including some modifications to the Government's proposals in the light of consultees' views. These mainly concern the power to remit rates on grounds of hardship; local authorities' involvement in the determination of rateable values; the proposed limit on the period in which ratepayers may propose alterations to rateable values; the backdating of alterations to the valuation list; and the duty on local authorities to consult business ratepayers. I have placed copies of that letter in the Library. The changes will be given effect in the Local Government Finance Bill or in regulations made under it.

Waterways

Mr. Barry Field To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received a response from the British Waterways Board to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the maintenance of the boards' waterways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I am grateful to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for its wide-ranging investigation of BWB. The board has carefully studied the Commission's report under its new chairman, Mr. David Ingman, and I am placing copies of its initial response in the Library of the House.

The commission proposed a major programme of changes and improvements, some of which BWB has already begun or identified as necessary, for implementation over the next two to three years. Its recommendations cover the definition of maintenance standards and tasks, achieving the optimum balance between in-house work and the use of contractors or consultants, the development of procedures for project appraisal, the basis for allocating resources to individual waterways, BWB's freight operations, the raising of revenue both from leisure use and from BWB's estate, the management of BWB's direct labour force and salaried staff, and some aspects of management systems and structure. The Government broadly endorse the commission's findings.

BWB has accepted most of the commission's recommendations and has set in hand the process of management change. Key elements are the development of comprehensive plans for individual waterways as a basis for budgetary control and resource allocation, structural reorganisation, the appointment of new commercial and personnel directors, and the overhaul of cost control systems. I welcome the board's positive response to the report and its commitment to change. I support both its overall approach and the action it is taking to implement the report's recommendations. I attach particular priority to making progress with the recommendations on maintenance and contracting out, direct freight activities, project appraisal, and the management of BWB's estate.

The Department is liaising with BWB on the development project appraisal procedures, and will review the guidelines on submission of schemes to the Department for approval in the light of the new arrangements. I shall also keep under review BWB's responsibilities for public road bridges over canals.

Some of the commission's recommendations on BWB's financial and budgetary framework would require Government action. The commission thought it important that the guidance figures which BWB is given on grant levels for future years should be respected. It also recommended that the Government should consider the possibility of relating part of the grant to meeting the cost of non-revenue earning requirements and that BWB should be given an incentive to increase its income from users by being allowed to retain at least part of any such increase.

These issues need further consideration in consultation with BWB. I recognise that BWB would like as much assurance as possible about future grant levels, subject always to public expenditure constraints. I also attach importance to incentives. The existing grant arrangements do, however, already allow BWB to use all receipts within the same financial year and to carry over to the following year, subject to approval, receipts from the sale of land. Further work is needed to assess the feasibility and practical value of splitting the grant between revenue and non-revenue earning requirements.

I will make a further statement this autumn in the light of the first substantive report which BWB will prepare then on progress in implementing the commission's recommendations.

ENERGY

Nuclear Installations (Incidents)

125. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has met the Chairman of the Health and Safety Commission to discuss the report "Statement of Incidents at Nuclear Installations".

Mr. Parkinson: A range of nuclear issues was discussed when I met the HSC chairman in November 1987.

Nuclear Power Stations

126. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action he intends taking following the Health and Safety Commission's recent publication, "The Tolerability of Risk from Nuclear Power Stations".

Mr. Parkinson: The document was published by the Health and Safety Executive. The Health and Safety Commission will be considering the document and comments thereon, including those of the Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations, before formulating its own view. Comments have been requested by 6 May 1988.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department expects its total expenditure in the 1987-88 financial year on management and computer consultancy contracts to be about £283,000.

Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the chairman of British Coal, he will seek an assurance that the corporation will provide the general secretary of the National Union of Mineworkers, as a director of the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation, with details of the number of members of each union in accordance with the memorandum and articles of association of CISWO as amended by Statutory Instrument No. 1225 of 1987, so that individual unions can satisfy themselves as to the fairness of allocation of seats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: British Coal has provided to the unions concerned all the information required under the amended memorandum and articles of CISWO. That information, including the allocation of seats, was verified by the corporation's auditors as required by the articles. A procedure is incorporated in the articles for the unions to challenge the information provided. None did so.

Sizewell B Power Station

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what information he has as to how many contracts for the building of Sizewell B have been awarded to date; what percentage of them have gone to East Anglian firms; and what is his estimate of the number of Suffolk residents being employed at Sizewell B;

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress of building work at Sizewell B;

(3) what is his assessment of the current and projected impact of the Sizewell B project on the labour market in (a) East Anglia and (b) Suffolk.

Mr. Parkinson: This is a matter for the CEGB, and I have asked the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Amersham International

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to exercise his option, under the articles of association, to require Amersham International plc to redeem on 31 March his special rights preference share in the company.

Mr. Parkinson: I have no present plans to do so.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates (Sentencing Policy)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General whether, in the light of the most recent Home Office statistics in relation to sentencing and the ethnic minorities, the Lord Chancellor intends to provide (a) guidelines and (b) training to magistrates; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The magisterial committee of the Judicial Studies Board (which advises the Lord Chancellor on the training of magistrates) has in the last 12 months taken two initiatives to improve arrangements for the training of magistrates in sentencing and the ethnic minorities. In April last year the committee sent to all magistrates' courts committees, which are responsible for delivering training to magistrates locally, the first two in a series of cards to be issued, setting out a structured, step-by-step approach to decision making. One of these cards covered sentencing, and is designed to ensure that all relevant considerations relating to the offence, the offender and other matters are taken into account by magistrates in arriving at a sentence.

In June last year the committee organised a seminar on training in ethnic minority cultures, attended by representatives of selected magistrates' courts committees. This subject is listed as an approved subject in the training syllabus, so it may be included by magistrates' courts comittees in a training programme without prior application to the Lord Chancellor for approval. The seminar has been a stimulus to action and such training is increasingly being provided to magistrates.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total amount spent by his office in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

The Attorney-General: Nil.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total amount spent by the Lord Chancellor's Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

The Attorney-General: The total amount spent by the Lord Chancellor's Department in this financial year on management and computer consultancy, excluding hardware and software purchases, is £348,593·75.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total amount spent by Her Majesty's Land Registry in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

The Attorney-General: The sum spent by Her Majesty's Land Registry on management and computer consultancy contracts in 1987 was £487·02.

PRIME MINISTER

Q16. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the size of the United Kingdom's trade deficit with the EEC; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The EC is our largest market, which takes about 50 per cent. of our exports; it is up to United Kingdom exporters to take further advantage of the market of 320 million people that the EC provides. The removal of remaining barriers to trade leading to the achievement of a single market in 1992 will afford plenty of opportunities to do so.

Scotland

Q130. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to visit Scotland.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

China (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will list the Ministers who have paid official visits to China in each of the last five years and the year of each such visit.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of the dispersal of litter in St. James' park on Tuesday 22 March, prior to her attendance; and on which vote this expenditure will be borne.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 28 March, at column 280. The cost of less than £60 will be met from the Department of the Environment's provision for expenditure on the royal parks (class X, vote 4).

Interception of Communications Act 1985

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Prime Minister when the commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will present his annual report; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A copy of the 1987 annual report by Lord Justice Lloyd has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(7) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The confidential appendix to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(8) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. I am grateful to the commissioner for his work on the report and the reassurance it contains, that care is taken by all concerned to observe not only the letter but also the spirit of the Act. The commissioner's report suggests a small number of improvements to the procedures observed in dealing with these cases. Careful consideration is being given to ways of implementing these suggestions.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 29 March.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 29 March.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 29 March.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 29 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including the Prime Minister of Fiji and the Mayor of Shanghai. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electrical Installations (Safety)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received about safety standards for electrical installations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I regularly receive correspondence from colleagues, trade associations and members of the public concerning safety standards for electrical installations, most recently arising from the exhibition on safety and electricity presented by the Electrical Contractors Association in the Upper Waiting Hall between 2 and 6 November last, arranged by my hon. Friend.

In response to these inquiries, I have welcomed the efforts to promote greater awareness of the dangers of electricity and the potential hazards arising from the misuse of electrical equipment. In order to emphasise the importance of this area, my own Department, in collaboration with the industry, will shortly be launching an electrical safety canpaign with the specific aim of heightening people's awareness of the benefits to be gained by the installation of residual current devices in providing additional protection against electric shocks.

Telecommunications Industry

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to (a) the number of employees in the British telecommunications industry per telephone subscriber and (b) the comparable figure for West Germany and France.

Mr. Butcher: The latest edition of the "International Telecommunication Union's Yearbook of Common Carrier Telecommunication Statistics" gives the following information.

	Total staff in telecommunication services	Main lines (telephone exchange connections)
United Kingdom (British Telecom) 31 March 1986	230,197	21,653,639
Germany (Federal Republic) (Bundesministerium fur das Post-und Fernmeldewesen) 31 December 1985	212,364	25,588,585
France (Direction generale des telecommunications) 31 December 1985	166,788	23,031,972

Direct comparison of such figures can be misleading as different operators offer different services whilst the amount of sub-contracted work also differs. A comparison of prices charged suggests that for typical telephone use United Kingdom prices are at least in line with France and Germany.

China

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what has been the level of United Kingdom exports to China in each of the last five years in (a) records, (b) television programmes and (c) films;

(2) what has been the level of (a) exports to and (b) imports from China in manufactured goods in each of the last five years;

(3) what has been the level of (a) exports to and (b) imports from China in each of the last five years;

(4) whether he will list the five industries which have exported goods or services to the highest value to China in each of the last five years;

(5) what has been the level of United Kingdom exports of books to China in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on the value of exported goods to China by industries, as defined in the standard industrial classification, is not available: figures have been compiled using standard international trade classification revision 2 divisions equating to the broad industrial sectors. Information on the value of services and the "performance fee" value of television programmes and films exported to China is not available. Television programmes are not identified in the Overseas Trade Statistics; figures for recorded videos have been provided and may include television programmes. The available information is given in the following tables:

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the Chinese Government about the problems of unauthorised publication of British books in China.

Mr. Alan Clark: Chinese law does not extend copyright protection to foreign works and such works may therefore be published in that country. Contact on the subject of copyright has been made over a number of years with the Chinese Government, both at ministerial and official level. Recently, the Chinese Government have made good progress in drawing up a comprehensive law for the protection of both domestic and foreign works. In doing this, they have consulted widely with international experts. We understand that they hope to have the new law in force by 1990 and that they intend to join one of the international copyright conventions. We will continue to encourage the Chinese Government in this process.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's expenditure on consultants employed to improve the efficiency of the Department in the financial year 1987-88 is estimated to be £6,463,000, of which £5,280,000 is for computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Expenditure on management consultants is not recorded separately from other consultancy spend.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total amount spent by the Office of Fair Trading in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Butcher: This is a matter for the Director-General of Fair Trading, and I will ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total amount spent by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Maude: Nil.

Disabled People (Inner Cities)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps are being taken to ensure that, in Government plans to rehabilitate and revitalise the inner cities, provision will be made to meet the needs of disabled people.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Several Government inner city programmes include schemes specifically targeted on the disabled, such as the urban programme, skills and training initiatives and support for arts and sports. I have invited comments from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation on the action for cities proposals.

Magistrates

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has concerning the decision of the Oldham magistrates' bench interviewing committee that no one who is an elected member of the Oldham metropolitan borough council will be considered for appointment as a magistrate.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have advisory committees to assist me with the selection of persons for appointment as magistrates. In doing so they follow certain guidelines, of which the main criterion is suitability for office. Subject to this, I desire my committees to balance the bench so that it broadly reflects the make-up of the community of the area. For example, it would be wrong to have an overlarge proportion of persons on the bench involved in the work of local government.

My committee at Oldham selects candidates for appointment on merit, follows the guidelines and does not bar elected members of the local authority from appointment.

Advertising Standards Authority

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Advertising Standards Authority to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Monday 25 April to Friday 29 April 1988.

Internal Market

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the invitation list to the EC internal market conference in Lancaster house on 18 April includes trade union representatives or Opposition hon. and right hon. Members of the House.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 28 March 1988]: The Lancaster house conference is primarily for senior business people. The general secretary of the Trades Union Congress has also received an invitation. My right hon. and noble Friend has invited all right hon. and hon. Members to a separate briefing at Lancaster house on the afternoon of 18 April.

Investment Intermediaries

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what submissions he has made to the European Commission on the proposed directive on the authorisation of investment intermediaries.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 25 March 1988]: The Commission has put forward no proposals for a directive dealing specifically with investment intermediaries. The Commission is considering a possible directive on investment services, but this has not yet been submitted to the Council of Ministers.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Inspectorate

124. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the remaining inspectors at the fire inspectorate will be replaced when they retire.

Mr. John Patten: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to members of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Fire Services. A number of serving members of the inspectorate will be retiring in the near future and it is intended that each will be replaced.

Prisoners (Ethnic Origins)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will update his Department's 1968 statistical bulletin on the ethnic origins of the prison population; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to update the detailed analyses of the ethnic origin of prisoners contained in Home Office statistical bulletin 17/86. Information on the ethnic origin of the population in prison department establishments by type of prisoner and by offence group for sentenced prisoners is now published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (tables 1.11 to 1.13 of the 1986 issue, Cm. 210) copies of which are in the Library. The latest available information for 1987 is given in my reply to the question from the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott) on 3 December 1987 at column 681.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will identify those local authorities that will receive civil defence grant towards the construction or conversion of emergency centres during each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will indicate the likely scale of the provision involved in each year.

Mr. John Patten: We expect grant-eligible expenditure on emergency centres to total about £3·5 million for each of the financial years mentioned but details will not be available until relevant expenditure for each authority has been approved.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will identify those local authorities that have received civil defence grant towards the construction or conversion of emergency centres during each of the years 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will indicate the scale of the expenditure involved in each year.

Mr. John Patten: The local authorities concerned are listed as follows. Expenditure attracting grant at the rate of 75 per cent. totalled £1·7 million in 1984-85, £2·1 million in 1985-86 and £3·3 million in 1986-87. The expected figure for 1987-88 is £3·5 million.

Mr. John Patten: Visits by officials to local authority emergency centres occur in support of detailed consideration of a number of issues, including the installation of new communications equipment, but no comprehensive record is kept of the instances. Progress made by local authorities in meeting their statutory responsibilities to establish, equip and maintain emergency centres is monitored under the Government's planned programme for implementation of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of recent evidence, including opinion polls, showing a higher than average incidence of the fear of crime in inner cities, he will take further steps to improve his crime prevention measures through the urban programme or other means.

Mr. John Patten: In reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 7 March 1988, at columns 3-4, my right hon. Friend reported the launch of the Government's safer cities programme which is specifically designed to tackle crime and the fear of crime in inner city areas with high crime levels. The programme will comprise safer city projects in 20 areas, to be established over the next three years. these will aim to complement and strengthen a range of initiatives, funded both from Government funds (including the urban programme) and the private sector.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metroplitan police spent £1,673,923 on management and computer consultancy contracts in 1987.

Iranian Refugees

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons of Iranian nationality claiming to be refugees have arrived in the United Kingdom from Turkey in each of the past four years; how many were given asylum in the United Kingdom; how many were returned to Turkey; and what representations he has received regarding the Turkish practice of returning such people to Iran.

Mr. Tim Renton: As applicants for asylum are recorded by nationality and not by country of embarkation, the figures requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Whilst we have received representations on individual cases of Iranian asylum-seekers from Turkey, I am unaware of any case of an Iranian refugee being sent back to Iran following return to Turkey from this country. Turkey is a signatory to the 1951 UN convention on refugees. There is a UNHCR presence in Turkey to which any Iranian may look for assistance.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take in relation to the letter ref. MLB.JD dated 19 January 1985 from the prosecuting solicitors' office Gwent police authority to an applicant for a firearms certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Responsibility for the administration of the Firearms Act 1968 is vested with chief officers of police. My right hon. Friend has no authority to intervene in individual cases.

Police

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table depicting police force strength in numbers of officers for all regions of the United Kingdom and the percentage increases or decreases these figures represent from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has responsibility only for England and Wales, for which the information is as follows:

Visas

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effects the imposition of a visa requirement on the nationals of India, Bangladesh, Pakistan, Ghana and Nigeria have had at ports of entry to the United Kingdom particularly with regard to the delays which were experienced on immigration control during 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Tim Renton: Visa requirements were introduced in October 1986 for nationals of India, Bangladesh, Pakistan and Ghana and on 1 February 1987 for Nigeria. Since introduction there have been very substantial improvements at the Heathrow and Gatwick terminals in easing congestion, reducing delays at peak periods and improving conditions for passengers, their friends and relatives meeting them, and for the staff at the immigration service.

In 1986 a total of about 24,000 persons were refused entry and removed; in 1987 the figures had dropped to just over 19,000. Because of the pressure on the control in 1986 many of those who arrived before October were not refused entry and removed until the following year. The fall in the refusal rate is therefore even greater than the apparent 20 per cent.

The figures for Heathrow terminal 3 given in the table are illustrative of the reduction in casework at the major terminals dealing with passengers from the five countries.

At terminal 4, which also handles intercontinental traffic, the position was very similar. Summer 1986 saw a steady increase in the volume of difficult casework. Some 466 passengers were referred for further examination in June swelling to 847 in the first two weeks in October. By contrast the same figures for the second half of 1987 remained relatively constant varying between extremes of 270 and 316 cases per month. A random sample of passengers arriving on Saturdays during last September revealed that only five passengers from Bangladesh, India and Pakistan were referred to the further examination area whereas 241 such passengers were set aside for further examination on the corresponding four days of September 1986.

Without the visa imposition, and with a 13 per cent. increase in passenger traffic in 1987, pressure on the control at terminal 4 last year would have been intolerable notwithstanding an additional allocation of staff.

Similar improvements were experienced at Heathrow terminal 2 and Gatwick. Of the major ports only Heathrow terminal 1 and Dover did not experience any substantial change in 1987 because nationals of the five countries involved do not use these in substantial number.

WALES

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Department's expenditure on such centrally managed consultancy contracts in 1987 was £70,938·21. It is not possible to identify without disproportionate costs fees paid on management and computer consultancy contracts in respect of projects not centrally managed.

Factory Closures

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many plants in Wales which employed more than 500 persons in 1983 have since been closed down; and how many of these were foreign-owned.

Mr. Peter Walker: Four manufacturing plants with more than 500 employees in 1983 have since closed, including one which had been British-owned but had been acquired by a German company in 1980.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what, assuming the full replacement of rates by the community charge and the implementation of the proposals in the Local Government Finance Bill for non-domestic rates and the grant system, in 1988-89 (a) for Wales, (b) for each class of local authority and (c) for each local authority, showing precepting authorities separately the following items in pounds per adult would be: (i) the community charge without safety net, (ii) the safety net, (iii) needs grant, (iv) redistributed non-domestic rate revenue, showing also the corresponding 1988-89 domestic rate poundage and in pounds per adult the average rate bill and local authority expenditure.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 28 March 1988]: Illustrative figures are given in the following table. These figures are provisional and will be updated as better information is received from local authorities. Calculations have been based on present needs assessments which are under review. The expenditure of individual community councils is not available and has been included with the appropriate district council's expenditure. The Government no longer propose to pay separate needs and standard grants to authorities. These have been replaced by a single revenue support grant as shown in column 3 of the table. Average rate bills per adult are on a basis comparable with the community charge figures and exclude any use of balances.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ratu Mara and Penaia Ganilau

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what details he has about the proposed visit of Ratu Mara and Penaia Ganilau to Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Prime Minister of Fiji, Ratu Mara, is visiting Britain from 27 to 31 March and will have talks today, 29 March, with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend. The President of Fiji, Ratu Penaia Ganilau, is not with him.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Eggar: Foreign and Commonwealth Office expenditure to date for the financial year 1987-88 on management and computer consultancy is as shown. The figures include expenditure for both the diplomatic and aid wings of the office:

Management consultancy	257,272
Computer consultancy	1,171,347

China (Town Twinning)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on which British towns and cities are twinned with towns or cities in China.

Mr. Eggar: Twinning activity in the United Kingdom is co-ordinated by the secretariat of the Joint Twinning Committee of Local Authority Associations of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The secretariat keeps a record of all United Kingdom twinnings, including ones with China. Such information is held in the Library of the House.

Iranian Refugees

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Turkey regarding the Turkish practice of sending Iranian refugees, who have come to the United Kingdom from Turkey and been returned to Turkey, back to Iran.

Mrs. Chalker: None. Neither we, nor the representative in Turkey of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, have any specific evidence of Iranian refugees returned to Turkey from this country being sent back to Iran.

Agricultural Produce (Radioactivity)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about cases of companies within the European Community seeking to sell to Third world countries agricultural produce heavily contaminated with radioactivity; and if he will make a statement as to what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to prevent this.

Mrs. Chalker: None. In the light of a rigorous national monitoring programme instituted following the Chernobyl accident, we are satisfied about the safety of all United Kingdom foodstuffs placed on the domestic market or exported.

EC (Information)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how much money is being paid to United Kingdom political parties by the European Parliament for information purposes relating to the European Community and its institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The draft budget for 1988 now under discussion contains 27·7 million ecu which is for information work by the European Parliament. Under EP rules this money is distributed to the political groups in the European Parliament. It is up to each political group itself to decide how to disburse its allocation among its members in the different member states.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education (Engineering)

122. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received following the publication of the Engineering Council's proposals on the restructuring of engineering higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: None. The Government await the outcome of responses to the Engineering Council's discussion document with interest.

Education Reform

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he intends to ensure that the new national tests contain no inherent bias against (a) children from different cultural backgrounds and (b) multi-lingual children whose first language is not English.

Mrs. Rumbold: The task group on assessment and testing has recommended that assessment instruments should be reviewed regularly by statistical and other means for any evidence of bias, particularly in respect of gender and race. The group also suggested that children whose first language is not English might be exempted if their language problems made tests unworkable; and that assessment in other skills, particularly at age seven, should wherever practicable and necessary, be conducted in the pupil's first language.

Open University (Exhibition)

Mr. Benyon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Open University to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 18 April to Friday 22 April.

Chinese Universities (British Students)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish a table showing the number of British students who have studied at universities in China in each of the last five years; and what subjects such students have been studying.

Mr. Jackson: The readily available information is drawn mainly from the UNESCO statistical yearbook; subject of study is not recorded in this source.

Chinese Students

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish a table showing how many students from China have studied at British (a) universities and (b) polytechnics in each of the last five years; and what subjects such students have been studying.

Mr. Jackson: The number of students from China studying at institutions in Great Britain is provided in the following table. Information on the subjects such students studied is not available.

Students from China at institutions in Great Britain

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of £364,152 was spent on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases, in the calendar year 1987. In addition, the Department spent some £535,030 on costs associated with the privatisation of the Plant Breeding Institute.

School Population (Suffolk)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations Suffolk county council has made on the increase in its school population while the Sizewell B power station is being built; and what responses he has given.

Mr. Dunn: None.

Medical Research (Charges)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking legislation to prevent universities from imposing charges for medical research funded by charities; what specific representations he has received about the charges imposed in respect of research into Freidreich's Ataxia disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government much appreciate the substantial sums which charities provide for research in universities — in 1986-87 they contributed about £66 million to medical research. In general, charitable moneys cover only part of the cost of the specific research projects which they support, with a substantial part of the costs — for academic staff time, premises, equipment, materials and overheads — being met from general university funds.

In the light of advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, we are currently reviewing the balance of funding responsibilities between universities and the research councils for projects which the latter support. This may have implications for charitable funding of medical research which in most cases is treated analogously with research councils' grants. I discussed this matter on 10 March with the Association of Medical Research Charities.

My right hon. Friend has not received any representations seeking legislation on these matters. We have received 47 representations from members of the Friedreich's Ataxia Group about the possibility of their having to meet a larger proportion of the costs of the research which the group supports in universities. These representations will be taken into account in our consideration of the wider issues.

Computer Services (Skill Shortages)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the reply of 1 March, Official Report, column 539, what resources have been made available under the engineering, science and technology initiative to increase relevant higher education opportunities; and what proposals he has to meet skill shortages in the computer services sector.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have made available a total of £43 million between 1985 and 1988 to fund additional higher education places under the engineering and technology programme. Future expenditure plans support the additional places in the longer term beyond this period.

To secure the skills they want employers in the computer services and other sectors must provide proper incentives for people to acquire those skills, develop internal recruitment, and make the vital investment needed in training and in the upgrading of skills.

The Government have given the lead through their investment in the engineering and technology programme, which is one of a number of initiatives already being taken to increase output in particular areas where it is clear that demand outstrips supply.

THE ARTS

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the total amount spent by his office in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Luce: In 1987, £2,300 was spent by my office to meet in part the cost of a computer consultancy contract for the Government art collection. No money was spent on management consultancy.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will provide the Treasury model estimate of the full year impact of the cuts in the higher rates of income tax announced in the Budget; and if he will provide a similar estimate of the impact of an additional annual £2 billion of current public expenditure;

(2) if he will estimate the full year impact on the current account of the balance of payments of the cuts in the basic and higher rates of income tax announced in the Budget.

Mr. Major: It has not been the practice to publish estimates of the economic effects of changes in tax rates or public expenditure.

Interest Rates

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about interest rates since the Budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the total amount spent by Her Majesty's Treasury in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases;

(2) what was the total amount spent by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Brooke: In 1987 total Treasury expenditure was some £5·6 million (including some £5·3 million by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency).

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount spent by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Brooke: £336,000.

British Rail (Customs Controls)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will detail the facilities and procedures required of British Rail by the Board of Customs and Excise to allow for the performance of effective on-train customs controls.

Mr. Lilley: Discussions are at present taking place between Customs and British Rail about the facilities that would be required on the through trains travelling via Olympia. These include adequate space for baggage examination and interviews. Back-up facilities will also be required at Olympia for the more protracted investigations where serious offences are detected or suspected, for the detention of offenders and suspects and for communications and administrative support. Discussions with BR on the Olympia requirements will begin shortly.

EC (Own Resources)

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the European Commission has paid to member states the 400 mecu traditional own resources refunds deferred from 1987 under Council regulation 3952/87.

Mr. Brooke: Yes. The Commission paid to member states on 24 March the refunds of traditional own resources deferred from 1987. These refunds are set at 10 per cent. of traditional own resources (levies and duties) paid over to the Commission by member states and are intended to cover costs of collection.

As I reported to the House on 3 July last year, at column 175, the Budget Council decided on 2 July to defer 400 mecu of these refunds until early 1988 to help deal with the Community's budgetary problems last year. The Commission accordingly deferred most of the refunds due to member states in respect of the traditional own resources established between June and October 1987. In the event, the total amount deferred (and now refunded to member states) came to 443 mecu rather than 400 mecu because these own resources were running at a higher level than expected. The United Kingdom's share of the sums now refunded is some 91 mecu (£63·1 million).

In accordance with the conclusions of the Brussels European Council in February, the existing arrangements for 10 per cent. refunds of traditional own resources are to be replaced, with effect from the beginning of 1988, by a new system whereby member states will make a 10 per cent deduction from their monthly payments of these own resources to the Commission (which relate to own resources established two months previously). In keeping with this, the Commission does not propose to pay to member states refunds in respect of own resources established from November 1987 onwards (and for which there is no budgetary provision). It proposes instead to invite member states to deduct from their first payments of traditional own resources after the 1988 budget has been adopted the total deductions due in respect of own resources established from November 1987 onwards. In this way member states will effectively receive the 10 per cent. collection costs due to them in respect of all the months concerned.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the proposed restriction on companies raising finance under the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury announced during the Budget debates on 17 March that provided a company had issued a prospectus before Budget day and issued the shares before the end of the present tax year, the £500,000 limit would be increased to £1 million. However, there are some companies which do not offer shares to the public and do not need therefore to issue a prospectus. In order to help these companies the announced relaxation will also apply to a share issue made in pursuance of an offer for sale in writing made before Budget day, provided that the shares are issued before the end of the present tax year.

It has also been suggested that the limitation on the amount raised in any period of 12 months could prevent a company using the BES to raise finance when it needs it. So we propose to amend this rule in a way which will give companies more flexibility while retaining the principle of an annual limit. The amended limit will apply to the amount raised in a tax year, but in order to prevent companies effectively doubling the limit by making share issues both at the end of one tax year and the beginning of the next, the limit will also apply to the amount raised in any period of six months.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Small Farmers Association

Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Small Farmers Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I have not met the chairman of the Small Farmers Association in my present ministerial capacity, though I have very frequent contact with all sections of the farming community.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the area of land approved for forestry grant-aid in each of the five years to 31 March 1987 and from 1 April 1987 to date in England.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows:

Year ended 31 March	Area of land (hectares)
1983	11,225
1984	16,290
1985	17,379
1986	16,002
1987	25,245

The total area of land approved for planting in the period 1 April 1987 to 31 December 1987 was 23,932 hectares. Figures are not yet available beyond 31 December 1987.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount spent by his Ministry in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1987 my Department spent £707,662 on such consultancies.

Sheep Exports (Restrictions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions were placed on the export of sheep from the restricted areas of Cumbria from 20 June 1986 to 2 September 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 28 March 1988]: All sheep in the restricted area in Cumbria were subject to movement restrictions. Movements were authorised from 18 August under specific approvals which precluded the slaughter of marked sheep. Export of live sheep to third countries is not permitted for welfare reasons, other than for the purpose of breeding. All live sheep exported to EC member countries are subject to Ministry veterinary control.

SCOTLAND

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the mental hospitals which are scheduled to (a) open and (b) close in Scotland in each of the next seven years;

(2) how many residential places in the community will be provided for those discharged from mental hospitals in Scotland in each of the next seven years;

(3) how many new mental hospital beds have been opened in Scotland in each of the last 10 years;

(4) how many mental hospital beds have been closed in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is our general policy that mentally ill people capable of living in the community should have the opportunity of doing so, but it is important that discharges from hospital should not take place before appropriate community provision is available. It is for individual local authorities to make provision for their areas in consultation with health boards and voluntary organisations.

We accept, however, that there is a need to continue to treat certain types of mental illness in a hospital setting. Suitable hospital facilities must therefore continue to be provided with the emphasis on smaller units related to the communities they serve.

I am not able to predict the mental hospital openings or closures which may take place over the next seven years. It is up to health boards to deliver services in the light of their strategic plans which in turn reflect Government's policy for the services concerned. Boards have no plans at present to build any completely new mental hospitals. Their strategic plans propose the eventual closure of some hospitals, but this would require an application to my right hon. and learned Friend for his approval.

Details of new mental hospital beds the bulk of which are replacement beds are held centrally only from 1979. The information is as follows:

	Number
1979	120
1980	60
1981	60
1982	Nil
1983	432
1984	240
1985	600
1986	270
1987	120

Details of mental hospital beds closed in Scotland are held centrally only in relation to formal applications for closure made to the Secretary of State. The information, which is available only from 1979, is as follows:

	Number
1979	Nil
1980	Nil
1981	Nil
1982	Nil
1983	Nil
1984	Nil
1985	85

1987	87

Forestry

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the likely geographical and topographical distribution of new tree planting over the next 10 years in the United Kingdom.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We expect to see a higher proportion of planting than hitherto taking place on lower land of better quality. The rate of planting in Scotland is likely to continue to exceed that in England and Wales.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many acres of land are planted with (a) conifers and (b) broadleaves; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At 31 March 1987 the area of productive woodland in Great Britain was 1,490,000 hectares of conifers and 604,000 hectares of broadleaves.

Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many community psychiatric nurses there were in Scotland in 1979; how many there are now; and how many he estimates there will be in 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 2 November 1987, at column 435.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amounts provided for the forthcoming year for bridging funds in Scotland for local care of patients discharged or excluded from mental hospitals; how much in each case is provided for long-term patients still to be discharged from hospitals and how much for those already discharged from hospital; what the figure per patient is in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The arrangements for the funding of community care in Scotland do not provide for bridging funds. Under NHS circular 1985(GEN)18, health boards may make lump sum or continuing payments to a local authority or voluntary agency towards the cost of projects which make it possible for people such as the mentally ill to return to, or remain in, the community. The indicative level for 1988-89 notified to health boards is £4·7 million.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what experiments in hospital hostels for discharged mental patients have been conducted in Scotland; what lessons have been learnt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Hospital hostels are regarded as part of the psychiatric hospital provision and generally do not accommodate patients who have been discharged.

These hostels care for patients who are preparing to re-enter the community. Initiatives in these programmes are conducted and developed on a continuing basis.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those regional and island authorities with an operational (i) main and (ii) standby emergency centre, and those district authorities that have an operational emergency centre.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On the basis of returns provided by local authorities for October 1987, information abou' operational emergency centres which meet the standards set out in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities is as follows:

Regions
- Borders Region—Main and standby
- Grampian Region—Main and standby

Districts
- Gordon[1]
- Kincardine and Deeside[1]
- Roxburgh
- Tweeddale[1]

[1] Co-ordinated with a regional emergency centre.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will identify those local authorities that will receive civil defence grant towards the construction or conversion of emergency centres during each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will indicate the likely scale of the provision involved in each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Grant-eligible expenditure on civil defence capital projects, predominantly, but not exclusively, emergency centres, is expected to be £904,000 in 1988-89, £948,000 in 1989-90, and £995,000 in 1990-91. It is expected that Orkney islands council and Dumfries and Galloway regional council will receive further grant to complete their emergency centres in 1988-89. Details of other authorities receiving grant will not be available until the relevant expenditure has been approved.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will identify those local authorities that have received civil defence grant towards the construction or conversion of emergency centres during each of the years 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will indicate the scale of the expenditure involved in each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in this form for 1984-85 or 1985-86. In 1986-87, grant towards the construction or conversion of emergency centres was paid to Grampian and Borders regional councils and in 1987-88 to these two councils and to Dumfries and Galloway regional council and Roxburgh district council. Expenditure attracting grant was £92,064 in 1986-87 and is expected to be £433,514 in 1987-88.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authority emergency centres have been inspected by officials from his Department; and if he is satisfied with the facilities provided by local authorities for emergency communications and control.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All the operational emergency centres have been visited by Scottish Office officials. Steps have been taken to remedy deficiencies in communications facilities identified as a result of these visits.

Consulting Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1987 my Department spent £191,308 on management consultancy and £504,431 on computer consultancy.

Rating Reform

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to issue any guidance to community charge registration officers on the conduct of door-to-door canvassers, and on the information which they may legitimately request and record.

Mr. Lang: No. The training of canvassers is a matter for community charges registration officers. The information required to be supplied by responsible persons is set out in the inquiry form and supplementary inquiry form prescribed in schedules 3 and 4 respectively of the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) Regulations 1988.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision he will make to require community charge registration officers to inform persons liable for a community charge of the identity of the responsible person who has been asked to supply information about them.

Mr. Lang: None.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he proposes to publish, or to encourage community charge registration officers to publish, any advice to members of the public who may be considering appealing against designation as responsible persons in terms of section 17(6) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates (Scotland) Act 1987, including advice about the evidence which might be considered relevant to such an appeal;

(2) whether he proposes to publish any further guidance to community charge registration officers on the consideration which they should take into account in determining whom it would be appropriate to designate as the responsible person in relation to any premises.

Mr. Lang: Under section 17(6) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 the responsible person will be either the owner-occupier or tenant-occupier of the premises. In the small number of cases where this might give rise to difficulties, the registration officer may designate any other person to be the responsible person. The provisions of the Act are flexible enough to allow registration officers to arrive at sensible decisions in these cases and it is therefore unlikely that there will be many appeals against designation as a responsible person.

The considerations which registration officers will take into account in making any designation, and the evidence which may be relevant to any appeals, will vary according to the circumstances of individual cases. My right hon. and learned Friend does not, therefore, intend to publish any advice or guidance on these matters.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he proposes that the amounts of interest payments and surcharges owed in connection with a liability to pay community charge for a back-dated period should be eligible for rebate under the community charge rebate scheme.

Mr. Lang: No.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to require community charge registration officers not to impose interest charges or surcharges on persons who have arrears or back-dated liability for payment of community charge as a result of release from prison following trial, after a period on remand.

Mr. Lang: The arrangements for interest to be charged on backdated community charges and for the imposition of surcharges in certain circumstances are laid down in Section 18 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987. My right hon. and learned Friend is considering whether prisoners on remand should be exempt from the personal community charge.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers a non-resident or institutional owner or tenant of premises designated as a responsible person for the provision of information on the occupiers of those premises in terms of section 17(6)(b) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates (Scotland) Act 1987 will have to obtain information required by the registration officer; and what penalties the occupiers will incur if they refuse to supply the responsible person with information.

Mr. Lang: Under section 17(6)(b) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, either the owner of the premises, the tenant-occupier or, any non-occupancy tenant with a lease for 12 months or more will be the responsible person. Only in the few cases where this might give rise to difficulty will the registration officer designate another person to be the responsible person.

A responsible person has no specific powers to require another person resident in the premises to provide information for community charge registration purposes. There are no penalties for refusing to provide the responsible person with information. The information required is however straightforward and it is unlikely that responsible persons will be unable to supply it.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines his Department will issue to community charge registration officers on the information which they will be able to require the police force to supply them with; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 gives community charges registration officers no powers to require the police to supply them with information.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether community charge registration officers will be able to delegate their powers to door-to-door canvassers employed by local authorities to obtain information from members of the public.

Mr. Lang: Members of the registration officer's staff may assist with the handling of inquiry forms, but do not have the powers of registration officers. Such powers may be exercised only by the registration officer himself or by any depute registration officer appointed by a regional or islands council under section 12(3) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987.

Free School Meals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children currently receive free school meals in (a) Greenock, (b) Port Glasgow and (c) Strathclyde region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details relating to free school meals in Strathclyde region are collected centrally on an education division basis and the latest information available, taken from the 1987 annual census, is set out in the table.

Division	Number of children receiving free school meals
Argyll & Bute	1,560
Ayr	13,266
Dumbarton	9,340
Glasgow (city)	34,671
Lanark	16,823
Renfrew	11,702
Total (Strathclyde Region)	87,362

European Year of the Environment

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution his Department has made to the European Year of the Environment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My Department made a contribution of £30,000 in support of the work of the EYE Scottish sub-committee. The secretariat of the sub-committee was provided by the Countryside Commission for Scotland. In addition, EYE activity in Scotland attracted financial support from the Countryside Commission for Scotland under its normal grant scheme arrangements, and a further sum of £50,000 was allocated from the United Kingdom EYE fund.

AIDS and Drug Misuse

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on AIDS and drug misuse in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government take the problem of AIDS and drug misuse in Scotland very seriously. Of those who have chosen to be tested for HIV infection, over 50 per cent. are intravenous drug misusers, whereas the corresponding proportion for the United Kingdom as a whole is only 7 per cent.; and over 20 per cent. of those found to be infected in Scotland are women, the great majority of whom are intravenous drug misusers. We have taken a number of measures, and further measures are in hand, to tackle the related problems of AIDS and drug misuse in Scotland.

We have devoted considerable resources to our public education campaign on AIDS and drug misuse. One of the main themes of the AIDS campaign has been the dangers of transmission of HIV infection by the sharing of injecting equipment, and the phase of the campaign running from September to December 1987 stressed this. Furture phases of the campaign will seek to reinforce this important message. In February, we launched a further stage of the information and education campaign against drug misuse in Scotland. Since its inception in 1985 about £1·4 million has been spent on the campaign which seeks to discourage young people from any involvement with drugs and to promote a healthier lifestyle. We shall continue to give a high priority to the campaign, an essential element of which is aimed at improving the knowledge and awareness of professionals who work with young people.

The incidence of drug misuse in Scotland increased rapidly in the 1980s and services for the treatment and rehabilitation of drug misusers have had to develop from a low base in response to the this problem. A wide range of mainly community-based services has developed quickly in the last three or four years, many of them with the support of central Government funds earmarked for the purpose. Over £1 million was made available in 1987-88 specifically for the support of drug misuse services and a similar sum will be made available in 1988-89. This includes an additional £300,000 in each of these two years specifically to take account of the extra demand on services caused by the spread of HIV infection.

We have also promoted the setting up of needle exchange arrangements on an experimental basis. Three schemes were set up last year in Scotland — in Edinburgh, Glasgow and Dundee—to provide counselling for drug misusers and clean equipment on an exchange basis in appropriate cases. The scheme in Dundee has been closed because of various difficulties, including trouble with clients, and the scheme in Glasgow has encountered local opposition and low take-up. The scheme in Edinburgh has been more successful. In the course of monitoring the experimental schemes, however, it has become clear that another possible approach to needle exchange is through sales by community pharmacists, a number of whom already sell equipment to drug misusers. Accordingly, I propose to approach the Scottish department of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain in the near future to discuss with them the contribution which sales by pharmacists might make towards the wider availability of clean equipment. In pursuing this approach, we shall be bearing in mind the importance to pharmacists of having the support of health boards, both in relation to the medical and counselling support facilities for drug misusers, and in relation to disposal arrangements for used equipment.

As regards the two needle exchange schemes which are still in operation—those in Edinburgh and Glasgow—Lothian and Greater Glasgow health boards have been informed that, although central funding of the schemes will not continue beyond 31 March when the formal period of monitoring and assessment is due to end, they may continue to operate the schemes if they consider this to be appropriate in local circumstances. So far as further needle exchange arrangements by health boards are concerned, we are not yet in a position to reach general conclusions on whether any extension of the existing arrangements would be appropriate. However, if any health board considers that, notwithstanding possible developments in the pharmacy-based field, there is a need for such facilities in their area, we shall be prepared to consider specific proposals.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for Health has set out today the Government's response to the main issues raised by the report on AIDS and drug misuse by the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs.

The report expresses particular concern about the position in Scotland and makes a number of criticisms and recommendations about the provision of services for drug misusers and the measures needed to prevent the spread of HIV infection among and from this group. In my view the chapter of the report on Scotland does not give an entirely balanced assessment of the situation in Scotland nor does it take into account the different historical background to the drugs problem here. In particular, the report fails to acknowledge that many drug misuse services in Scotland have already adapted their approach in response to the problems presented by the spread of HIV infection among drug misusers. I am however sending copies of the report to health boards and local authorities and to various representative bodies. I also propose to hold early discussions with the Scottish division of the Royal College of Psychiatrists about the report including its recommendation on the need for increased input to the management and treatment of drug misuse by the psychiatric services in Scotland. A working group of the National Medical Consultative Committee is currently exploring the medical role in the prevention and management of drug misuse and is expected to report later this year.

I shall keep the position in Scotland under close review and, taking into account the advisory council's detailed recommendations, I shall consider what further action it may be appropriate for the Government to take.

Superglass Insulations Company

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the nature and extent of the Scottish Development Agency involvement in the Superglass Insulations Company in Clydebank and Stirling.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency has been involved with the Superglass Insulations Company Ltd (a) as owner of the premises occupied by the company in Clydebank, and (b) in the provision of assistance towards training associated with an investment project in Stirling.

Attraction of Industry

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the amount of expenditure to be paid out by his Department or agencies responsible to his Department in attracting industry to Scotland in each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Locate in Scotland is the Government organisation staffed jointly by the Scottish Development Agency and the industry department for Scotland, which has responsibility for the attraction of industry to Scotland. The estimated expenditure for Locate in Scotland at current prices in each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 is as follows:

£ million

Year	Estimated expenditure
1988-89	4·26
1989-90	4·26
1990-91	4·26

Figures for 1989-90 and 1990-91 are provisional.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent in each of the last 10 years by his Department or agencies responsible to his Department in attracting industry to Scotland, in both cash and real terms.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Locate in Scotland is the Government organisation staffed jointly by the Scottish Development Agency and the industry department for Scotland, which has responsibility for the attraction of industry to Scotland. The cost of running LIS for the last four years in terms of salaries, administration expenses, travel, marketing and advertising are shown in actual cash terms and by conversion to a constant base of 1987-88 price levels in the table.

Year	Cash	1987-88 price base
1984-85	3,268,804	3,723,822
1985-86	3,484,781	3,747,882
1986-87	3,768,716	3,930,394
[1] 1987-88	3,594,033	3,594,033

[1] To 29 February 1988.

Before 1984-85 costs were not held in such a format that those attributable to LIS could be isolated.

Scorriton Down

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiries are being undertaken into allegations of malpractice among bomb disposal teams operating at Scorriton Down.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is not aware of any such allegations and neither the Ministry of Defence police nor the military authorities are conducting an inquiry in relation to personnel at Scorriton Down.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 March to the hon. Member for South Hams, Official Report, columns 214-15, if he can give an expected date for the recommencement of clearance operations at Scorriton Down.

Mr. Freeman: It is not generally our practice to give advance details of such operations.

US Army Tactical Missile System

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States army tactical missile system or a version of it has been offered to United Kingdom forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations have taken place between the Ministry of Defence police and the police forces of Wiltshire, Hampshire and Thames Valley on the use of Ministry of Defence police officers in the policing of protests against cruise missile training exercises from RAF Greenham Common; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Frequent meetings and consultations take place between the MOD police and the police forces named on these and other operational policing requirements.

RAF Catering Services

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to privatise the catering services at Royal Air Force establishments in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Contract catering was introduced at RAF Turnhouse and RAF Pitreavie Castle in 1986; there are at present no plans to extend it to other RAF stations in Scotland.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence spent approximately £16 million on management and computer consultancies during 1987.

Namibia (Uranium)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is, for each year since 1976, the total amount of uranium mined in Namibia which has been imported into Britain.

Mr. Sainsbury: None for my Department.

Ex-gratia Payments

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the likely cost of the ex-gratia payments that will now be made to service people who may have been disabled by negligence between 8 December 1986 and the coming into force of the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987; from which departmental budget this money is coming; and under what authority these payments are made.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible, at this stage, to estimate the likely cost of ex-gratia payments to service personnel injured or disabled as a result of incidents between 8 December 1986 and the coming into force of the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987. This is primarily because we cannot know what the eventual level and incidence of claims will be, but also because negotiations on the majority of those claims received so far are still at a relatively early stage. The cost of such ex-gratia payments, which are made in accordance with the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 8 December 1986, will be met from Defence votes.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria are used to determine eligibility for ex-gratia payments that can now be paid to those disabled or injured through possible negligence between 8 December 1986 and the coming into force of the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987; how many applications for these payments have been made; and how many payments have been made.

Mr. Freeman: Such payments will be determined in a way comparable to the settlement out of court of common law claims for damages, each one being considered and assessed to establish whether death or injury occurred in circumstances involving some degree of negligence on the part of the Crown. To date 85 claims have been received, the majority of which remain under negotiation. Five payments have so far been made, including an interim settlement.

Service Personnel (Accidents)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the cause of the increase in 1985 in the number of service people invalided out of the forces following an accident.

Mr. Freeman: There was no prominent cause for the increase in the number of cases invalided from the services in 1985 other than injuries sustained during sporting activities and falls and so on. The corresponding figure for 1986 is now available and is 169, showing a slight decrease.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his replies of 10 March 1987 Official Report, columns 173-74, to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, how many of those service men who (a) were invalided out and (b) died, were involved in accidents or misadventures of such a nature that disciplinary action was taken after an inquiry.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that records are not kept in a way that would enable the information to be provided without disproportionate cost.

AWACS Aircraft

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs have been created in Britain as a result of the deal to buy AWACS aircraft from Boeing.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 28 March 1988.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates were available to him before 11 June 1987 of the number of redundancies at Devonport dockyard which would follow the introduction of Devonport Management; and when he was first informed that the final number would be 3,400.

Mr. Sainsbury: The primary responsibility for manning levels in the royal dockyards rests with the contractors. For costing purposes, we had assumed 3,300 redundancies at Devonport over the seven years of the contract. However, as indicated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 24 February 1987, the only firm information available to my Department before 11 June 1987 was that Devonport Management Ltd. expected some 2,300 job losses by about 1990. At that stage, DML thought there would be little effect during the first year or so. It was not until August 1987, following a review of programme adjustments, that DML made known its revised assessment of 3,400 job losses over a similar period, including some 2,000 in 1987-88. I understand that in its first year the company now expects to have reduced the work force by 1,850, all but 48 of these job losses being achieved by voluntary redundancy or natural wastage.

EMPLOYMENT

Safety at Work (Brown Book)

16. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will provide the Health and Safety Commission with additional funding to enable it to make more easily available copies of the Brown Book guide to "Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations".

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission has been given a gross provision of £109·2 million for 1988-89. This is a substanital increase of £6·7 million over the previously planned provision for that year. It is for the commission and its executive to decide how best to allocate their resouces. The booklet on safety representatives and safety committees is available, price £2.

Specialist Inspectors

17. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the number of specialist inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1979 there were 224 specialist inspectors employed in the Health and Safety Executive. On 1 March 1988 there were 218.

Suffolk

18. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of employment in Suffolk.

Mr. Lee: At September 1984, the latest date for which county estimates are available, there were 221,000 employees in employment in Suffolk.

Non-Statutory Training Organisations

19. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much Government money is received by non-statutory training organisations in the current year.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to give total figures for Government support to non-statutory training organisations. Government funds made available to non-statutory training organisations through the Manpower Services Commission in 1987-88 included some £5·8 million for the improvement of the training infrastructure in their sectors. They also received substantial funds as YTS managing agents, including about £6 million from the MSC's large companies unit. details of funds allocated through MSC area offices are not available.

113. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taking in the light of recent reports to change non-statutory training organisations.

Mr. Nicholls: A recent report commissioned by the Manpower Services Commission concluded that the majority of non-statutory training organisations are effective, but made certain recommendations about how the performance of all the organisations might be improved. The Confederation of British Industry is currently consulting non-statutory training organisations about these recommendations. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider further steps in the light of the outcome of these consultations, and the advice of the Manpower Services Commission.

Job Vacancies

20. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish an analysis of known job vacancies by skill category required.

Mr. Lee: I will arrange for a table showing the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in Great Britain on 8 January 1988, analysed by occupation, to be published in the Official Report. Vacancies have risen by nearly 20 per cent. over the last year with increases for most occupations.

Adult Training

21. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy not to designate the adult training scheme under clause 26 of the Employment Bill in the lifetime of the current Parliament.

61. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy not to designate the adult training scheme under clause 26 of the Employment Bill in the lifetime of the current Parliament.

102. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy not to designate the adult training scheme under clause 26 of the Employment Bill in the lifetime of this Parliament.

Mr. Fowler: We have made it clear that the new employment training programme will be a voluntary one, and we have no plans to designate it.

24. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether refusal to participate in the adult training scheme will be grounds for withdrawal of benefit under the availability for work test.

28. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether refusal to participate in the adult training scheme could be grounds for withdrawal of benefit under the availability for work test.

70. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether refusal to participate in the adult training scheme will be grounds for withdrawal of benefit under the availability for work test.

82. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether refusal to participate in the adult training scheme will be grounds for withdrawal of benefit under the availability for work test.

116. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether refusal to participate in the adult training scheme will be grounds for withdrawal of benefit under the availability for work test.

Mr. Nicholls: We have made it clear that, as recommended by the Manpower Services Commission, the new employment training programme will be a voluntary one, and we have no plans to designate it as "Approved Training" for the purposes of section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975. Additionally, refusal to take up a place in the programme will not by itself be grounds for withdrawal of benefit under the availability for work test.

25. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which schemes he intends to designate as approved training under clause 26 of the Employment Bill.

49. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which schemes he intends to designate as approved training under clause 26 of the Employment Bill.

89. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which schemes he intends to designate as approved training under clause 26 of the Employment Bill.

Mr. Cope: The Secretary of State has no plans to designate any schemes.

41. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received asking him to reconsider his decision to require those participating in the adult training scheme to pay the first £5 of their travel expenses.

68. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received asking him to reconsider his decision to require those participating in the adult training scheme to pay the first £5 of their travel expenses.

110. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received asking him to reconsider his decision to require those participating in the adult training scheme to pay the first £5 of their travel expenses.

Mr. Nicholls: None. It was the unanimous recommendation of the Manpower Services Commission that only participants' travel expenses in excess of £5 should be met, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted this.

64. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what special arrangements are included for disabled people and those with special needs under the new adult training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: The new employment training programme will be locally planned and delivered in line with local needs, including the needs of disabled people. Where appropriate, supplementary funding will be available to assist in meeting higher costs associated with training people with special needs. There will also be special eligibility arrangements for disabled people. In addition, a range of specific help for trainees with disabilities will be available in the form of special aids to employment, adaptations to premises, a communicator service for deaf trainees and a personal reader service for blind trainees.

77. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received asking him to reconsider his decision to pay £10 per week plus benefit to those who participate in the adult training scheme.

94. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received asking him to reconsider his decision to pay £10 per week plus benefit to those who participate in the adult training schemes.

Mr. Nicholls: We have received a number of representations about the level of the training allowance to be paid to participants on the new employment training programme. The Government's decisions on the allowance, and on the other payments to be made to participants, implement in full the unanimous recommendations of the Manpower Services Commission. The allowance will give participants a lead of £10-£12 a week over their benefit entitlement and will ensure that they will be better off on the programme than remaining unemployed and on benefit.

111. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Training Commission to discuss the new integrated adult training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has regular contact with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission, which is being renamed the Training Commission in the Employment Bill, to consider a number of matters, including the new employment training programme. The Manpower Services Commission is currently working on the detailed arrangements to introduce the new programme from 5 September.

Vacancies (London)

22. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vacancies there are in jobcentres in the London area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: On 5 February 1988, the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies on the community programme, at jobcentres in the Greater London region was 33,800. This represents an increase of over 3 per cent. in the past year.

Labour Statistics

23. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest unemployment statistics for the Basingstoke-Alton travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lee: On 11 February 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the Basingstoke and Alton travel-to-work area was 2,500, or 3·3 per cent. of all employees in employment plus the unemployed.

109. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the level of unemployment in the last 12 months in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Lee: On 11 February 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the Yorkshire and Humberside region, seasonally adjusted and excluding school leavers was 245,700, a fall of 46,200 over the last 12 months.

103. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of employment.

Mr. Lee: By September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the employed labour force in Great Britain had risen for 18 consecutive quarters to 24,505,000. This represents an increase of 1,508,000 since March 1983. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces.

97. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the changes in unemployment levels in the northern region in the last 12 months.

Mr. Lee: On 11 February 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the northern region, seasonally adjusted and excluding school leavers was 187,300, a fall of 30,400 over the last 12 months.

95. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage increase in unemployment since May 1979.

Mr. Lee: Between May 1979 and February 1988, the number of adult unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom, on a consistent basis, increased by 119·7 per cent.

78. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the latest unemployment figures for South Yorkshire and Sheffield travel-to-work area expressed as a percentage.

Mr. Lee: On 11 February 1988, the numbers of unemployed claimants in the county of South Yorkshire, and the Sheffield travel-to-work area expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed were 16·1 per cent. and 14·1 per cent. respectively.

75. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current employment situation among the 18 to 25-year-old age group.

Mr. Lee: In January 1988 there were 774,000 unemployed claimants aged 18 to 24 in the United Kingdom, 197,000 fewer than in January 1987.

Analysis of the preliminary results of the labour force survey carried out in the spring of 1987 shows that there were an estimated 4,352,000 persons aged 18 to 24 in employment in Great Britain, 164,000 more than in spring 1986.

53. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 24,505,000 people in the employed labour force in Great Britain. This represents an increase of 1,508,000 since March 1983. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces.

38. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently employed in the north-west.

92. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently employed in the north-west.

Mr. Lee: In September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 2,550,000 people in the civilian employed labour force in the north-west region. This represents an increase of 26,000 since March 1983.

The figures have not been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed.

39. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the level of unemployment in the last 12 months in the east midlands.

Mr. Lee: On 11 February 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the east midlands region, seasonally adjusted and excluding school leavers, was 158,400, a fall of 32,900 over the last 12 months.

33. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the level of unemployment in the last 12 months in the west midlands.

Mr. Lee: On 11 February 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the west midlands region, seasonally adjusted and excluding school leavers, was 258,100—9·9 per cent. of the working population. This was the first time unemployment has fallen below 10 per cent. since April 1981 and is a fall of 61,100 over the last 12 months.

31. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the current trend in unemployment.

46. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of unemployment in the United Kingdom.

114. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures.

Mr. Lee: The seasonally adjusted level of adult unemployment fell further by 33,400 between January and February, to 2,531,300, the lowest figure on a consistent basis since February 1982. The figure has now fallen for 19 consecutive months, by 679,000 in total since July 1986, the largest sustained fall on record.

Agricultural Inspectors

26. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the number of Her Majesty's agricultural inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1979 there were 190 agricultural inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive. On 1 March 1988 there were 158. Recruitment to the inspectorate is at present under way.

Skillcentres

27. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he anticipates making a statement on the future of skillcentres.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment announced a review of the Skills Training Agency at the end of last year and has recently received an initial report which he is considering.

Strikes

29. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days were lost through strikes in November 1987 and in November 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin).

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

30. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of jobs that have been created through the enterprise allowance scheme since its inception.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. Since the inception of the enterprise allowance scheme in 1982 over 320,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own business. Latest survey evidence shows that for every 100 businesses continuing six months after the allowance has ended, 71 people, in addition to the recipient of the allowance and any business partner, are employed at that time. Two years after the allowance has ceased, the number of additional people employed rises to 114 per 100 firms surviving.

The surveys also show that for those completing a full year on the scheme 74 per cent. were still trading six months after the allowance ended and 65 per cent. two years after the allowance has ceased.

Youth Training Scheme

32. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what business he has calculated the briding allowance provided to young people while they wait for a YTS scheme.

Mr. Cope: The proposed YTS bridging allowance is designed to provide short-term payments for young people who have to wait for a few weeks for a YTS place after leaving a job or a previous YTS place. The allowance will be paid for a maximum of eight weeks, during which time the offer of a YTS place will be made. The allowance will be set initially at £15 per week, more than twice the level of child benefit.

42. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of YTS leavers enter employment with employers who did not supply their training or work experience.

Mr. Cope: The latest results from the Manpower Services Commission's regular follow-up surveys of YTS leavers show that, of those young people who left YTS schemes between April 1986 and September 1987, 30 per cent. were in full time employment with an employer who did not supply their training or work experience (or were self-employed) at the time of the surveys.

50. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will reimburse all travel costs to persons on YTS.

Mr. Cope: There are no plans to reimburse all travel costs to persons on YTS.

51. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for YTS trainees going into work, or further education and training.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission conducts regular follow-up surveys of all YTS leavers. The latest results show that, of those who left YTS schemes between April 1986 and September 1987, 75 per cent. were in work, further education or in training when surveyed.

66. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of young people receive their first choice option of YTS schemes.

Mr. Cope: I regret that this information is not available.

74. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of YTS leavers enter employment with the same employer who provided their training or work experience.

Mr. Cope: The latest results from the Manpower Services Commission's regular follow-up surveys on YTS leavers show that, of those young people who left YTS schemes between April 1986 and September 1987, 26 per cent. were full-time in employment with the employer who ran their YTS scheme or provided work experience at the time of the surveys.

81. Ms. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the most recent estimates of job substitution rates for YTS.

Mr. Cope: The latest estimates based on evidence from the 1985-86 YTS providers survey show a rate of job substitution of 6 per cent. This represents the proportion of training places that have replaced jobs for adults.

117. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of YTS leavers attain a recognised qualification.

Mr. Cope: The latest results from the 100 per cent. follow-up survey of YTS leavers in the period April 1986 to September 1987 show that 20 per cent. of leavers gained a qualification. However, during this period 90 per cent. of leavers from YTS were early leavers who had not completed their training course and, therefore, were not representative of all trainees. Most young people will not complete their two-year training programme until after March 1988. A national survey of those trainees who have stayed into their second year shows that 54 per cent. had already gained a qualification.

121. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of the YTS scheme.

Mr. Cope: The beginning of April marks the second anniversary of the two-year YTS. During the past two years, very important progress has been made. At any one time there are on average more than 400,000 young people in training, compared with 285,000 in 1985; and of course YTS now offers two years of training. In addition, of those young people who left YTS schemes between April 1986 and September 1987, a total of 75 per cent. went into work or futher education and training.

We are continuing to improve further the high quality of training on offer. Over 50 per cent. of trainees entering their second year on YTS had already gained a vocational qualification, and all YTS managing agents have to secure approved training organisations status if they are to continue to work with YTS.

Overall, YTS is making a major contribution to meeting the needs of employers and the wishes of young people. The task now is the ensure that YTS provides the opportunity for all young people who enter the labour market to gain the skills and qualifications which will enhance their job prospects and meet the demands of the labour market.

Professional and Executive Register

34. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the privatisation of Professional and Executive Recruitment.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) on 9 March at column 220.

Skilled Labour

35. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to encourage more skilled labour to become available in East Anglia and the south-east generally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: To secure the skills they need employers must provide proper incentives for people to acquire those skills, develop internal recruitment and make the necessary investment in training and upgrading of skills.

The Government have given a lead by more than doubling their investment in vocational education and training since 1979, especially through YTS for the 16 and 17-year-old age group, and now the new £1·4 billion employment training programme for unemployed adults, announced in the White Paper "Training for Employment" (Cm 316).

In East Anglia and the south-east generally more than 51,000 young people are expected to receive training under YTS during this financial year with expenditure planned at £117 million. In addition, 47,000 unemployed adults will have received skills training during the same period at a cost of £31 million. Training under YTS and the forthcoming employment training programme responds to the skill needs of local labour markets.

Literacy Tuition

36. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many pilot projects offering intensive literacy tuition to unemployed people are being set up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There are currently seven pilot projects operating which offer intense literacy tuition to unemployed adults. These have been set up under the wider opportunities training programme. They will assist the development of literacy training with the employment training programme for unemployed people that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has announced for September.

Factory Inspectors

40. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors the Health and Safety Executive had in place on 1 March.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 March 1988 there were 598 factory inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive.

55. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the number of Her Majesty's factory inspectors since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1979 there were 742 factory inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive. On 1 March 1988 there were 598. Recruitment to the inspectorate is at present under way.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report, the numbers of Health and Safety Executive factory inspectors in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year since the introduction of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers are as follows:

Year (1 January)	Factory Inspectors in Scotland	Factory Inspectors in Great Britain[1]
1976	53	568
1977	55	664
1978	61	691

1981	65	743
1982	61	690
1983	56	662
1984	51	634

Construction Industry

43. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the Chief Inspector of Factories to consider ways of improving safety in the construction industry.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the Chief Inspector of Factories on 2 December 1987, when one of the subjects discussed was the initiative being taken by the Health and Safety's to encourage the construction industry to improve its safety record.

Tourism

44. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people employed in tourism and tourism-related industry in the county of Lancashire.

Mr. Lee: There were an estimated 37,000 employees in employment in tourism-related industries in the county of Lancashire in September 1984, the latest date for which information is available. This figure does not include the self-employed, for whom a comparable estimate is not available.

120. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the workings of section 4 tourist grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: A recent study by Department of Employment economists showed that the section 4 scheme has a significant effect in supporting local and regional employment, and makes a contribution to helping the tourism industry operate more efficiently and effectively. We continue to keep the scheme under review.

93. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the rate per week at which jobs are being created in the tourism sector.

Mr. Lee: No information is available on the rate per week at which jobs in the tourism sector are created. However, there has been a net increase of 43,000 in the estimated number of employees in employment in tourism-related industries over the year to September 1987. These figures exclude the self-employed, for whom comparable estimates are not available.

Availability for Work Test

54. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the grounds for withdrawal of benefit under the availability for work test.

79. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the grounds for withdrawal of benefit under the availability for work test.

Mr. Lee: The requirement that a person be available for work is a fundamental condition for the receipt of unemployment benefits. It was re-enacted most recently in the Social Security Act 1975.

The condition means that a person must be available for work with an employer and must not restrict their job-seeking, in terms of the hours, days, pay, location or type of employment they are willing to accept, to such an extent that they effectively have no reasonable prospect of securing work within those restrictions.

88. Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to extend the application of the availability for work test.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern). Official Report, Monday 14 December, at columns 337-38. This is an area which I shall continue to keep under review.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps have been taken to improve morale in the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: While the Director General of the Health and Safety Executive accepts that there are some problems arising from the pay and promotion prospects of certain groups of staff, he does not take the view that there is anything generally wrong with morale in the executive.

Health and Safety

59. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what priority he accords to reliance on self-regulation in maintaining health and safety at the workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: Self-regulation is fundamental to the operation of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. The Health and Safety Commission itself includes representatives of employers and employees as well as local authorities, and its proposals for regulations and codes are based on extensive consultation with those affected by them. Employers are responsible under the Act for applying its general provisions to their work force and for preparing written health and safety policies, and are subject to such inspection as the commission considers generally appropriate.

85. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make available the research study on the Health and Safety Executive carried out by the socio-legal studies department at Wolfson college, Oxford.

Mr. Nicholls: The research study by the centre for socio-legal studies at Wolfson college into aspects of policy and enforcement is not yet complete. A decision on its eventual publication is a matter for the centre.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the location, address and staff complement of each Health and Safety Executive office in the United Kingdom in each year since 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The location, address and staff complement since 1978 for the Health and Safety Executive's headquarters, each area and for each research and laboratory services division site is as follows. It is not possible to show separately those staff located in sub-offices or outstationed. These staff are included in the appropriate area office total.

(c) In 1985, one person was given a suspended prison sentence of one month, and in 1987 one person was given two suspended prison sentences of nine months (to run consecutively). These sentences related to offences under the Health and Safety at Work etc Act and associated legislation. None of them occurred in Scotland.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the average fine handed out for offences under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act for (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year since 1978.

Caravan and Holiday Parks

48. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the development of the caravan and holiday park industry.

Mr. Lee: The caravan and holiday park industry makes a major contribution to tourism in this country. It is estimated to produce an annual turnover in excess of £800 million and to provide over 200,000 jobs. I welcome the industry's efforts to improve its training and to provide higher standards by introducing codes of practice, and a grading scheme, produced by the British Holiday and Home Parks Association and the National Caravan Council in conjunction with the English Tourist Board. I was also pleased to learn of the industry's plans to invest £3 million in a national campaign to raise the profile of caravan holidays.

Equal Opportunities

52. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what rights against sex discrimination a woman will have under the Government's proposed new training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: It is unlawful under section 14 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 for the Manpower Services Commission to discriminate against a woman in the provision of training for employment. Furthermore, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be designating the new adult training programme under section 14(2)(d) of the Act. This will render unlawful discrimination by persons providing training on behalf of the Manpower Services Commission.

67. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to announce the findings of the consultative document on the restrictions on the employment of young people and the removal of sex discrimination in legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: I am at present considering with my colleagues the responses we have received to the consultative document. I hope to bring forward appropriate legislation in due course.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

37. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: Since the enterprise allowance scheme began in 1982, over 320,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own business: 102,500 places are available this year, although this figure is likely to be exceeded; 110,000 places will be available next year.

School Leavers

54. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of school leavers within the metropolitan borough of Rotherham secured full-time employment apart from Government schemes in 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: Records maintained by the metropolitan borough of Rotherham careers service show that at 10 March 1988, 545 (18.6 per cent.) of the 16-year-old pupils who left school in Rotherham in 1987 were in employment outside YTS. Separate figures for full and part-time employment are not available.

Enterprise in Higher Education Initiative

56. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the Training Commission's enterprise in higher education initiative.

Mr. Nicholls: Since the launch of the initiative on 9 December 1987 there has been a most pleasing level of institutional interest Four one-day workshops were held for institutions in early February. The total attendance was in excess of 300 with 143 institutions represented. Outline bids for first round funding have been received from 85 institutions. Each institution will be notified shortly about the outcome of its bid.

Local Employer Networks

57. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many local employer networks have been established; and what has been the cost to his Department.

Mr. Nicholls: Eighty Seven employer networks had been contracted by 18 March with a further five applications under consideration.

Some £3·7 million has been allocated to the project, which is a collaborative venture between the CBI, Association of British Chambers of Commerce and the Manpower Services Commission.

Channel Tunnel

58. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when representatives of the Health and Safety Executive last visited the Channel tunnel construction site to assess safety levels.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive last visited the Channel tunnel construction site at Shakespeare cliff, Dover, on 24 March 1988, and a further visit is planned for today.

Schools-Employers (Compacts)

60. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce compacts between schools and employers; and if he will make a statement.

65. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what resources he is making available to schools and local employers who wish to form a compact; and if he will make a statement.

72. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to promote the development of compacts between schools and employers in inner city areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks).

Unemployment

69. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next be meeting his EEC counterparts to discuss unemployment throughout Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I met European Commission colleagues on 14-15 March at an informal meeting of Labour Ministers. The meeting discussed a number of EC developments touching on unemployment, notably the future role of the European social fund and employment in the steel industry. I took the opportunity to draw attention to the continuing high level of unemployment across Europe. The next formal meeting will be on 9 June. I will, in the usual way, make a statement following that meeting.

Job Clubs

71. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the development of job clubs.

Mr. Lee: Since my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville), on 15 December 1987, at column 476, a further 51 job clubs have opened.

There are now 1,184 job clubs in operation. Some changes in eligibility rules were made early in March 1988 to reinforce help available to unemployed people at a disadvantage in the labour market. In particular, entry to job clubs was made easier for (i) people with disabilities, (ii) ex-offenders, (iii) clients of Manpower Services Commission's adult programmes, if they leave the programme unplaced.

In addition, the employment service is developing the job club programme in inner cities so as better to meet special needs.

100. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are attending job clubs in the northern region.

Mr. Lee: At 26 February, 1,682 people were attending job clubs in the northern region.

Vacancies (East Anglia)

73. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of vacancies registered at jobcentres in East Anglia.

Mr. Lee: On 5 February 1988, the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies on the community programme, at jobcentres in the East Anglia region was 7,764. This represents an increase of 29·6 per cent. since February 1987.

Disabled People

76. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in reviewing employment assistance for disabled people, his Department will be consulting interested groups.

Mr. Lee: This is an internal review which will take account of information and advice available already, including the study of the Tomlinson principles recently completed by the National Advisory Council on Employment of Disabled People. I would expect that conclusions that emerge from the review will be subject to the normal processes of consultation.

Enterprise Agencies

80. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the development of enterprise agencies.

Mr. Cope: Local enterprise agencies are independent private sector-led organisations and their future development must rest primarily with their boards and private sector sponsors. Through the local enterprise agency grant scheme, this Department is encouraging the development in England of a network of viable LEAs capable after five years (the scheme's duration) of surviving without specific Government funding. I set out in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) Official Report, 8 March, at column 117, certain modifications which have been made recently to increase the scheme's effectiveness in achieving its original objectives.

Small Businesses

83. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent evidence he has about the impact on levels of employment in small businesses of the various obligations discussed in "Building Businesses . . . not Barriers".

Mr. Cope: Removal of burdens on business is part of the Government's overall policy to encourage enterprise. The report "Encouraging Enterprise", presented to Parliament in May 1987 sets out progress made since the publication of "Building Businesses . . . not Barriers". It is not possible to quantify the impact of this single factor on employment in small business, but the overall success of Government policy is clear with the continuing growth in the number of small businesses and the self-employed.

Maternity Leave

87. Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to introduce legislation concerning the rights of women to maternity leave, in the light of the Court of Appeal decision on Ms. Dowuona v. John Lewis.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no such plans.

Mines and Quarries Inspectors

90. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the number of Her Majesty's mines and quarries inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of mines and quarries inspectors has fallen from 116 in 1979 to 76 on 1 March 1988. This closely reflects the changes that have taken place, primarily in the mining industry, in size and structure over the same period.

"Training for Employment"

96. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received on the proposals contained in the White Paper "Training for Employment"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: We have received some 150 representations on the proposals contained in the White Paper "Training for Employment". The White Paper sets out the Goverment's plans for securing continuing reductions in unemployment and for sustaining jobs growth. It calls on employers, individuals and trade unions to play their part, in particular to equip longer-term unemployed people for the jobs which the economy is generating. We believe that the soundness of the approach set out in the White Paper is widely recognised.

Training Programme (Allowances)

98. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress to discuss the training allowance payable to trainees on the new unified training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. As announced in the recent White Paper "Training for Employment", the training allowances to be paid to trainees on the new employment training programme will be those unanimously recommended by the Manpower Services Commission, which includes three commissioners nominated by the Trades Union Congress.

Small Firms Service

99. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries were handled by the Small Firms Service in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: During the calendar year 1987, the small firms service in England dealt with 259,638 inquiries.

Holiday Accommodation

101. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is being done to ensure that self-catering holiday accommodation is maintained at a high standard.

Mr. Lee: The English Tourist Board offered a total of nearly £1 million in the 1986-87 financial year towards the costs of developing and upgrading self-catering accommodation. At the beginning of 1988, the board introduced the holiday homes approval scheme. Accommodation approved under this voluntary scheme will have met minimum standards of cleanliness and quality.

Contracts (Small Firms)

104. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received, following the publication of "Tendering for Government Contracts," from small firms, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) on Tuesday 2 February 1988, Official Report, column 558.

Vacancies (South-West)

105. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies registered at jobcentres in the south-west.

Mr. Lee: On 5 February 1988, the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies on the community programme, at jobcentres in the south-west region was 16,758. This represents an increase of 8·7 per cent. since February 1987.

Catering Industry

106. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he is doing to promote the image of the catering industry among tourists.

Mr. Lee: We are assisting the industry to maintain and improve standards of professionalism and service through the tourism training initiative, the work of the Manpower Services Commission and the work of the statutory training and tourist bodies.

Agriculture Industry

107. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what additional funding was made available for the Health and Safety Executive's recent campaign to reduce the number of accidents in the agriculture industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The costs of this campaign were met from within the overall provision made to the Health and Safety Commission and Executive for 1987-88, which was increased by £1 million during the year.

American Visitors

108. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many American visitors came to Britain in 1987; and how much they spent.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not yet available for the whole of 1987. However, in the 12 months to September 1987, residents of the United States of America made 2,705,000 visits to the United Kingdom and spent £1,431 million. Comparable figures for 1986 are 2,342,000 and £1,253 million for visits and spending respectively.

Trade Unions (Postal Ballots)

112. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the proposals, embodied in the Employment Bill, to compel trade unions to hold the elections of their principal executive officers by secret postal ballot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In addition to comments on the proposal contained in chapter 5 of the Green Paper "Trade Unions and Their Members", my Department continues to receive letters and requests for meetings about the Employment Bill provision to require fully postal voting for the election of all general secretaries, presidents and members of union principal executive committees.

Restart Programme

115. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many long-term unemployed have been offered help to date under the restart programme.

Mr. Lee: Since 1 July 1986, some 3·2 million interviews have taken place under the restart programme, of which just under 90 per cent. have resulted in an offer of positive help being made.

Nuclear Installations Inspectors

118. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to increase the numbers of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: The staffing of the nuclear installations inspectorate is a matter for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. Their current plans provide for a total of 121 nuclear installations inspectors in 1988-89. A decision has yet to be taken on further increases.

Industrial Tourism

119. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he is doing to stimulate industrial tourism.

Mr. Lee: I shall continue to take every opportunity to promote the potential benefits to be gained by companies exploiting their potential as tourist attractions. The CBI is demonstrating support by organising a conference on this subject on 15 September this year at which I shall be speaking. In addition, the English tourist board is to work with the CBI to produce a booklet designed to provide encouragement, advice and information to companies considering entering this field.

Accidents at Work

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of people killed and (b) the number of people injured in accidents at work (i) in Scotland and (ii) in the United Kingdom, in each year since 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for accidents reported to Her Majesty's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates and to the local authorities in Scotland and Great Britain as a whole is as follows.

Industrial Diseases

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of people who have died from industrial diseases in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year since 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The available statistics are as shown. The numbers have been obtained by combining figures for death benefit awards under the industrial injuries and pneumoconiosis, byssinosis and miscellaneous diseases benefit schemes with figures of certifications that death was due to pneumoconiosis made under the workers' compensation scheme.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of working days lost in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a result of (i) accidents and illness at work and (ii) strike action in each year since 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: Table 1 shows the available information for the estimated number of days of certified incapacity resulting from compensated industrial accidents and prescribed diseases in Scotland and in Great Britain. Small Businesses (Health and Safety)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to introduce health and safety advice centres to assist knowledge of and resource capacity to tackle health and safety at work problems among small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no such plans. Area offices of the Health and Safety Executive and local authorities with responsibilities for health and safety enforcement already offer help and advice to small businesses throughout the country.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Lee: Payments made by the Department of Employment Group, excluding the Manpower Services Commission, in 1987 on management and computer consultancy amounted to £904,000.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount spent by the Manpower Services Commission in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Lee: The Manpower Services Commission spent a total of £1·6 million during the calendar year 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Health and Safety Executive (Dundee)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's decision to close the Health and Safety Executive office in Dundee as from 1 April.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission and Executive are responsible for the deployment of their staff. Their decision to close the Dundee office was taken because it no longer presents a viable base for the efficient organisation of inspection. The planned redeployment of staff will not reduce the present service in Dundee or the rest of HSE's Scotland east area.

Tourism (China)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many British tourists have visited China in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the number of visits to China by United Kingdom residents in the five years 1982 to 1986 are as follows.

British Soldiers (Murders)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to how many persons identified from pictures of the attack on two members of her Majesty's forces on Saturday 19 March have served prison sentences; and for what offences.

Mr. Stanley: No. The Chief Constable is currently carrying out a full and thorough investigation into these barbaric murders. It would not be appropriate for me to comment at this stage of the inquiries.

Terrorist Killings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the British subjects murdered by terrorists when they were (a) living in and (b) visiting the Irish Republic since 1 January 1969, and in how many of those cases he has information on (i) whether persons were charged and brought before the courts in the Irish Republic and (ii) how many of those cases resulted in a guilty verdict and prison sentence.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 21 March 1988]: This information in respect of British subjects normally resident in Northern Ireland is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. This information in respect of other British subjects is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to on how many occasions during the last 15 years, when persons were murdered by terrorists in Northern Ireland and the killers were known to have left the scene of the murder and crossed the land frontier into the Irish Republic, an assistant commissioner of the Garda was put in charge of inquiries made in the Irish Republic as to the identity of the murderers.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 21 March 1988]: I understand that in all murders with a cross-border dimension the Garda carry out their own investigations. I have no information regarding the rank of the Garda officer in charge of each investigation.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by name, date and place the persons killed by terrorists since 1969 where the victims were in Northern Ireland and the killers were in the Irish Republic when the incident leading to each death took place; whether in each case any persons were (a) charged, (b) brought before the courts, (c) sentenced to a term of imprisonment and (d) acquitted or otherwise released; and if he will also indicate whether the method used to commit the crime was shooting, remote-controlled explosion, radio-detonated bomb, or other method.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 21 March 1988]: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, since the beginning of 1987, the only person killed in Northern Ireland by a terrorist operating in the Republic of Ireland was lance Corporal Thomas Hewitt who was murdered by the Provisional IRA on 19 July whilst on patrol in Belleek, Co Fermanagh. The gunman carried out the murder from a firing point within the Republic of Ireland. On 31 July 1987 Michael Joseph Heron was charged in the Republic of Ireland with possession of a firearm with intent in relation to this murder. He was subsequently convicted at Dublin special criminal court in February 1988 and sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

Lord Justice Gibson

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the rank of the Garda officer who was appointed to take charge of inquiries into the murder of Lord Justice Gibson.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 21 March 1988]: None.

Mr. Newton: We are considering Sir Roy Griffiths' recommendations, taking account of the report of the committee chaired by Lady Wagner on residential care, and of reactions to both reports. The Government will bring forward their own proposals in due course.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many married women are in receipt of category B retirement pensions; and what is the average weekly amount.

Mr. Scott: Some 1·9 million married women were receiving category B retirement pension in Great Britain at 30 September 1987. 98 per cent. were entitled to the full basic pension of £23·75; about one half received more than a basic pension by way of earnings-related pension or other increases.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many mental hospital beds have been closed in each health region in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the number of beds provided by mental handicap and mental illness hospitals in England that were approved for closure between 1979 and December 1986 (the latest date for which figures are available) by region and year. Mentally-ill People

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychosis have been discharged from mental hospitals in each health region in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the numbers of discharges from mental illness hospitals and units in England for the years 1980-86. Data for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It should be noted that some patients are admitted for a hospital stay more than once during the year. The information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Government Data Network

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if Electronic Data Service has advised his Department on any matters concerning the Government data network.

Mr. Portillo: Electronic Data Systems Ltd (EDS) was a member of one of the consortia originally interested in the Government data network project. During 1986 they had discussions with the DHSS and other Government Departments. It withdrew itself from consideration in January 1987.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many community psychiatric nurses there were in each health region in England and Wales in 1979; how many there are at present; and how many he estimates there will be in 1991.

Mr. Newton: Information in the exact form requested is not collected centrally. The number of nursing staff employed in the community psychiatric service in each region in England at September 1981 and September 1986 is shown in the table. Comparable information is not available for 1979.

It is for indiviual health authorities to plan the future number of community psychiatic nursing staff they require in the light of their needs and the resources which can be devoted to meet those needs.

The information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the case for guidance and direction to be given to preserve a separation of function and interest between social security appeal tribunals and departmental officers presenting cases before them in the last three years.

Mr. Portillo: In 1986 a central management support team examined the procedures for handling appeals in DHSS offices. A copy of the final report has been placed in the Library. The report included a recommendation that adjudication officers needed to be made more aware of the exact function of the presenting officer at an appeal and that the recommendation should be brought to the attention of the training branches responsible for appeals courses. This recommendation has already been implemented.

Moreover the adjudication officers' guide, Vol. 1 paras. 05289 et seq. also gives guidance as to the conduct of the adjudication officer when presenting an appeal. The adjudication officers' guide will be published on 30 March and copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the last three years (a) internal disciplinary action or (b) prosecutions have been taken relating to cases where social security appeals have been compromised by demonstrated collusion between departmental officers presenting cases and the appeal tribunals.

Mr. Portillo: I am not aware of any such incidents, but if the hon. Member has a specific case in mind I will have the matter investigated.

Mental Patients

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new mental hospital beds have been opened in each health authority in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Alcohol and Art (Exhibition)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to alcohol and art to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 6 to 10 June.

Circulars

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many circulars have been issued by the Health Service Management Board in the last 12 months; and on what topics.

Mrs. Currie: The Department issued 63 health circulars and health notices on issues concerning hospital and community health services to health authorities in the period from 1 March 1987 to 1 March 1988. Other guidance and information was issued by letter and through bulletins. Following is a list of the circulars and notices:

Contaminated Foodstuffs (Imports)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further steps he intends to take to prevent the import of contaminated foodstuffs.

Mrs. Currie: No further steps are required. The powers available under the Imported Food Regulations 1984 relating to the importation of food for human consumption which is unfit, unsound or unwholesome together with those in the Food Act 1984 give the responsible authorities adequate control.

Clinical Physicists

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the reasons why clinical physicists are not included in the pay review body structure.

Mr. Newton: The claims of hospital physicists to be included in the pay review body structure were fully considered by Ministers in 1984 and 1985. It was decided that their pay should remain a matter for the Whitley council. That position is unchanged.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Moore: £19·425 million.

Pharmaceuticals (Adverse Reactions)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 26 February, column 364, if he will name the two pharmaceutical companies being investigated for failing to report serious adverse reactions to their products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The investigations referred to in my reply of 26 February are into allegations of failure to report serious adverse reactions. It is not the policy of the Department to divulge names simply on the basis of allegations since this could cause unjustifiable damage to public confidence in a medicinal product and to the reputation of the licence holder. However in one case allegations naming the company were made publicly and the right hon. Member is already aware that we are investigating these. Inquiries are continuing in both cases.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if a report is available on achievements under the United Nations world programme of action concerning disabled persons.

Mr. Scott: The Secretary-General of the United Nations has produced two reports: one on the implementation of the world programme of action concerning disabled persons and the United Nations decade of disabled persons (A/45/551) and another report on the evaluation of the implementation of the world programme of action concerning disabled persons during the first half of the United Nations decade of disabled persons (A/42/561). Copies of both of these reports have been deposited in the Library.

Access Committee for England

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the work of the Access Committee for England and its plans for its next period of office.

Mr. Scott: The Access Committee for England has performed much valuable work to promote the interests of disabled people. I expect this to continue in the light of the terms of reference being prepared by the Centre on Environment for the Handicapped, the body asked by the Government to run the Access Committee for England, and the prospective appointment of a new access director.

Income Support

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made an estimate of the number of people who will be on income support in (a) Greenock, (b) Port Glasgow, (c) Strathclyde region and (d) Scotland as a whole in April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that no reliable estimates are available.

Family Credit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made an estimate of the number of people who will be eligible for family credit in (a) Greenock, (b) Port Glasgow, (c) Strathclyde region and (d) Scotland as a whole in April.

Mr. Portillo: No. I regret that estimates are possible only on a national basis. However, if the proportion of the Great Britain total were to remain the same as in family income supplement, around 54,000 families in Scotland could be expected to receive family credit.

Housing Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made an estimate of the number of people who will lose their entitlement to housing benefit in (a) Greenock, (b) Port Glasgow, (c) Strathclyde region and (d) Scotland as a whole from 11 April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The estimates made relate to Great Britain as a whole.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will include medical laboratory scientific officers in the remit of the special bodies considering other salaries within the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: The salaries of medical laboratory scientific officers are a matter for negotiation in the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council.

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many principal medical laboratory scientific officers there are in England and Wales in the National Health Service; and whether he has any plans to alter that number.

Mr. Newton: The number of principal medical laboratory scientific officers in post in England on 30 September 1986 was 90 (whole-time equivalents). The number is dependent upon the requirements of individual health authorities; grading is determined according to criteria laid down in the agreements of the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council. Figures for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the grades of medical laboratory scientific officers; what is the maximum salary for each grade; and after what length of service such maximum is achieved.

Mr. Newton: The information in respect of qualified medical laboratory scientific officer grades is as follows:

Grade	Salary maximum £	Annual incremental points
Medical laboratory scientific officer	9,435	10
Senior medical laboratory scientific officer	11,577	10
Chief medical laboratory scientific officer	12,663	6
Senior chief medical laboratory scientific officer	14,963	6
Principal medical laboratory scientific officer	17,201	2

Note: The salary scale point to which an officer may be appointed or promoted is determined by Whitley council agreement.

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the rate of turnover of medical laboratory scientific officers in the National Health Service for each of the last three years.

Mr. Newton: This information is not available centrally. The number of qualified medical laboratory scientific officers in post in England for each of the last three years for which figures are available is as follows:

NHS Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers
(at 30 September each year)

Year	Staff in Post Whole Time Equivalents (England) Staff
1984	10,650
1985	10,930
1986	11,060

Tooth Decay

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals for making parents more aware of methods of fighting tooth decay in children; and if he will make fluoride tablets available free of charge on prescription for children where supplies are not fluoridated.

Mrs. Currie: The White Paper on primary care "Promoting Better Health" indicated that the Government proposed to launch further incentives to promote dental awareness and regular attendance at the dentist. Discussions are taking place with the dental profession and the Health Education Authority on the implementation of this proposal. Fluoride tablets are available on prescription free of charge to children under the age of 16.

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department was consulted before the commencement of the manufacture of Skoal Bandits in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department was consulted.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 362, for what reason he proposes to use section 11 rather than section 13 of the Consumer Protection Act to ban Skoal Bandits; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Government are proposing to ban the supply of certain oral tobacco products. Section 13 would not be appropriate as it allows only for action to be taken against named individuals or companies. Section 11 allows action to be taken against products.

Low-income Families

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish the low-income families tables derived from the family expenditure survey for 1985.

Mr. Portillo: Following publication of the last edition in 1986, a technical review of the tables was announced and carried out by a team of the Department's officials with representation from the Central Statistical Office. I have now considered the report of the review and have placed copies in the Library. Copies are also available from the Department.

The report identifies a number of methodological weaknesses in the current tables, particularly in the use of the supplementary benefit scale rates as the yardstick for the measurement of low income. One problem is that there are two scale rates, so that two families each shown as having income at the scale rate level may have significantly different incomes. A second problem is that any increase in the value of the scale rate tends to increase the numbers appearing to be on "low income". The tables give no indication of whether those in the lower income groups were becoming better or worse off in real terms.

In view of these and other weaknesses, and the imminent end of the supplementary benefit scheme itself, the report recommends the introduction of a number of new analyses based on income measures which would be broadly independent of the social security rules and rates, and which could therefore continue unaffected by the forthcoming benefit changes. The report includes detailed proposals for these new tables, which would include data on changes in real living standards and new analyses of the contribution of benefits to income in the lower ranges. Overall, the proposed new tables — which would be entitled "Households below average income: a statistical analysis" — would be significantly more extensive than the current series.

The next edition of tables is due to cover the years 1981, 1983 and 1985, and, to ensure a proper overlap between the existing and the new series, the report recommends that data on both bases should be published for all three years. In addition, to facilitate analysis of longer-term trends, the report proposes that a later edition should include data for a much earlier year — probably 1971.

I welcome the report's proposals which would put the series on a more robust footing and extend the range of data published on a regular basis. Accordingly, I intend to publish within the next few weeks a final edition of the previous tables, covering 1981, 1983 and 1985, together with the first edition of the new tables for the same years.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the numbers of lower paid families, with and without children, whose marginal tax rates including benefit withdrawal will be (a) 90 to 100 per cent., (b) 80 to 90 per cent., (c) 70 to 80 per cent., (d) 60 to 70 per cent., (e) 50 to 60 per cent. and (f) 40 to 50 per cent. after the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 and taking into account the Budget tax changes for 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 25 March 1988 at column 243-44.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any proposals from Yorkshire regional health authority for the merger of existing district health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have not received any such merger proposals from Yorkshire regional health authority. Proposals for the merger of Leeds Eastern and Leeds Western; Bradford and Airedale; and East Yorkshire and Hull health authorities were discussed by the authority at its meeting on 28 January 1988, but were rejected.

Leeds Western Health Authority

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to announce the appointment of a new chairman for Leeds western health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: In due course. The current chairman's resignation does not take effect until 31 August 1988.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the percentage of total abortions carried out on women normally resident outside the United Kingdom and where pregnancy was of 18 weeks or more gestation carried out by the 11 consultant gynaecologists in the private sector who undertook the largest number of such operations in each year since 1968.

Mr. Newton: No, for reasons of maintaining confidentiality.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list by place of residence for each year since 1968 the number of women usually resident outside the United Kingdom where pregnancy was of 18 weeks or more gestation who had an abortion in a National Health Service hospital, and the grounds under which the operations were carried out;

(2) if he will list by place of residence for each year since 1968 the number of women usually resident outside the United Kingdom where pregnancy was of 18 weeks or more gestation who had an abortion in a non-National Health Service hospital or clinic, and the grounds under which the operations were carried out.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the full information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the table shows readily available data for 1986 which may be of interest to my hon. Friend.

Notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967. Non-residents of England and Wales by country of usual residence and grounds. Gestation 18 completed weeks and over. England and Wales 1986.

Statutory Grounds:

1 The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk to the life of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.

2 The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.

3 The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk or injury to the physical or mental health of any existing child(ren) in the family of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.

4 There is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped, or in emergency, certified by the operating practitioner as immediately necessary—

Benefits

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people each year serve two periods of waiting days as a result of transferring from statutory sick pay to unemployment benefit;

(2) if he will estimate the costs of introducing a linking rule between statutory sick pay and unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available of the number of people claiming unemployment benefit within eight weeks of receiving statutory sick pay. However, a rough estimate is that there may be approximately 50,000 a year. Based on this assumption the cost of a linking rule between these benefits would be about £850,000 a year.

New Hospital, Oldham

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the current levels of waiting lists, he will take steps to ensure that sufficient funds are made urgently available to Oldham health authority in 1986 to 1989 to ensure that the new hospital will be fully opened in the next financial year.

Mr. Newton: Decisions on the allocation of resources at local level is a matter for Oldham health authority in conjunction with the regional health authority.

Pensions

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date in 1987 the basic pension was increased; and on what date in 1988 the basic pension will be increased.

Mr. Scott: Under section 63 of the Social Security Act 1986, the uprating of retirement pension takes place each year in the week beginning with the first Monday in the tax year. In 1987 this was 6 April. In 1988, the first Monday in the tax year is 11 April.

Northern General Hospital, Sheffield

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services for how long and why admissions were stopped to the Northern general hospital, Sheffield, on the evening of Monday 21 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Responsibility for the management of local health services rests with the district health authority (in this case Sheffield). May I suggest the hon. Member should contact the chairman of that authority for the information he seeks.

Ritalin

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 712, whether the drug Ritalin is still available on National Health Service prescription from general practitioners as a treatment for narcolepsy.

Mr. Newton: No. Ritalin is no longer licensed under the Medicines Act and has been withdrawn from the market. However, I understand that it is available direct from the manufacturer at the request of a doctor in respect of an individual patient.

Northern Regional Health Authority

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the costs to public funds of the administration of Northern regional health authority and Sunderland district health authority in each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: Tables showing each health authority's expenditure on headquarters administration for the years 1979-80 to 1986-87 (the latest available) are in the Library.

General Practice Finance Corporation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the future of the General Practice Finance Corporation.

Mr. Newton: The Government's plans for the future of the General Practice Finance Corporation were announced in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249), published last November. Subject to Parliament's approval for the Health and Medicines Bill the constitution of the corporation will be changed to facilitate maximum use of private sector funds. In the meantime, the existing arrangement for borrowing from public sector funds is continuing.

To lead the corporation during this important period of change, I am pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Derek Hughes, the current deputy chairman, to fill the chairman vacancy, and Dr. Alistair Riddell to replace Mr. Hughes as deputy chairman.

We look forward to further discussion with the corporation and representatives of the profession as we carry our proposals forward. The corporation's annual report for 1986-87 is presented to Parliament today.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for appointing chairmen and members of family practitioner committees to the vacancies occurring in 1989.

Mr. Newton: The term of office of 54 chairmen and of about half the total membership of family practitioner committees ends on 31 March 1989. If hon. Members wish to recommend any individuals as chairmen or as members, I invite them to write to me by 3 May. Reappointments and changes will be announced in due course.

AIDS and Drug Misuse

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish the first report on AIDS and drug misuse by the Advisory Committee on the Misuse of Drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have today published the first report on AIDS and drug misuse from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs (ACMD). The Government welcome the ACMD's advice on a subject which has serious and wide-ranging public health implications. The spread of the AIDS virus through shared injecting equipment adds a new dimension to drug misuse. It presents a grave threat, not only to drug misusers themselves, but to the babies of infected mothers, to the sexual partners of drug misusers and from them to a wider population.

The report is concerned with measures to prevent the spread of infection. As it makes clear, the prevention of drug misuse is now more important than ever before. It is self-evident that if people do not start using drugs in the first place they do not put themselves at risk of infection through this route. We remain, therefore, determined to prevent the misuse of drugs, both through tough law enforcement measures to reduce the supply of illicit drugs, and through effective education and information to make it less likely that young people will be tempted to try them. Our strategy will continue to be taken forward through the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs.

But we must recognise that there is a population currently at risk of acquiring the AIDS virus through their injecting drug misuse, and I accept the ACMD's advice that services should be developed in order to make contact with as many of that population as possible. In recent years we have invested in a significant expansion of drug misuse services, and emphasised the need for the community-based response which the report endorses.

The report makes a number of recommendations on ways in which services might seek to attract drug misusers, to keep them in contact, and to change their behaviour away from practices which might result in their becoming infected, or passing on infection. Services should be prepared as necessary to advise and encourage drug misusers to reduce the health risks associated with their drug misuse — to themselves and to others — as an intermediate goal in getting them to stop drug misuse altogether. Some of the recommendations will require detailed consultation with interested agencies, but in the meantime I am making copies of the report available to health and local authorities in England. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be taking parallel action for health and local authorities in those countries.

The ACMD recommends that sterile injecting equipment should be widely available, through an expansion of syringe exchange schemes, and sales through pharmacies. We have considered this recommendation carefully in conjunction with the preliminary findings of an evaluation of 15 "pilot" syringe exchange schemes around the country. While the evaluation points to some promising features of such schemes, we do not consider that we yet have sufficient evidence to recommend an expansion of schemes in England. I accept however that some local agencies in England and Wales have already decided to set up their own exchange schemes, and that more may do so. In order that such schemes should operate as effectively and responsibly as possible, I intend to make available guidance based upon the principles underlying the pilot schemes and drawing on the early lessons of the evaluation. Similar action will be taken in Wales, and further consideration will be given there to the place of needle exchange in broader projects of treatment, counselling and rehabilitation with appropriate professional support.

The report also deal with the treatment of drug misusers in prison, and welcomes the policy statement issued to prison medical officers and others concerned in September 1987. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland have considered the ACMD's recommendation concerning the availability of condoms in prison, but believe that it fails to take account of all the relevant factors, including the effect which a resulting increase in homosexual activities would have in terms of risk of HIV infection and otherwise. They do not intend to make any change in present policy in this respect.

We endorse the ACMD's view that there will be a continuing need for national and local publicity about the link between AIDS and drug misuse. Last year we launched two parallel campaigns designed to deter young people from starting to use drugs, and to warn of the particular dangers—of which AIDS is the most serious—of injecting drug misuse. We are evaluating those campaigns and will be considering future information needs in the light of the evaluation findings.

The measures advocated by the report will require that all professionals and other staff in contact with drug misusers are adequately trained to deal with the new demands made upon them. We will be discussing with the relevant training bodies how best to ensure this. In Wales, the Welsh Committee on Drug Misuse will be consulted on the way ahead as regards both training and publicity aspects.

Finally, we intend to monitor carefully the measures we are taking, to assess their effectiveness.

Health Authority Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each district health authority and special health authority for 1986 the total number of staff expressed as the total number of staff and as whole time equivalents in the following categories (a) medical and dental, (b) nursing and midwifery, (c) professional and technical, (d) administration and clerical, (e) ancillary and (f) total non-medical staff.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 7 December 1987]: The information the hon. Member requested has now been placed in the Library.

Geriatric Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evaluation has been made by his Department of the contribution of qualified geriatric nurses to the success of community care initiatives relating to geriatric people and the use of such qualified nurses by local services in these initiatives.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 18 March 1988]: There is no current research or evaluation of the specific contribution of qualified nurses with geriatric training to the success of community care initiatives. However research is being undertaken by the centre of policy research and development at the university of North Wales which is looking at "Old Age, Health and Formal Domiciliary Support", which includes interviews with community nurses as part of an overall study of the working of care in the community.

There will be training in meeting the needs of elderly people during both district nurse and health visitor training, as well as the opportunity to attend the English National Board course in nursing elderly people. Elderly people requiring nursing care will be assessed by the trained nurse.

TRANSPORT

Tourism

123. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is being done to ensure that consideration is given to tourism before any decisions on motorway and trunk road developments and improvements are made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) on Thursday 26 November at columns 252-53.

Road Accidents

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents in each of the last five years involving heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles have been caused by the driver suffering a heart attack.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The STATS 19 road accident reporting system does not collect data on the causes of road accidents. The number of road accidents involving heavy goods vehicles and buses and coaches during the past three years are given in the table:

Accidents involving HGVs, buses and coaches: 1984-86
Number of accidents

	1984	1985	1986
Heavy goods vehicles	12,950	13,073	13,429
Bus or coach	12,647	12,313	11,988

Lorry Drivers (Health Checks)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce mandatory health checks on heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle drivers over the age of 50 years, especially those in high risk categories.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Proposals have recently been presented for drivers of heavy goods vehicles to have medical checks every five years from the age of 45 and annually from 65. This is in line with the present requirements for drivers of public service vehicles. We are now considering the results of public consultation on this issue.

Departmental Sponsorship

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for which industries his Department is the general sponsor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department exercises regulatory and other functions towards the civil aviation, shipping, ports, railways, public transport including taxi and hire car, and road haulage industries.

Rail Services (Overcrowding)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which rail lines are currently subject to particular overcrowding.

Mr. David Mitchell: I monitor carefully the performance of lines in those sectors for which loading standards have been agreed. The Government have approved record levels of investment on infrastructure and rolling stock to enable the board to relieve congestion and meet these quality standards. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport announced on 25 March a joint study with LRT and BR to develop a strategy to cater for projected growth in demand for rail services in central London.

British Rail (Lost Revenue)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the total revenue lost to British Rail per annum as a result of (a) fraud by passengers travelling without paying, (b) the effects of unmanned stations, (c) rolling stock problems and (d) staff shortages.

Mr. David Mitchell: The cost-effective and efficient operation of the railway is a matter for the board's commercial judgment in the light of its objectives and financial targets. The board estimates that about £34 million a year is lost through fraudulent travel, which is why the Government are supporting BR's private Bill to provide for the introduction of a system of penalty fares.

Driving Test Centre, Bristol

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the present service and staffing of his Department's driving test centre in Bristol, in view of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's statement in a letter to the hon. Member for Taunton on 15 February that the computerised system will be fully operational in March and there should then be a significant improvement in the service to the public.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Driving test bookings in the western traffic area will be fully computerised from 28 March.

The computer system is working satisfactorily. The associated telephone system is not. This is under urgent review within the Department. In the meantime public access has been limited to 10 am to noon and 2 pm to 4 pm daily.

Air Misses

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what criteria he used to determine whether an air miss falls into category A, B, or C, and who makes the determination;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report showing (a) the total number of air misses involving commercial aircraft, (b) the number of category A air misses, (c) the number of category B air misses and (d) the number of category C air misses for each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Air misses are assessed by the joint air miss working group (JAWG) an independent group composed of nominees from aviation bodies. JAWG follows International Civil Aviation Organisation guidelines in assessing an air miss as one of:

A: Definite Risk
B.: Possible Risk
C.: No Risk

The Civil Aviation Authority, which is wholly responsible for aviation safety regulation, publishes United Kingdom air miss statistics covering the last 10 years three times a year together with explanatory notes and copies are placed in the Library. The figures requested for commercial air transport aircraft involved in air misses over the last 20 years are as follows:

Traffic (Sizewell)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had on increased traffic on trunk roads serving the Sizewell area in Suffolk; and what responses he has made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Representations have been received from local authorities and others calling for early progress on the proposed A12 Farnham and Stratford St. Andrews bypass, and asking that the scheme should be extended to include other nearby villages on the trunk road. We have indicated that we hope to make an announcement about design arrangements for the scheme shortly. Further improvements will be considered for the programme when they can be justified.

Transport Ministers (Meeting)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met his counterparts from the other European Community countries; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Channon: At a formal meeting of European Community Transport Ministers on 14 March, we discussed the width of refrigerated vehicles; road haulage tariffs; procedures for checking recording equipment used in road haulage vehicles, and road haulage drivers' hours and related matters; charging transport infrastructure costs to heavy goods vehicles; access to the market for the carriage of goods by road between member states; and the weights and dimensions of commercial vehicles. I also took the opportunity to press for progress on shipping cabotage.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which organisations have made representations supporting his Department's proposals on motor cycle leg protection.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following organisations, replying to our limited consultation on a specification for leg protectors, supported the proposals:

The Medical Commission on Accident Prevention.
The Automobile Association.
The Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety.

Personalised Car Registration Numbers

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will widen the choice of personalised car registration numbers open to the motorist by putting unissued numbers on to the market.

Mr. Channon: I would like to be able to offer for sale a choice of the attractive registration numbers not currently in circulation. This would, I think, be a welcome addition to the existing arrangements for the private transfer and sale of numbers. As a first step I am today issuing a public consultation paper which sets out and invites comments on proposals for a scheme for selling numbers. In the light of the responses to it we shall decide whether, and if so how, to proceed with such a scheme, for which legislation would be required. I am placing copies of the consultation paper in the Library of the House.

A46/A17 Newark Relief Road

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will be able to announce the result of the tender for the A46/A17 Newark relief road.

Mr. Channon: I am pleased to announce that a contract has been awarded to A. F. Budge (Contractors) Ltd. of Retford for £31·5 million. This represents a saving of £3·5 million (10 per cent.) over the original tenders received in September 1987.

Work is planned to start on 18 April and take about two and a half years.

Transport-related Incidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many injuries have occurred in transport-related incidents in the United Kingdom in the last year.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

The number of injuries occurring in transport-related incidents is not collected centrally. However, there were 6,094 deaths registered in the United Kingdom in 1986 with an underlying cause of death assigned to transport accidents (International Classification of Diseases 9th revision E800-E848).

Portsmouth City Transport

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many different tenders have been made available to him in his consideration of applications for the sale of Portsmouth City Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Details of tenders from nine bidders in two rounds of bidding were made available.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the highest tender for Portsmouth City Transport accepted on 8 March was higher than, lower than, or the same as the highest bid made in the first round of tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The tender accepted by Portsmouth city council was lower than the highest bid made in the first round of tendering. It was, however, the highest bid made in the second round.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what basis he gave dispensation under section 74 of the Transport Act 1985, for Councillors F. Warner, F. Worley, A. Dann and S. Rapson, of Portsmouth city council, to speak and vote in the council on matters concerned with the sale of Portsmouth City Transport; on what date he received requests for such dispensation; and for what meetings and when he agreed to the requests.

Mr. David Mitchell: A request to give a dispensation under section 74 of the Transport Act 1985 to four Portsmouth city councillors who are also directors of Portsmouth City Transport was received on 11 March 1988 to enable the councillors directors to discuss and vote on company matters at the extraordinary meeting of the council convened for 16 March 1988. The Secretary of State granted the dispensation on 15 March 1988. The basis of his decision was that the dispensation would retain the existing political balance of the council; the extraordinary meeting had been called at very short notice; full attendance of all councillors was considered problematical; and it was therefore reasonable to provide a dispensation.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many different tenders were made available to Portsmouth city councillors in their consideration of applications for Portsmouth City Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: What information was made available to Portsmouth city councillors is a question for the council itself. I understand, however, that information about tenders from nine bidders was made available to councillors.

Transport Act 1985 (Dispensations)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of dispensations made under section 74 of the Transport Act 1985, stating the number of councils for which dispensation has been agreed, and the number of individuals for whom dispensation has been agreed, in each month since the Royal Assent to the Act.

Mr. David Mitchell: Dispensations have been given by the Secretary of State on five occasions to local authority councillors who were also directors of the public transport company owned by their authority. The dispensations enable councillors to discuss and vote on certain matters concerning the company. The details are as follows:

Authorities given dispensations	Date	Number of councillors involved
(a) Stockton on Tees, Langbaurgh and Middlesbrough borough councils (joint application)	9 May 1986	[1]7
(b) Portsmouth city council	16 February 1987	4
(c) Portsmouth city council	3 March 1987	4
(d) Nottingham city council	1 October 1987	4
(e) Portsmouth city council	15 March 1988	4

[1] Three from Stockton on Tees, one from Langbaurgh and three from Middlesbrough.

M6 (Thelwall)

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present traffic flow on the M6 at Thelwall; what was the design capacity; and what are the Department's projections for traffic flow at this point in the year 2000.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At present the average traffic flow across the viaduct throughout the year is about 103,000 vehicles per day. This includes traffic diverting on to the M6 to avoid long-term roadworks on the M63 at Barton Bridge.

The current assumed design capacity for a dual three-lane motorway with hard shoulders (not provided on Thelwall viaduct) is up to 79,000 vehicles per day.

The predicted average daily flow for the year 2000 is in the range 94,000 to 111,000 vehicles per day. This forecast is based on the average daily flow of 81,000 vehicles in 1984, before the Barton Bridge roadworks started.

I announced in January our plans to widen this part of the M6, including the viaduct, to dual four lanes with hard shoulders throughout.

DEFENCE

NATO-Warsaw Pact (Weapons)

67. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the comparative nuclear, conventional and chemical weapons' levels of NATO and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Comparisons of NATO and Warsaw pact nuclear and conventional forces are published annually in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

While there is broad parity at the strategic level of nuclear forces, the Warsaw pact continues to enjoy a significant advantage in the intermediate and short-range categories.

The Soviet Union also commands the world's largest, most comprehensive and advanced capability for chemical and toxic agent warfare. The United Kingdom abandoned its chemical weapons capability in the 1950s and the United States produced no chemical weapons between 1969 and 1987. However, this unilateral restraint by the West has not been matched by the Soviet Union. It was against this background that the United States began its modernisation programme to replace its own aging stocks with binary weapons stationed on United States territory.

As regards conventional forces, the Warsaw pact enjoys massive numerical superiority, and these forces are deployed so as to enable them to initiate surprise attack and large scale offensive action. They also have the potential to bring forward massive land-based reinforcements across relatively short distances. By contrast, NATO is faced with the need for many of its reinforcements to cross the Atlantic.

Pay Awards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number of his Department's staff at grade 2 and grade 3 who have received discretionary pay awards, the proportion of staff in receipt of the awards with the average amount by grade, and the total expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department made three awards at grade 2 level and 11 awards at grade 3 level in October 1987 representing 25 per cent. and 20 per cent. respectively of the total numbers in each grade. Payments were made in the form of increments of £2,500 to grade 2 and £2,000 to grade 3. Expenditure on the basis described would be £29,500 in a full year.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if executive officers, higher executive officers and senior executive grades in his Department are being considered for a pay increase similar to the discretionary awards paid to grades 2 and 3 in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Pay for these grades is negotiated centrally by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the results to date in terms of (a) contracts and (b) jobs of the memoranda of understanding between the United States and the United Kingdom in connection with the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Sainsbury: The value of SDI research awards so far won by British organisations is about US $60 million, spread over 65 contracts. It is not known what results this business has led to in terms of jobs.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will summarise such details as he is able to provide of the memoranda of understanding between the United States and the United Kingdom in connection with the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is set out in "UK Participation in the US SDI Research Programme — Guidelines", issued by the Ministry of Defence in May 1986. A copy was placed in the Library of the House at that time.

Equipment Budget

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the percentage and (b) the amount by which his Department's equipment budget was not foreseen (i) when projects started and (ii) when projects entered full development; and if he will supply this information for current projects and for the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Reliable information is not available in the form requested. Some attempts have been made to establish the degree of cost and time increase between earliest and current estimates for selected major projects, but no simple unarguable correlation exists between these figures and the total equipment budget.

Detective Chief Inspector Broome (Lecture)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether prior approval was given for the text of the lecture given by Detective Chief Inspector Robert Broome of the Ministry of Defence police, at the faculty of law, university of Southampton on 9 December 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Detective Chief Inspector Broome took part in an informal, in-house discussion held in the university by members and students of the faculty. There was no script. However, before accepting such an invitation he should have obtained the prior approval of the chief constable. He did not do so, and accordingly has been seen by the chief constable to be given formal advice in accordance with force standing orders, as to his future conduct.

Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place between his Department and the Civil Aviation Authority in relation to the replacement of the Sea King helicopters by a squadron of Wessex helicopters at the air sea rescue base at RAF Coltishall, with particular reference to the mechanical aspects of the different capabilities of the Wessex and the Sea King in their air sea rescue role; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. There is no requirement for military aircraft to be licensed by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the poor weather flying and long-range operation capability of the Wessex helicopter in relation to air-sea rescue duties in the North sea; what is the equivalent capability of the Sea King helicopter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Sea King's more sophisticated avionics and flight control system, longer range and extra capacity makes it a more capable all-weather aircraft than the Wessex. However, the Wessex remains capable of performing rescue operations in most weather conditions, including at night, where there is sufficient visibility.

NHS Patients

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made towards achieving a formal financial agreement between his Department and the Department of Health and Social Security Service for the treatment of National Health Service patients in United Kingdom hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: A financial arrangement between the two Departments has just been concluded. Essentially, the MOD will continue to treat NHS patients in service hospitals up to a specified baseline, broadly equating to the defence training requirement and accept the cost as a charge to Defence Votes. Any spare capacity above that baseline will be identified and offered to health authorities on a marginal extra cost basis to relieve NHS waiting lists and maximise the contribution of service hospitals to civilian health care. The national arrangement is a framework which sets out guidelines within which local contracts and planning agreements between service hospitals and health authorities will be promoted. Its implementation will depend on the active co-operation of health authorities and service hospitals. Both my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health and I will do all that we can to encourage this.

Defence Procurement

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the scrutiny report "Defence Procurement, Learning from Experience"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My noble Friend has decided that this report need no longer carry a privacy marking restricting its circulation. Accordingly, copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of the House, together with a paper indicating how its recommendations are to be implemented.

The report's recommendations, in the words of its authors, represent

"a necessary extension and complement to current initiatives; they are not an attempt to push off in some totally new direction".

The principal initiatives taken so far to secure better value for money are given in the answer at volume 130, column 107. The measures now planned will build on these by improving further the assessment of technical risks, the tailoring of the Procurement Executive's organisation to meet its evolving tasks, the monitoring of performance and the dissemination of lessons learnt.

PRIME MINISTER

Biwaters

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister whether, pursuant to her answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 20, she was aware in assessing Biwaters reputation as worthy of her support in Malaysia, that Biwaters had not by then successfully completed a major water project anywhere and had twice appeared in Nigerian courts for alleged poor performance; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The support given to Biwater, in relation to the Malaysian rural water supply project reflected our assessment that the company was fully capable of implementing the contract. Completion of the project in Niger state by Biwater represents the first request to come from the Nigerian Government for finance under the recently agreed Export Credits Guarantee Department package.

Student Grants

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now publish details of his decisions on the levels of student grants for the 1988-89 academic year.

Mr. Jackson: The main rates of student grant for the 1988-89 academic year were announced on 18 December 1987, at column 759. Reductions in assessed parental contributions to compensate for the ending of tax relief on non-charitable covenants have also been announced. In addition, I announced on 24 February, at column 213, the Government's decision to amend the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations so that international degree courses will no longer require specific designation for awards purposes.

I am publishing today all the supplementary grant rates for 1988-89. Details have been placed in the Library. There will also be some further minor changes to the grant arrangements, including an increase in the disregard of orphans' trust income and a new disregard of the first £2,000 of all pension income in the calculation of student income.

Science Base

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the increase in public spending on the science base between 1987-88 and 1988-89 (a) after allowing for general inflation and (b) in cash terms.

Mr. Jackson: After allowing for general inflation, as measured by the GDP deflator, there will be an increase of about 2 per cent. in expenditure on the science base between 1987-88 and 1988-89. The increase in expenditure in cash terms between the two years is about 6 per cent. These figures should be substituted for those quoted by my right hon. Friend in the debate on British science on 29 February at column 720.

Norfolk and Suffolk Broads Bill

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had on the terms of the Norfolk and Suffolk Broads Bill since it received Royal Assent; when he expects the new authority to be operational; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Royal Assent to the Norfolk and Suffolk Broads Act 1988 was signified on 15 March. Under the Act's provisions my right hon. Friend is empowered to make an order specifying the date on which the new Broads Authority will be constituted as soon as not less than 27 of the 33 appointments required to be made (under section 1(3)(a) and (b) of the Act) by my right hon. Friend and the 12 other appointing authorities have been duly made. Those authorities have all been invited to inform the Department as soon as their appointments have been made. Consultations have also been initiated with the various interested bodies about the nine appointments which my right hon. Friend is required to make, and suggestions are now being received.

My right hon. Friend intends to make an order establishing the new authority as soon as all the necessary appointments have been made. As I informed the House on 29 February, during consideration of Lords amendments, it is intended that the "operative date", on which the new authority will assume all its executive functions, will be 1 April 1989.

Footpaths

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision on the appeal made by Mr. and Mrs. John Baybutt of The Copping, Hundred End land, Hesketh Bank, Lancashire against the refusal of Lancashire county council to delete footpath 66 North Meols from the definitive map; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The decision on this appeal was issued on Tuesday 29 March.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has following the case David Rubenstein v. the Secretary of State for the Environment, to seek to amend the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to give power to his Department to delete footpaths from the definitive map; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The implications of this judgment are receiving careful consideration and a further statement will be made as soon as possible.

Sport and Leisure

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list, by local authority area, the numbers of schoolchildren taught to swim by amateur swimming clubs in each year since 1979;

(2) if he will list by name the number of publicly owned sport and leisure facilities within each local authority area;

(3) what information he has on the percentage of publicly owned swimming pools which are open for use between 6 and 8 am (a) on weekdays and (b) at weekends;

(4) what information he has on the average charges to swimmers using publicly owned sports facilities;

(5) if he will list those local authorities which have taken positive steps to encourage the use of publicly owned sport and leisure facilities by Olympic swimmers and athletes;

(6) if he will list those local authorities who operate concessionary charging policies, in respect of publicly owned sport and leisure facilities, for (a) the disabled, (b) schoolchildren, (c) the unemployed and (d) pensioners;

(7) what information he has as to any sport and leisure facilities, formerly under private ownership, that are now controlled by local authorities and as to the reasons for the change of responsibility in each case.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the training facilities available to swimmers and athletes (a) of Olympic standard and (b) of national competition standard, in the light of the responses he has received to the consultation exercise on competition in the management of local authority sports and leisure facilities.

Mr. Ridley: No such information came to light in the process of the consultation exercise. However, I understand that there are a substantial number of facilities countrywide at which swimmers and athletes of all abilities can train.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name, and list by local authority area, those publicly owned sport and leisure facilities currently under private management.

Mr. Ridley: I am not aware of any comprehensive list of such facilities.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make an announcement about the future management of publicly owned sports and leisure facilities.

Mr. Ridley: We have received more than 350 responses to the consultation paper which set out our proposal to bring compulsory competition to the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities. These are now receiving careful consideration. I expect to be able to make an announcement about our decisions before the summer recess.

As my hon. Friend's answer today to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks) said, if we decide to go ahead with compulsory competition for the management of sport and leisure facilities, implementation will be delayed beyond the 1 August 1989 date applicable to the other activities in the Local Government Act.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the responses he has received from amateur sporting bodies in respect of the consultation exercise on competition in the management of local authority sports and leisure facilities.

Mr. Ridley: We have written to all the respondents to the consultation exercise seeking their agreement to publish their replies. When we have confirmation that they have no objections we shall place copies of their responses in the House Library.

Race Relations

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet decided which questions on race relations matters should be specified for the purposes of section 18 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Howard: Following consultation with the Commission for Racial Equality, the Confederation of British Industry, the local authority associations and other interested bodies, I have decided that the questions and description of evidence specified under section 18(5) of the Local Government Act 1988 should be as follows:

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT 1988—SECTION 18(5)

Specification of questions and descriptions of evidence

1. Is it your policy as an employer to comply with your statutory obligations under the Race Relations Act 1976 and, accordingly, your practice not to treat one group of people less favourably than others because of their colour, race, nationality or ethnic origins in relation to decisions to recruit, train or promote employees?

2. In the last three years, has any finding of unlawful racial discrimination been made against your organisation by any court or industrial tribunal?

3. In the last three years, has your organisation been the subject of formal investigation by the Commission for Racial Equality on grounds of alleged unlawful discrimination?

If the answer to question 2 is in the affirmative or in relation to question 3, the Commission made a finding adverse to your organisation;

4. What steps did you take in consequence of that finding?

5. Is your policy on race relations set out—

(a) in instructions to those concerned with recruitment, training and promotion;

(b) in documents available to employees, recognised trade unions or other representative groups of employees;

(c) in recruitment advertisements or other literature?

6. Do you observe as far as possible the Commission for Racial Equality's Code of Practice for Employment, as approved by Parliament in 1983, which gives practical guidance to employers and others on the elimination of racial discrimination and the promotion of equality of opportunity in employment, including the steps that can be taken to encourage members of the ethnic minorities to apply for jobs or take up training opportunities?

Description of evidence

In relation to question 5: examples of the instructions, documents, recruitment advertisements or other literature.

These questions and description of evidence will be notified to local authorities in a circular to be issued shortly.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 278, he will give the total numbers of individuals gaining and losing on a regional basis from the poll tax, as derived from figures 6 and 9 of the accompanying note.

Mr. Ridley: Estimates of gainers and losers can be made only for households or tax units. Estimates on both these bases and at regional level were contained in the figures published on 13 January.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the responses to the document entitled "Appeals and Valuation and Community Charge Tribunals", published by his Department on 10 November 1987.

Mr. Chope: We have received 122 responses to the consultation document. A summary of the views expressed has been placed in the Libraries of the House, together with copies of those responses where we have the respondents' permission to publish their views.

The consultation document set out the Government's proposals for the constitution and procedures of valuation and community charge tribunals, which will replace local valuation courts and become the appellate body for both rating appeals and appeals arising from the community charge. The proposals were generally welcomed by respondents and will form the basis of regulations to be made under the provisions of the Local Government Finance Bill, following Royal Assent. These regulations will be the subject of further consultation.

In the light of the responses to the consultation document, certain changes have been made to the proposals. In relation to the president of each tribunal, it had been proposed that he or she should be appointed by the Secretary of State. But the majority of respondents pointed out that the present system, whereby the chairman of the local valuation panel is elected by the members, has worked well and that there is no justification for change. The Government accept this view.

The consultation document proposed that where two or more existing local valuation panels share a clerk and office, consideration should be given to amalgamating those panels under one president. In the light of the responses to the consultation document, the Government have accepted that such amalgamation should take place only with the agreement of the panels concerned.

The proposal for limiting the number of serving councillors on any tribunal commanded general support. A number of respondents took the view that the ceiling of 50 per cent. of the membership was too high. In the light of this, the Government propose that the percentage of serving councillors should be reduced to 30 per cent. of the membership of any tribunal. The Government recognise, however, that some local valuation panels currently have a significantly greater proportion of serving councillors than this. There would be no benefit in terminating the appointment of a large number of experienced panel members at a time when the panels are assuming their new and expanded duties. It is proposed therefore that the 30 per cent. ceiling should be achieved over a period—as members' terms of office come to an end and new members are appointed.

Illuminated Signs

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for changing controls of illuminated signs and advertisements on business premises in conservation areas and in towns and villages generally.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 28 October last year my Department issued a consultation paper canvassing proposals for amending the Town aand Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1984 so as to provide "deemed consent" for certain types of illuminated advertisement displayed on "business premises", possibly including premises in conservation areas. The comments submitted in response to the consultation paper are being considered and my right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement in due course.

Stockbridge Village Trust

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to publish the report prepared by Roger Tym and Partners on the work of the Stockbridge Village Trust.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report is published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office today. It is entitled "Stockbridge Village Trust: Building a Community" and covers the period 1983-85, with a brief update at the end of 1986. The report is a useful account of the early years of the trust's ambitious development programme. It records the substantial progress which the trust has made in transforming one of the worst local authority estates on Merseyside into an area where people actively want to live. During this period the trust gained tenants' confidence as a responsible and efficient landlord, turning a void rate of more than 10 per cent. into a fully occupied estate with a substantial waiting list. And the trust also succeeded in attracting private investment to an area which would have been unthinkable previously: over 200 residents had exercised the right to buy and around 100 new homes had been built for sale in the period covered by the report. Equally importantly, the report describes some of the difficulties which the trust has faced, particularly on its initial financial assumptions, and contains a number of important lessons for initiatives of this kind. We have sent copies to all local authorities in England and other interested parties, and I have placed a copy in the Library. Further copies are available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office stockists, or from the Department, at £5·95 each.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a timetable for the implementation of competitive tendering procedures for individual local government services in the phasing programme.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 2 November 1987, c. 598-99]: My right hon. Friend has now considered the responses to the consultation paper on implementation of competition for English local authority services issued on 2 November. He has decided to confirm the proposal of a phased introduction of competition by local authorities (other than parish councils), with authorities split into groups and each group taking the activities covered by the Act in a different order.

The groups of authorities will be the same as set out in the consultation paper. The date by which authorities will have had to have exposed their first activities to competition will be set at 1 August 1989, to allow adequate time for all stages of the competitive process to be completed.

Three other changes to the implementation proposals have been made which will help ensure efficient implementation of the competition process. These take account of the fact that a decision on the possibility of adding sport and leisure management to the list of defined activities has not yet been taken, and therefore, if this activity is added by order, some delay in implementing competition for it is inevitable.

My right hon. Friend has decided to confirm the £100,000 de minimis level below which authorities' services would be exempt from competition.

These decisions are described fully in a letter which is today being sent to all affected authorities, and copies of which have been placed in the Library.

A further announcement will be made shortly about implementation for the other English authorities and bodies covered by part I of the Act.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industry Restraint Agreements

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list those voluntary industry restraint agreements which have been terminated as a result of Government pressure, referred to by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs, the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude) on 18 March Official Report, column 1365, and those which remain.

Mr. Maude: The Government have informed the industries concerned that it sees no case for continuing inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements (VRAs) covering the following products:

Monochrome televisions from Singapore, Republic of Korea, Taiwan and Thailand;
Colour televisions from Japan, Singapore, Republic of Korea and Taiwan;
Music centres from Japan, Republic of Korea and Taiwan;
Pottery from Japan;
Stainless steel cutlery from Japan and Republic of Korea.

Separately, restraints on imports of pottery and footwear from Taiwan have lapsed.

We are aware that voluntary arrangements at present remain for fork-lift trucks, machining centres, numerically controlled lathes, cars and commercial vehicles from Japan; and special steels from Spain. The United Kingdom industry is discussing the renewal of arrangements on footwear with the Republic of Korea.

The European Commission has negotiated a number of restraint agreements on steel and, in addition to the multi-fibre arrangement, on certain limited textile and clothing products. A number of other arrangements with Japan were brought to an end in 1985. On behalf of the United Kingdom the Commission has negotiated restraints on leather footwear from certain eastern European countries.

Illegal Broadcasting

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many prosecutions have taken place over the past 12 months in respect of illegal broadcasting by pirate radio stations.

Mr. Butcher: During 1987 there were 77 prosecutions, of which 75 resulted in conviction under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 for offences connected with unlicensed broadcasting.

South Africa (EC Code of Conduct)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on how British companies have complied with the European Community code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa during the 12-month period to 30 June 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: By 18 March 1988, 128 companies had submitted reports to the DTI under the code of conduct. Copies of the reports and of the Department's analysis and summary have, as in previous years, been placed in the Library of each House. These documents may also be inspected at the Department's statistics and market intelligence library, at the British embassy in Pretoria, at the British consulate-general in Johannesburg, and at the British consulates in Cape Town and Durban.

The analysis and summary is the second since the adoption of the revised code of conduct by EC Foreign Ministers in November 1985. The period under review was again characterised by an inflation rate which was significantly higher than the average rate of wage increases. Against this background, the performance of British subsidiaries in further reducing the number of their black employees paid below the code's recommended minimum level is particularly encouraging. Companies' reports for the period under review indicated that over 97 per cent. were paid above that level. In addition, companies continued to report impressive levels of involvement in projects benefiting the wider communities from which their work forces were drawn.

The Government are grateful to companies for this year's unprecedented level of co-operation in providing reports, and urge them to maintain this performance and to comply fully with the code.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by the Office of Fair Trading in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Butcher: This is a matter for the Director-General of Fair Trading, and I will ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Maude: No such contracts were awarded in 1987.

Tour Operators (Fuel Surcharges)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will initiate an inquiry into the extent of fuel surcharges made by tour operators; what recent evidence he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 28 March at column 360.

Fireworks (Injuries)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the figures of injuries caused by fireworks in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: According to reports from hospitals in England, Wales and Scotland 960 people required treatment for injuries caused by fireworks during the three weeks leading up to 5 November 1987 and the few days after. The figures for 1987 and the preceding four years are shown in the table.

Although the figures are somewhat disappointing, they do not justify further restrictions on the retail sale of fireworks to the public.

We will be mounting a higher profile firework safety campaign again, this year urging the public to treat fireworks with care and not to misuse them. We will be asking local trading standards officers to work closely with the police in enforcing vigorously the increased penalties for selling fireworks to the under-16s and in taking action against those who let off fireworks in the streets.

For its part, the fireworks industry has agreed to stop supplying mini-rockets to the shops, since these particularly lend themselves to misuse by hooligans. It is also making a training video for organisers of displays on how to run a public display safely.

We are also drawing up a British standard for the performance, testing and labelling of fireworks, which should enable us to stop the importation of the more hazardous fireworks from the far east.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Internal Market Council held on 22 March.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, adopted a directive to amend the existing EC directives on the rules for public sector supplies contracts. It also adopted directives on fluid fertilisers; the sound power level of lawnmowers; the provision of information in the field of technical standards and regulations; and modification of the investment rules for undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities. The Council also discussed a proposed directive on broadcasting activities, received a progress report from the Commission on completion of the internal market, and heard a Commission statement relating to the European Telecommunications Standards Institute.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Fiji

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has concerning the location of the Overseas Development Agency regional office in Fiji; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The future of the British development division in the Pacific was examined in 1984 as part of an efficiency scrutiny. The conclusion was that the division represented a cost-effective vehicle for aid delivery and that it was appropriately located. While I will continue to keep under review the cost-effectiveness and siting of all five of the ODA's development divisions overseas, I have no current plans to relocate the British development division in the Pacific.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the level of United Kingdom assistance to Fiji since the military coup in May 1987; and what information he has about the level of assistance provided by other EEC countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: United Kingdom assistance to Fiji since the military coup in May 1987 to the end of February 1988 totalled £866,303. Information about aid provided by other European Community countries for so recent a period is not available.

Central America

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what levels and types of technical assistance and bilateral aid are given to Costa Rica, Panama, Nicaragua, Guatemala, El Salvador, Belize and Mexico, respectively; and when was the last time a project for such aid or assistance was approved for Nicaragua.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest available figures by level and type of British aid are for 1986:

	Financial project Aid[1]	Technical cooperation[2]	Disaster relief	Total (£000s)[3]
Costa Rica	11,016	522	—	11,538
Panama	—	70	—	70
Nicaragua	—	3	82	86
Guatemala	—	—	10	10
El Salvador	—	47	193	239
Belize	2,314	865	—	3,179
Mexico	—	686	117	803

[1] Includes investments made by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.
[2] Includes personnel, training and equipment but not projects co-financed with British voluntary agencies.

[3]Totals may not exactly equal sum of individual columns as all figures are rounded.

The last bilateral Government to Government aid provided to Nicaragua was in 1987 for sheets worth £600 for the Bertha Calderon hospital in Managua.

We have responded positively to appeals from various relief organisations including the International Red Cross and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for their work in Central America including Nicaragua. Since 1985-86 we have contributed over £1·5 million. We also support small development projects in Nicaragua co-financed with British voluntary agencies. Thirty such projects have been approved since 1985-86. Nicaragua also receives aid through the European Community ($9 million in 1986) of which Britain's share is around 20 per cent.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Councillor Mrs. Angela Pink

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the decision not to prosecute Councillor Mrs. Angela Pink of Nottingham city council.

The Attorney-General: I have written to the hon. Gentleman about the case to which he refers.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by Her Majesty's Land Registry in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

The Attorney-General: No new management or computer consultancy contracts were awarded by Her Majesty's Land Registry in 1987.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by the Lord Chancellor's Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

The Attorney-General: The following contracts were awarded to management or computer consultancy firms by the Lord Chancellor's Department in 1987:

Firm	Subject of Assignment
Coopers and Lybrand Associates	Review of funds accountancy system —system testing.
Coopers and Lybrand Associates	Review of funds accountancy system —project plans.
CAP Industry Ltd.	Review of machine accounting system at the Public Trust Office.
Digitus	Advice on computer operating system.
Helistar Marlow	Assistance with the Crown Court Computer Project.
Peat Marwick and McLintock	Advice to the Business Efficiency Team in connection with the Claims Registry Project.

Dog Fighting

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will prosecute the publication "Pit Bull News" for promoting illegal dog fights; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will prosecute those persons alleged to have been involved in illegal dog fighting who are named in the article entitled "Killer Dogs" which appeared in the Yorkshire Evening Post of Monday 21 March; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No evidence has as yet been submitted by the police to the Crown Prosecution Service in respect of those matters to which the hon. Gentleman refers. I have, however, referred them to the Director of Public Prosecutions. If he thinks it appropriate, the director will invite the police to make inquiries.

Extradition

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to agree extradition arrangements under the new Irish legislation with the Attorney-General of the Irish Republic.

The Attorney-General: In my answer on 18 February to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) I indicated that I had notified the Attorney-General of the Irish Republic that I was entirely willing to provide him in each instance with a note from me confirming that the United Kingdom prosecuting authorities had considered the evidence, as they were required to do; that they were satisfied that it was sufficient to found a prosecution; and that there was a settled intention to prosecute accordingly. I had also agreed to his request that I provide him in each instance with a note setting out the relevant law, but I had said that the Government saw the possibility of seriously damaging consequences for the intended criminal proceedings in the United Kingdom if I were to provide him with the actual evidence supporting any warrant.

On 25 February I wrote to the Irish Attorney-General to say that I was very hopeful that we could find a way through our mutual difficulties towards the end that I knew we both desired. I believed that in the first instance it would be useful if officials were to meet as soon as possible to discuss the matter.

At the subsequent meeting of officials on 2 March an offer was made on my behalf to provide the Irish Attorney-General in each instance additionally with a statement of facts which would give a clear picture of the case against the accused.

Following requests by me for a response to this offer the Irish Attorney-General yesterday requested a further meeting of officials to be held on 7 April. I have agreed to this request.

I regard it as imperative that extradition arrangements between the two countries under the new Irish legislation be agreed as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fires (Statistics)

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many fires there were in (a) occupied dwellings, (b) multiple-occupied dwellings in detached, semi-detached and terraced houses, and (c) multiple-occupied dwellings in other buildings, in each of the three most recent years for which figures are available; and if he will analyse these data by the most likely cause of fire;

(2) how many (a) deaths, and (b) casualties there were due to fire in (i) single occupied dwellings, (ii) multiple-occupied dwellings in detached, semi-detached and terraced house, and (iii) multiple-occupied dwellings in other buildings, analysed by the most likely cause of fire, in each of the three most recent years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: Some information on fires attended by local authority fire brigades in dwellings in single and multiple occupation, and on the resulting casualties, is published annually in "Fire Statistics United Kingdom" (for example, tables 32, 46 and 47 of the volume for 1986) copies of which are in the Library. The following tables give the more detailed information requested, for the years 1984-86. Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many rescues were made by fire brigades from fires in (a) single-occupied dwellings, (b) multiple-occupied dwellings in detached, semi-detached and terraced houses and (c) multiple-occupied dwellings in other buildings, in each of the three most recent years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of persons rescued, both by brigade staff and without brigade assistance, from fires attended by local authority fire brigades in dwellings and other occupied buildings in the United Kingdom are published in "Fire Statistics United Kingdom" (Table 20 of the volume for 1986, copies of which are in the Library). Mr. John Patten: Information on the age, and circumstances, of casualties in fires in dwellings attended by local authority fire brigades is published in "Fire Statistics United Kingdom" (Tables 26, 46 and 47 of the volume for 1986, copies of which are in the Library). Welford Road Prison, Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what capacity Welford road gaol in Leicester was built; what is its current average occupancy; and what urgent steps he is taking (a) in order to reduce the number of people turning to crime and (b) to alleviate the crisis in Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The certified normal accommodation of Leicester prison is 200. On Friday 25 March, 411 prisoners were accommodated there. My right hon. Friend is today announcing measures which will provide general relief for the whole prison system which is under extreme pressure.

The Government have just launched the safer cities initiative, which, in 20 inner city areas, will lead the way in providing constructive activities for those most at risk of turning to crime. This is in addition to the major new TV publicity campaign and other crime prevention measures concerned with improving physical security and design and better management of property or services.

Irish Prisoners

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is given the circumstances of the families of Irish category A prisoners in deciding on whether to transfer the prisoners near to where their families live; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Requests by prisoners for permanent transfer to Northern Ireland are considered in the light of criteria which have been made public. These criteria, which do not distinguish between category A and other inmates, deal with the circumstances of the inmate in question rather than those of his family, but as every application is dealt with on its merits, any exceptional family circumstances which may put forward in support of a request would be taken into account. Repatriation of prisoners to the Republic of Ireland is not at present possible since the Republic has not ratified the European convention on the transfer of sentenced prisoners.

Criminal Trials (Time Limits)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police areas in England and Wales operate statutory time limits for the presentation of criminal trials; whether he has plans to introduce time limits in all areas of England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: From 1 April, statutory custody time limits in criminal proceedings will operate in 14 police areas covering the counties of Avon, Cheshire, Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, Gloucestershire, Greater Manchester, Hampshire, the Isle of Wight, Kent, Somerset, West Midlands and Wiltshire, and the whole of Wales. We hope to extend time limits throughout England by 1990.

South Africa House (Arrests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of arrests of persons outside South Africa House (a) so far this year and (b) in the last week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the number of arrests outside South Africa House this year is six, of which three were made during the week ending 25 March.

Crime Prevention

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned or is aware of into the incidence amongst (a) women and (b) pensioners of fear of going out after dark; if he proposes to hold discussions with chief constables on the prevention of crimes against women and pensioners; if he will meet representatives of women's and pensioners' organisations to discuss the problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In recent years there have been a number of Home Office studies, principally the British crime surveys of 1982 and 1984, which, among other issues, covered the fear of going out after dark. The studies revealed that such fear among women and the elderly was substantial, particularly in some locations, but that levels of fear were frequently in excess of an objective assessment of the risk. Fieldwork is currently taking place for the 1988 British crime survey which will cover this issue again.

Surveys by other organisations (for example the November 1987 poll by MORI for Readers' Digest and an October poll for Help the Aged) have confirmed that fear of crime is a significant problem, especially for women and the elderly.

Chief officers of police and organisations such as Help the Aged and Age Concern give special attention to the particular needs of women and elderly people in the issue of crime prevention advice and guidance. The new Home Office handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime", which is freely available, contains sound, practical guidance specifically addressed to both groups. In addition, Government programmes such as the community or estate action programme and our plans to improve crime prevention on public transport are of particular benefit to potentially vulnerable groups.

We are satisfied that the police pay particular attention to the concerns of women and the elderly in planning local crime prevention campaigns. We are, however, keen to work closely with responsible organisations representing the interests of women and pensioners in reducing the fear of crime; and I and colleagues have meetings, from time to time, with such groups at local and national levels.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by the Metropolitan police in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Dog Fighting

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to increase the sentences available to the courts for offences of dog fighting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government entirely share the public abhorrence of the barbaric practice of dog fighting. The penalties for such activities, provided under the Protection of Animals Act 1911, were recently doubled by the Protection of Animals (Penalties) Act 1987 to the maximum penalties available summarily, that is, to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (£2,000), or six months' imprisonment, or both. We are giving full support, in which I hope the hon. Member will join us, to the proposals by my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) in his Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bill to increase substantially the maximum penalties for attendance at animal fights or baiting.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to prevent advertisements for the sale of fighting dogs being placed in British newspapers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no such plans.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for dog fighting were obtained in 1987; where the offences were committed; and what sentences were given by the courts concerned in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information collected centrally does not distinguish offences relating to dog fights from other offences under the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take urgent action to prevent the importing of American pit bull dogs for use in illegal dog fighting rings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We do not consider that such a ban would be effective in preventing illegal fighting, given the number of dogs already in the United Kingdom which are susceptible to abuse, and the difficulty in distinguishing between dogs bred for fighting and as pets. In addition, an import ban on the whole of a particular strain of dog would be contrary to our international trading obligations unless the domestic sale and commercial breeding of dogs of the strain in question were similarly prohibited.

Oak Tree Farm Rural Projects

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the reasons for the delay by the Charity Commission in dealing with the request for registration by Miss Monica Moreton of Great Haywood, Stafford, on behalf of the Oak Tree Farm Rural Projects.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has asked the chief charity commissioner to look into these matters.

Immigration

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people living in the Birmingham area were waiting to be interviewed by immigration officials in connection with applications for entry clearance for members of their family to join them in the United Kingdom at 31 January.

Mr. Renton: At 31 January 1988, there were 36 outstanding entry clearance applications referred to the immigration service and awaiting interview of persons living in the Birmingham area. All have either now been completed or have appointments arranged before 31 March 1988.

Sinn Fein

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to seek to limit Sinn Fein's access to the broadcasting media; and what representations he has received on this matter.

Mr. Renton: We have no proposals at present to seek to limit Sinn Fein's access to the broadcasting media, nor have we received any representations on the matter.

Extraditions (Irish Republic)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of the persons for whom extradition warrants were sent from England and Wales to the Irish Republic in each of the last five years, indicating in each case in which terrorist-type activity was the reason for the warrants, whether the persons named were extradited and which warrants were held to be defective, showing in such cases the exact reasons each warrant was held to be defective.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 29 March 1988]: Information on individual warrants sent from England and Wales to the Republic of Ireland is not held centrally. My right hon. Friend's reply of 6 November 1987 at columns 906-7 gave the available information for the years 1982-86. Figures for 1987 are not yet available. In that period, the return of Evelyn Glenholmes to face charges in connection with terrorist offences failed because the Irish court considered that information on oath that had already been laid should have been resworn on the day when the warrants were issued.

THE ARTS

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his office in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Luce: One computer consultancy contract was awarded by my office in 1987 to AMTEC Consulting for the Government art collection database project.

Antiquarian Books

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) whether the criteria laid out in the Waverley rules cover copies of the Grolier-bound "Hypnerotomachia" (1499) or "Aesop's Fables" (1480) currently owned by the John Rylands library, Manchester;

(2) if he will seek to prevent the export of antiquarian books from British libraries.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 March 1988]: Any book which has been in this country for more than 50 years and is over £16,000 in value requires an export licence. If such an application were made and referred to the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art the item would be assessed against the Waverley criteria. Export licences are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue costs of a cut in all higher rates of income tax to (i) 40 per cent. and (ii) 35 per cent. in (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost of abolishing all higher rates of income tax above 40 per cent. is estimated to be £965 million in 1988-89 and £2,070 million in 1989-90. The abolition of rates of income tax above 40 per cent. was announced in the Budget on 15 March; the costs given above are those published in table 4.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1988-89. The cost of further reducing the higher rate of tax to 35 per cent. is estimated to be an additional £405 million in 1988-89 and an additional £880 million in 1989-90.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield in 1989-90 from reducing capital gains tax allowances to the level of personal allowances.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About £10 million. The levels of personal allowances substituted for the annual exempt amount as a basis for this reply are those proposed in chapter 4 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1988-89 (Cm. 361).

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue effect in 1989-90 of reducing the top rate of inheritance tax to 40 per cent.; and if he will give the most recent available figures for the annual number of taxpayers paying inheritance tax at a rate above 40 per cent. and the average value of their estate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost in 1989-90 is estimated at £150 million. It is estimated that for 1987-88 a total of 5,200 taxpayers will have paid IHT at rates above 40 per cent. The average value of their estates is estimated at £475,000.

Benefits in Kind

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in favour of the introduction of legislation to treat as benefits in kind for tax purposes the official accommodation, cars, and other facilities provided for Ministers of the Crown; what reply he has given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None. Whether or not official accommodation, car and other facilities provided for Ministers of the Crown are treated as benefits in kind for tax purposes is determined, according to the facts of each case, under the same legislation which deals with the taxation of benefits in kind received by office holders generally.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly gain of a single person earning £150,000 a year from his Budget tax changes.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly gain of a single person earning £100,000 a year from his Budget tax changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The weekly gain from the Budget of a single person earning £150,000 and £100,000 a year, with no other income, would be £721·92 and £464·23 respectively. The figures refer only to income tax and assume that the taxpayer is entitled to no income tax reliefs or allowances other than the single person's allowance. The calculation is made by comparing the taxpayer's income tax liability under the 1987-88 tax regime with that under the proposed regime for 1988-89.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in gross domestic product per capita in each of the English regions, Wales and Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Major: Estimates of gross domestic product per capita were published in the November 1987 edition of Economic Trends, a copy of which is available in the House Library.

Increases in gross domestic product per capita between 1979 and 1986 are provided for the specified regions in the table below.

Laboratory Animals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent steps the Inland Revenue has taken to counteract tax evasion by suppliers of animals to university laboratories; and what statistics are maintained for this purpose.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No centrally co-ordinated steps have been taken or thought necessary and no statistics are maintained. If the hon. Gentleman has reason to believe there is evasion in this field, perhaps he would write to me.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Brooke: The following is the information requested:

Management consultancy contracts

Firm	Subject of Assignment
A. P. Computer Consultants	Feasibility study of revised publications subscription system
P. Headley Consultants	Modification of software package
Daton Systems Ltd.	Specification of micro system for forms stockholding
Printing Industries Research Association	Preparation for BS5750 quality assurance accreditation
NHMC Consulting	Warehouse organisation and efficiency review
NHMC Consulting	Forms Centre organisations and efficiency review
NHMC Consulting	Design of new warehouse
NHMC Consulting	Review of storage of departmental forms and stationery

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount spent by the Inland Revenue in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The amount spent by the Inland Revenue in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases was £13·9 million.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount spent by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 29 March 1988]: About £2·1 million in the calendar year 1987.

Petrol Duty

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total revenue yield from excise duty payable on petrol in the last year for which figures are available; and on what total quantity of petrol that duty was collected.

Mr. Lilley: Information specifically related to petrol is not available. In 1986-87 the revenue collected from the excise duty on light oil (of which petrol is the major element) was £5,755 million. This represents the duty on 29,700 million litres.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking amendment of the law to end the practice whereby fuel surcharges are not counted as income for the purposes of corporation tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None so far as I am aware. Under the law as it stands, fuel surcharges imposed by tour operators are in principle taxable like other trading receipts. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, I should be glad to look into it if he will let me have details.

General Commissioners of Income Tax

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations were received in response to the Inland Revenue's consultative documents on the General Commissioners of Income Tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In July 1987 the Inland Revenue published, with the authority of my right hon. Friends the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Lord Chancellor, a consultative document on the possibility of setting up General Commissioners in Northern Ireland. Comments were received from professional bodies, individual firms and others, representing a wide range of interests. A clear majority of these were in favour of the introduction in Northern Ireland of local tax tribunals. Where reservations were expressed they were predominantly about the importance of appointing and training appropriate General Commissioners, and about the transitional arrangements for introducing the new system.

In view of this broad measure of support, the Finance Bill will include the legislation necessary to enable General Commissioners to be introduced in Northern Ireland. However, the system will not be brought into operation before January 1989. My right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor will set the date for the change in the light of progress with the appointment of General Commissioners. This will also allow the Inland Revenue to inform taxpayers and their advisers in Northern Ireland how their rights to appeal to an independent tribunal will be preserved and improved by the new system.

The Board of Inland Revenue issued a separate consultative document in November 1987 on possible changes to the legislation which determines which body of General Commissioners deal with an appeal (or other proceedings). The proposal was that in some tax offices appeals by companies, trusts and large unincorporated businesses should be brought before the General Commissioners for the division in which the tax office was situated, subject to the taxpayer's right of objection. Comments from professional and representative bodies, individual firms and others recognised that the existing legislation was inflexible and caused difficulty. However, there was concern that the proposed changes to the legislation might in practice be equally inflexible, and about the lack of opportunities for taxpayers to propose a different place of hearing for their appeals.

The Inland Revenue is therefore undertaking further consultation on new proposals which will make it easier for taxpayers to agree with tax offices where their appeals should be heard. This should make it unnecessary for the Inland Revenue to make use of directions for many taxpayers.

If taxpayers and their advisers find this revised approach more acceptable the aim will be to introduce the necessary legislation in this year's Finance Bill.

Tax (Repayment)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there is to be any change in the way that the Inland Revenue handles claims for repayment of tax by individuals during the course of a tax year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Individuals who are not liable to tax can claim payment of the tax credit attached to dividends; they can also claim repayment of tax deducted from certain interest and other payments. Whether or not an individual is liable to tax cannot be finally settled until the end of the tax year when his or her actual income and personal allowances and reliefs for the year are known.

Nevertheless the Inland Revenue's practice has been to allow individuals to claim provisional repayment by instalments during the course of a tax year rather than waiting until the end of the year. In very many cases these involve repayment of comparatively small amounts of tax at a disproportionate cost.

With effect from 6 April 1989, therefore, there will be a change in the Inland Revenue's practice. With my approval, after that date the Inland Revenue will repay tax claimed during the course of the tax year only when the amount of tax involved exceeds a limit of £50. Where the tax repayable is less than this, the Inland Revenue will not process the claims but instead will be asking individuals to wait until either the amount exceeds the £50 limit or the end of the tax year, whichever is the earliest, before claiming repayment. This change in practice may affect the timing of repayments, but it will not affect the amount repaid.

Taxation

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will construct an index, with 1978-79 equalling 100, of the changes in the level of income tax and national insurance contributions for each subsequent year for a taxpayer on (a) half, (b) two thirds, (c) average, (d) five times average and (e) 10 times average earnings for households where the taxpayer is (i) single, (ii) married with no children, (iii) married with two children and (iv) married with four children, in all cases assuming the wife does not work, using a similar form to his answer of 1 May 1987, Official Report, columns 287-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1988]: The table shows (a) income tax plus national insurance contributions less child benefit, where appropriate, as a percentage of gross earnings; and (b) real net income after tax, NIC and child benefit in index number form with 1978-79 equalling 100. The calculations assume that the taxpayer has no reliefs other than the appropriate personal allowance and that national insurance contributions are at the contracted-in rate. Average earnings are those for full-time males paid at adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence. Figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are provisional.

Clearing Banks (Tax Receipts)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he anticipates in tax receipts from the clearing banks for the year 1987-88 before any provision for sovereign country debt and after tax relief given on account of sovereign country debt.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 March 1988]: The effect on tax receipts of these provisions by all banks for the year 1987-88 was given in the answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 14 March 1988 at column 429. Because of the Inland Revenue's rules of confidentiality, it is not the practice to give figures of this kind for particular parts of the banking sector.

Rail Services (Budget Document)

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his Department has made or intends to make any payment to British Rail for the publication and distribution on inter-city services of a document entitled "Summary of the Budget Proposals"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Brooke [holding answer 28 March 1988]: No. I understand that a Budget summary was published by a private firm and made available to inter-city passengers at no cost to British Rail.

Building Societies

Mr. John: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications for the members and mortgagors of a building society which converts to a public liability company.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 29 March 1988]: It is for the investing and borrowing members of a society to decide whether conversion is in their best interests. A society cannot convert unless they vote in favour. The Building Societies Act 1986 imposes stringent voting thresholds and majorities for passing resolutions, and also provides for the members to be given all the material information they need to reach an informed judgment on which way they wish to vote. In addition a society seeking to convert must first obtain a banking licence from the Bank of England. The Government have sought to remove both artificial obstacles and artificial inducements to conversion.

SCOTLAND

Ettrick and Lauderdale (Housing Capital Allocations)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans any increase in housing provisional capital allocations, 1988-89, for Ettrick and Lauderdale district council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 28 March my right hon. and learned Friend announced details of the final housing capital allocations for all district and island councils. These included increased allocations of £1·8 million on the HRA block and £0·65 million on the non-HRA block for Ettrick and Lauderdale district.

Rating Reform

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether sporting organisations in Scotland will be required to pay the unified business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: As the first stage in the reform of non-domestic rates in Scotland, increases in the non-domestic rate poundages set by local authorities will, under section 3 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, be subject to an index-linked ceiling from 1 April 1989. This will benefit sporting organisations and other non-domestic ratepayers in Scotland.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many long-stay mental patients he expects there will be in hospitals in Scotland in each of the next seven years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave him on Tuesday 29 March 1988.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to respond to the British Medical Association, Royal College of General Practitioners and Scottish General Medical Services committees' call for general practitioners to be able to give out free needles and condoms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The suggestions made by the three bodies are contained in a joint policy statement setting out a wide range of proposals on AIDS, HIV infection and drug misuse. I welcome the interest of these bodies in a matter which is of major concern to the Government, and we shall be arranging early discussions with their representatives to consider the details of their proposals.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the operation and future of the syringe exchange centres in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on Tuesday 29 March 1988.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to prevent the spread of HIV 2 in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: HIV 2 infection in the United Kingdom has been monitored for some time. The indications are that the disease is extremely rare in the United Kingdom: the first positive among several thousand tests was found only some two weeks ago. Blood samples from high risk groups will continue to be monitored and we shall take account of the situation in Europe, where HIV 2 infection is thought to be more prevalent, to assess whether further measures are needed.

Community Care

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate for expenditure on community care in Scotland in each of the next three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No such estimates are available. Community care can take a number of forms and expenditure may arise for health boards, local authorities and central Government (through the social security system).

Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the establishment figures, (b) the funded establishment figures and (c) the in-post figures of Carstairs state hospital for each nursing grade employed; and if he will publish, for each grade category, the number of employees in full-time posts, the number of part-time employees and the whole-time equivalents of those part-time employees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The establishment figure is based on a patient population of 230. The current patient population is 210. The information is given in the following table:

Grades	Establishment 1987-88	Funded establishment 1987-88	Staff in post at 29 February 1988

[1] Whole-time equivalent 1·25.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the establishment figures, (b) the funded establishment figures and (c) the in-post figures of each health board in Scotland for the following nursing grades: regional nursing officer 1 and 2, regional nurse 1 and 2, district nursing officer grades 1 to 7, director of nursing services grades 1 + to 6, senior nurse grades 1 + to 8, sister I, sister II, health visitor, deputy nursing sister, staff nurse, senior enrolled nurse, enrolled nurse, nursing auxiliary/assistant; and if he will publish, for each grade category, the number of employees in full-time posts, the number of part-time employees and the whole-time equivalent of those part-time employees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not held centrally about health boards' establishments or funded establishments for nursing staff. Table 1 sets out for each health board in Scotland at March 1987 the whole-time equivalent numbers of staff in post in the grades that correspond as closely as possible to the categories set out in the question. Some of these categories are specific to the English situation. Information about numbers of employees in full-time posts and about part-time employees in each health board at March 1987 could be made available from central records only at disproportionate cost. Table 2 sets out for Scotland as a whole and for the same grades the number of staff in full time posts, the number in part-time posts and the whole-time equivalent of those employed part time.

Pupils (Behaviour)

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils were excluded from school on account of bad behaviour in each of the past five school years; and if he will give the figures for each year for each education authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Forestry

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his most recent estimate of the area of annual new planting of trees in the United Kingdom over the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's aim is traditional planting at the rate of 33,000 hectares a year. In addition, the proposed farm woodland scheme will provide for the planting of 36,000 hectares in the period of three years from its introduction.

Students (Allowances)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish full details of students allowances for session 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I announced the main rates of student grant for the 1988-89 academic year in response to a question from my hon. Friend on 18 December 1987, at columns 819-20.

I am publishing today the supplementary grant rates for the 1988-89 session. The increases in these rates are broadly in line with the 4 per cent. increase in the main rates. In addition, there are three minor changes in the terms of the students allowances scheme, namely:

(i) All student pension income will be disregarded up to a limit of £2,000;

(ii) a student who reaches the third anniversary of his or her marriage during a course will be given independent status with effect from his or her next award; and

(iii) unpaid placements will not count towards the length of a previous course for the purposes of the "previous study" requirements.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce any change to the 1987-88 cash limit for local authority non-housing capital expenditure.

Mr. Rifkind: The 1987-88 cash limit figure has been increased from £437·8 million to £443·8 million to reflect the £6 million in supplementary capital allocations issued in December to local authorities to assist with the capital costs of implementing the community charge.

Personal Information (Access)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when consultation will take place on the regulations to be made under section 3 of the Access to Personal Files Act 1987 in respect of access for individuals to manually maintained records containing information relating to themselves held by local authority social work departments in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Proposals for the making of these regulations were issued today and a copy of the consultative paper and a list of bodies to which it is addressed has been placed in the Library of the House. The paper has been issued to local authorities in Scotland, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and those voluntary organisations principally concerned with the interests of social work client groups whose records are likely to be held by local authorities and others representing more general consumer interests. A response has been requested by 27 May.

The right of access provided under these proposals is in line with that already available in relation to local authority records of the same type under the Data Protection Act 1984. The proposals include a safeguard that information may be withheld if access is likely to result in serious harm to the physical or mental health, or emotional condition, of the individual requesting access, or to another person.

It is proposed that local authorities will be able to charge an access fee of up to a maximum of £10.

Pollution

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to combat air and water pollution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The Scottish Office is actively engaged in a large number of measures to deal with pollution of all kinds. For example we played a full part in the policy and administrative preparations for the North sea conference of Ministers in London in November, including the organisation of the preliminary international meeting of senior officials in Edinburgh, and we are now taking action to implement the measures agreed by Ministers at the conference; these are listed in the declaration, of which a copy is available in the Library.

We identified for the first time 23 Scottish waters in terms of the EC bathing waters directive, and these are being monitored to ensure compliance with the directive's standards.

We have tackled particular water pollution problems as necessary, for example by placing restrictions on the use of TBT anti-fouling paints on small boats and fish cages.

In the field of air pollution, we are maintaining a close watch on the implementation in Scotland of the EC directives relating to air pollution; encouraging, and paying grants to, local authorities which carry out smoke control measures under the clean air acts; and actively considering comments received on the Government's paper on the review of air pollution legislation in Great Britain. We have also commissioned research projects on specific air pollution questions in Scotland.

If the hon. Member has any particular aspect in mind, he may like to write to me or to my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the measures his Department is taking to encourage a reduction in the emission of pollutants which cause acid rain.

Mr. James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The reduction of acid-producing emissions has to be approached on a national and international basis. The reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) on 16 November 1987, at column 185, outlined the reduction in United Kingdom emissions since 1970 and the specific measures being taken by the CEGB to reduce emissions from some major power stations. These measures will be of particular benefit in reducing acidification in Scotland, which receives a major part of its acid-producing emissions from elsewhere. In relation to Scottish emissions, the use of low sulphur coal in the two major SSEB coal-fired stations, and the high level of hydro and nuclear electricity generation, considerably reduce the level of acid-forming pollutants produced in Scotland. We are, however, keeping the position under review.

Patients (Spending)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average annual expenditure per patient in Scotland in 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 February 1988]: It is not possible to provide a meaningful overall average cost per patient. However, information on the cost of in-patient and out/day-patient treatment based on the statistical information produced annually and contained in the publication "Scottish Health Service Costs" is given in the table:

Average annual cost (1986-87)

In-patient case	1,177·90
Out-patient attendance	12·65
Accident and emergency attendance	17·54
Day patient[1] attendance	29·06
Day case[2] attenance	64·36

[1] Defined as a patient who attends a day hospital or day facility from outwith the hospital on a regular basis.

[2] A patient using a hospital facility during the course of a day for investigation, operative procedure or other treatment, who requires some form of preparation, period of recovery or observation and who does not remain in the facility overnight.

Comparison with other countries of the United Kingdom on the basis of these figures is difficult, as average annual expenditure per patient is influenced by the mix of cases treated, the age and sex of patients and a variety of other factors. Scotland, for example, has a higher proportion of the United Kingdom's teaching hospital places and proportionately more patient care takes place within the relatively more expensive teaching hospital environment. Average expenditure per patient also depends on the methods used to allocate hospital running costs between certain categories; for example, in-patients and day cases.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his plans for the Central Electricity Generating Board generation development and construction division, Barnwood, Gloucester, in the context of the proposed privatisation of the electricity industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for discussion with the industry.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Cecil Parkinson: Contracts placed with private sector firms and companies for management or computer consultancy were:

Consultants	Subject
Spencer Stuart	Advice on the selection of UK Atomic Energy Authority Board Member
Valstar Technical Systems Ltd)	Contracts for computing
Gearhart Geodata Service Ltd)	advice and support to the Department's Petroleum Engineering Division

Energy Performance Information

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to the oral answer by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Worcestershire South (Mr. Spicer) of 7 March, Official Report, column 11, he will give the detailed evidence on which was based the assertion that the Danish Government's scheme to provide energy performance information for buildings is not particularly successful; what representations he has received from the Danish Government on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My hon. Friend's remarks were based on the conclusion of a study of the Danish heat survey scheme prepared for the European Commission by independent consultants. I have received no representations from the Danish Government.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East-West Relations

14. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of East-West relations.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We welcome the improved atmosphere of East-West relations. Mr. Shultz and Mr. Shevardnadze met in Washington last week. They fixed dates for the Moscow summit (29 May-2 June). We look for further substantive progress in the key areas of arms control, regional issues and human rights.

Libya and Syria

15. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for relations with (a) Libya and (b) Syria of the revelations at the trial in West Berlin of Christina Endrigkeit, in relation to the bombing of La Belle discotheque.

Mr. Mellor: None, Sir. Christina Endrigkeit is not on trial. I have nothing to add to what my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on 24 October 1986, namely that there is no evidence available to us which implicates Syria or any country other than Libya in the La Belle bombing.

Falkland Islands (BBC Services)

16. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will discuss with representatives of the Legislative Council for the Falklands Islands arrangements for transmission of the external services of the BBC.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to meet representatives of the Legislative Council. The BBC world service can be heard throughout the islands on short wave and further BBC radio material is rebroadcast daily on the FM band by the Falkland Islands broadcasting service and by British forces broadcasting services.

USSR (Foreign Policy)

17. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the implications for Soviet foreign policy of internal protest within the Soviet Union.

Mr. Mellor: Unfortunately the improving Soviet human rights performance has not yet been reflected at the CSCE conference in Vienna. Nationalist tensions clearly have implications for Mr. Gorbachev's policy of openness.

Afghanistan

18. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures have been taken recently to encourage the Soviet Union to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: When I was in Moscow in February I told Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Shevardnadze of the need for the complete withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan this year and our wish to see a neutral, non-aligned and independent Afghanistan. We welcome the efforts of the United Nations Secretary General's personal representative to pave the way for a settlement.

24. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to visit Kabul.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to visit Kabul.

25. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about progress towards a Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: The Soviet Union has expressed its intention to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan. Arrangements for the withdrawal are the subject of proximity talks in Geneva involving Pakistan and the Kabul regime. We have repeatedly called for Soviet withdrawal to be completed within 1988.

Middle East

19. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit the middle east.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans for an early visit to the middle east. I regularly visit the area, and we keep in the closest touch with developments in the region.

43. Mr. Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards a middle east peace settlement.

Mr. Mellor: We support current efforts to promote the convening of an international conference as a framework for negotiations to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict. We hope that all the parties concerned will avoid action which could stifle progress towards a settlement.

50. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy towards the Arab-Israeli conflict in the middle east.

Mr. Mellor: We support current efforts to promote the convening of an international conference as a framework for negotiations to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict. We hope that all the parties concerned will avoid action which could stifle progress towards a settlement.

57. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the Israeli Foreign Minister to discuss the situation in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present for such a meeting.

62. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions he intends to make towards encouraging the Israeli Government to respond favourably to the Shultz plan on the middle east.

Mr. Mellor: We shall continue to stress to the Israeli Government the urgent need for progress towards a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government regarding the proposals for peace negotiations in the middle east put forward by the United States Secretary of State in his letter to the Prime Minister of Israel dated 4 March; and whether that policy has been conveyed to Mr. Shultz and Mr. Shamir.

Mr. Mellor: We support the United States' initiative, and urge the parties to work for progress on this basis. All concerned are aware of our views.

EC-Japan

20. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on recent bilateral discussions between the European Community and Japan.

Mrs. Chalker: Members of the Commission met Japanese Ministers in Tokyo on 2-5 December last year to discuss current issues between the two sides. There have been regular official level meetings since then.

South Africa

21. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1979 about the repeated South African invasions of Angolan territory, the illegal occupation of Namibia and the repression of black South Africans.

Mrs. Chalker: We have been active throughout in urging the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola. As a member of the contact group, we have also been closely involved in negotiations for Namibian independence. We have repeatedly called for an early end to apartheid, and sought to encourage dialogue between all South Africans across the racial divide.

23. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of South Africa concerning the administration of justice in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

32. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the initiatives taken since 1979 by Her Majesty's Government, alone or with member nations of the United Nations or European Community, regarding (a) apartheid in South Africa, (b) the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, (c) the repeated violation of the territory of Angola by South African troops and (d) the funding of mercenary troops in Mozambique.

Mrs. Chalker: We have taken every opportunity bilaterally, with European Community partners, the Commonwealth and through the United Nations to urge on the South African Government the need to end apartheid, to implement the United Nation plan for Namibian independence, to withdraw from Angola, and to pursue a peaceful policy towards her neighbours. We shall continue to do so.

47. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the benefits to the United Kingdom of maintaining normal diplomatic relationships with South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Without diplomatic relations it would not be possible for us to influence the South African Government or to maintain contact with a wide range of opinion in South Africa including many members of the parliamentary and extra-parliamentary opposition, the Churches and trades unions. We use our contacts with the South African Government to seek to persuade them of the need for peaceful but fundamental change, to allow the United Nation plan for Namibian independence to go ahead, and to withdraw from Angola.

61. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet the South African ambassador in London; and if he will make a statement on the recent contacts between his Department and representatives of the South African Government following the decision on the Sharpeville Six of 18 March.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to meet the South African ambassador. On the "Sharpeville Six", I have nothing to add to what I told the House on 16 and 17 March.

66. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government regarding the new restrictions imposed upon certain organisations.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend issued a statement on 24 February condemning these restrictions, following which I summoned the South African ambassador for the same purpose on 25 February. Her Majesty's ambassador at Cape Town has also made plain our views to the South African Government.

France

22. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when last he met the President of France.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last saw President Mitterrand at the NATO summit on 2-3 March although they did not have the opportunity at that time for a substantive discussion.

Iran-Iraq War

26. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest information on developments in the Iran-Iraq war.

Mr. Mellor: Although we have seen nothing on the scale of last year's offensives near Basra, fierce fighting continues in Kurdistan, where there have also been recent claims of the use of chemical weapons. The "war of the cities" involving the exchange of missile attacks on major Iranian and Iraqi cities also continues, resulting in the deaths of many innocent civilians. Attacks on shipping in the Gulf have recently resumed after a three-week lull.

We deplore the continuation of the conflict and call on both sides to implement Security Council resolution 598 immediately, most importantly a complete ceasefire.

56. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress towards achieving a ceasefire in the Gulf conflict.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Security Council issued a statement on 16 March reaffirming the need for immediate implementation of SCR 598, and supporting the Secretary-General's intention of having intensive consultation with emissaries from Iran and Iraq. In parallel, work is continuing on an arms embargo resolution.

China

27. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when last he met the Chinese Foreign Minister; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend had talks with Foreign Ministers Wu on 10-11 March during his visit to the United Kingdom. Their agenda covered a wide range of bilateral and international subjects including East-West relations, disarmament, the middle east and Hong Kong.

63. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Sino-British relations.

Mr. Eggar: During their talks earlier this month my right hon. and learned Friend and the Chinese Foreign Minister noted with satisfaction the excellent state of Sino-British relations. We continue to work closely together on matters relating to Hong Kong, and there is an active programme of commercial, scientific, educational and cultural exchanges between our two countries.

Kampuchea

28. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments in Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: We continue to seek the withdrawal of all Vietnamese forces from Cambodia and a settlement which would allow the Cambodian people to determine their own future, free from outside interference, through free and fair elections.

USSR (Broadcasting)

29. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics about freedom of broadcasting across frontiers.

Mr. Mellor: None. Jamming of the BBC vernacular services to the Soviet Union and Poland has ceased. We hope that the Soviet Union will take steps to end all jamming and will continue to make our views known in appropriate fora.

Persian Gulf

30. Mr. Stokes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what length of stay he envisages for the Gulf task force.

Mr. Mellor: The Armilla patrol will remain in the region for as long as British shipping remains under serious threat as a result of the Iran — Iraq conflict. However, we keep that presence under constant review and make necessary adjustments in the light of current circumstances.

35. Mr. Peter Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will initiate international discussions to ensure the right of peaceful navigation through the Persian Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: There is already close co-operation between western countries which maintain naval forces in the Gulf in order to help ensure freedom of navigation. We encourage all countries with an interest in the region to contribute by whatever means they can to upholding this vital principle.

EC Foreign Policy

31. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met his colleagues from the Twelve to discuss European political co-operation matters at an informal weekend meeting in Konstanz on 5-6 March, and again on 22 March in Brussels. He expects to discuss these matters with them next on 13 June in Brussels.

Foreign Ministers Meeting (Hamburg)

33. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with what action he proposes to follow up the conference of European and Central American Foreign Ministers in Hamburg.

Mr. Eggar: We continue to give firm support to the peace process. The commitments which the Community and its member states have entered into are recorded in the political and economic communiqués copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

55. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's response to the European Community conference on Central American affairs, held in Hamburg on 29 February.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 4 March at column 742.

USSR

34. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he received from Soviet human rights groups on his recent visit to Moscow.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend met a number of refuseniks and former prisoners of conscience during his visit and accepted representations from them. The Soviet authorities have been left in no doubt of our views on the human rights issues raised and the individual cases concerned.

38. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will be making representations to the Soviet Union about human rights in Armenia and Azerbaijan.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly raise with the Soviet authorities the issue of human rights in the Soviet Union as a whole. Recent events in Armenia and Azerbaijan, particularly the violent clashes which have taken place, are clearly of major concern to the Soviet authorities. We are following closely their efforts to address grievances and defuse tensions in the area.

46. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek a further opportunity of raising with the Soviet Foreign Minister the plight of those long-term refuseniks such as Inna and Yuly Kosharovsky who are still waiting for exit visas.

Mr. Mellor: Yuly Kosharovsky was among the refuseniks with whom my right hon. and learned Friend met during his recent visit to the Soviet Union. Inna and Yuly Kosharovsky are among the cases about which we have repeatedly expressed our concern to the Soviet authorities. We shall continue to take every possible opportunity to raise with them the plight of the refuseniks.

49. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes there have been in the Soviet Union, during the period of glasnost, in the numbers of dissidents obtaining exit visas.

Mr. Mellor: During 1987 more than 8,000 Soviet Jews, 15,000 Germans and several thousand Armenians left the Soviet Union, a considerable increase over previous years. While we welcome these signs of greater freedom of movement, the fundamental change in Soviet policy towards freedom of emigration which we seek is still absent. We shall continue to press the Soviet authorities to respect the right to emigrate of all Soviet citizens who wish to do so.

54. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Soviet Union on the freedom of religion over the last year.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly make representations to the Soviet Union on freedom of religion, both in bilateral contacts and at the CSCE review conference in Vienna. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister pressed for greater freedom of religion during her talks in Moscow in March last year. My right hon. and learned Friend again raised this issue with the Soviet authorities during his recent visit to the Soviet Union.

60. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made by the Soviet Union, under pressure from Her Majesty's Government, to grant human rights to all its citizens.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North

(Mr. Gale) on 2 March. We continue to press for further improvements in Soviet human rights performance both bilaterally and at the CSCE follow-up meeting in Vienna.

65. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures are being taken by Her Majesty's Government to persuade the Soviet Government to permit Michael Kremen to emigrate.

Mr. Mellor: Michael Kremen's case is among those about which we have expressed concern to the Soviet authorities. My right hon. and learned Friend again raised the issue of Soviet citizens denied permission to emigrate with Mr. Shevardnadze during his talks in Moscow last month.

United States of America

36. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the President of the United States of America to discuss Anglo-American relations.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to see President Reagan when he visits London on 2-3 June after the Moscow summit.

Trinidad and Tobago

37. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago; and what was discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend last saw Prime Minister Robinson at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Vancouver in October 1987. A variety of international and bilateral topics of mutual interest was discussed.

Operation Fire Focus

39. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received from other Governments in relation to Operation Fire Focus.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 2 March at column 587.

Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament

40. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament on the outcome of the recent NATO summit.

Mr. Mellor: No direct representations have been received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament on the outcome of the recent NATO summit.

Chemical Weapons

41. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on progress towards achieving a verifiable worldwide ban on chemical weapons.

Mr. Mellor: Encouraging progress has been made at the chemical weapons negotiations in Geneva. However, complex issues remain to be dealt with, particularly on verification and arrangements for an international inspectorate, if we are to achieve an effective convention.

Falkland Islands

42. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Governor General of the Falklands; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) on 2 March at column 587.

Single European Act

44. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect on the decision-making process within the Community of the Single European Act.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 21 October to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor). Since then, qualified majority voting has led to the adoption of air transport liberalisation measures and the public supplies directive which opens up contract opportunities. It has enabled a common position to be reached by the Council on a number of other single market measures, including non-life insurance and toy safety.

Nicaragua

45. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the recent peace talks in Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: None. However, we welcome the resumption of direct ceasefire talks between the Nicaraguan Government and the Contras, and hope that they will lead to a ceasefire and prevent any repitition of the Nicaraguan incursion into Honduras.

Cyprus

48. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the President of Cyprus in the near future.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend will have talks with President Vassiliou in London on 31 March.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

51. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role his Department has in preparations for the forthcoming review of the working of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The review of the working of the Conference is to be undertaken by the two Governments. My Department will contribute to the preparation and conduct of our part in the review.

NATO—Warsaw Pact (Conventional Forces)

52. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on progress towards reducing the imbalance in conventional forces between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Mellor: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) on 3 February at column 629.

Austria

53. Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in negotiations to associate Austria more closely with the EEC.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Economic Community —Austria free trade agreement of 1972 provides a basis for economic co-operation. EC-EFTA ministerial meetings take place regularly to promote co-operation in specific fields. Progress has been made recently in areas of interest to Austria, including transit procedures and frontier controls.

Japan

58. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the current state of Anglo-Japanese relations.

Mr. Eggar: None. Anglo-Japanese relations are excellent.

South-east Asia

59. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to seek to make an official visit to south-east Asia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend will make official visits to Malaysia (5-7 April), Singapore (7-9 April) and Brunei (9-10 April). The purpose of these visits is to build on the excellent relations which exist between the United Kingdom and the three Commonwealth countries of south-east Asia, and to discuss a range of regional and international issues.

Mauritius

64. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Mauritian high commissioner; and what was discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and Learned Friend met the Mauritian high commissioner on 15 January during his intitial call as the new high commissioner for Mauritius in London. Topics of mutual interest were discussed.

Refugee Camps

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often during the past 10 years Her Majesty's Government have made formal representations to the Governments of (a) Jordan and (b) the Lebanon about conditions in the Palestinian refugee camps in those countries; and when was the last occasion in respect of each Government.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. We regularly discuss Palestinian refugee issues with the Jordanian and Lebanese Governments. In February 1987, my right hon. and learned Friend raised with President Gemayel conditions in the refugee camps in Lebanon.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the infant mortality rate in the refugee camps in Gaza and the comparable rates in (a) Syria, (b) Iran, (c) Iraq, (d) the Yemen, (e) the Lebanon and (f) Jordan.

Mr. Mellor: World Health Organisation figures for infant mortality per 1,000 live births in 1987 are as follows:

	Number
Syria	59
Iran	113
Iraq	80
Yemen	[1]137
	[2]135
Lebanon	52
Jordan	54

[1] Peoples Democratic Republic of Yemen.
[2] Yemen Arab Republic.

United Nations Relief and Works Agency's latest estimate is that the infant mortality rate in Palestinian refugee camps in all five areas of operation (Gaza, West Bank, Lebanon, Syria and Jordan) is between 30 and 40 per 1,000 live births.

Nuclear-free Zone

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State of Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government policy on the proposals of the Warsaw pact countries of a nuclear-free corridor along the line of contact between the Warsaw pact and NATO with a width of 300 km and from which all types of offensive weapons would be withdrawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It is our view that such a nuclear-free corridor would not enhance the security of the area. The corridor could still be targeted by weapons based outside and mobile systems could easily be moved back at a time of tension.

Naval Forces (Mediterranean)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conditions he considers are required to accept the Soviet Union proposal of a freeze on naval forces in the Mediterranean from 1 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We cannot support this Soviet proposal. A freeze on naval forces would constrain NATO's ability to reinforce Europe by sea in times of crisis, on which our defensive strategy depends, without significantly affecting the Warsaw pact's military capability.

British Citizens (Belgium)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Belgian Government in connection with the arrest of a number of British citizens in Brussels on 2 March; what representations he has received from the families of those arrested and other interested parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no representations to the Belgian Government. He has received copies of statements from five of the persons who were taken into custody.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will provide information to the Data Protection Registrar, in a way that does not compromise national security, on the number, scope and extent of the certificates that he has signed under section 27 of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Eggar: No. It is not necessary for the Registrar, in the exercise of his responsibilities under the Act, to have these details.

NATO (Flexible Response)

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress was made on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit in seeking to maintain the policy of the flexible response.

Mr. Mellor: The declaration issued by Heads of Government at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit confirms the continuing validity of the Alliance's strategy, which depends on an "appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces which will continue to be kept up to date where necessary."

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the officially stated policy of Her Majesty's Government relating to the claim of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, endorsed by the Arab League and other bodies, to be the sole legitimate representative of the Palestine people; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not accept this claim.

Anglo-Guatemalan Relations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Guatemalan authorities about Anglo-Guatemalan relations.

Mr. Eggar: Both my right hon. and learned Friend and I met the Vice President of Guatemala, Sr. Roberto Carpio Nicolle, on 8 March. Our conversations covered a number of topics, including the nature of our bilateral relationship.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members of Parliament (Allowances)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will carry out a full review of hon. Members' allowances including an assessment of staffing and equipment needs of hon. Members.

Mr. Wakeham: The Top Salaries Review Body carried out a full review of Members' allowances in 1986. There is no case for a further review at present.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) whether he intends to increase hon. Members' research and secretarial allowance in line with inflation in 1988;

(2) whether he has any proposals to increase hon. Members' research and secretarial allowance in 1988.

Mr. Wakeham: The office costs allowance will increase in line with the formula set out in the Resolution of this House of 21 July 1987.

Select Committees (Officials)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether the "Memorandum of Guidance to Officials Appearing Before Select Committees" issued in 1980 is still in use.

Mr. Wakeham: I have today arranged for copies of an updated memorandum of guidance to be placed in the House Libraries. The principles of the 1980 memorandum remain unchanged, though the additional guidance issued in April 1987, on evidence concerning the conduct of civil servants, has been incorporated, as undertaken in Cm. 78.

Procedure Committee Reports

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish in the Official Report a list of Procedure Committee reports for each Session since 1958; and if he will list those reports which were debated on the Floor of the House, together with the date, since that date.

Mr. Wakeham: The following list includes the substantive reports from Procedure Committees, together with their titles or an indication of their subject matter, and the dates on which the reports, or the recommendations made in reports, were debated:

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to reduce the continuing shortage of Welsh medium teachers in all secondary school subjects.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am proposing to introduce a teacher training incentive supplement which I hope will encourage Welsh-speaking graduates to consider teaching as a career. It is designed in particular for those who need some practice and additional language immersion to give them the confidence to use their Welsh in a formal teaching situation.

The supplement, to be paid in addition to the normal mandatory maintenance grant, will be £1,200. Selected students will be expected to attend additional language workshops to improve their command of the language. These additional attendances will take place during the vacation periods.

The scheme will be available in the first instance for secondary post-graduate certificate of education courses at UCW Aberystwyth, UCNW Bangor, University college, Cardiff (home economics), Gwent college of higher education (CDT) and Trinity college Carmarthen (religious education). The scheme is being introduced on a trial basis for 1988 and 1989. If it leads to an increase in the number of students training through the medium of Welsh it could be extended in future years.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Persons

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what programmes are presently in existence to promote the employment of disabled persons; and what initiatives are being considered to encourage employers to hire the handicapped.

Mr. Lee: The Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission promote the employment of people with disabilities through a range of programmes which are designed to assess abilities; determine needs; assist rehabilitation and development of skills; place in employment; and, for people with severe disabilities, provide employment opportunities. These programmes include the Department resettlement service, the quota scheme, disablement advisory service, the code of good practice on employment of disabled people, and sheltered employment programme; and the commission's rehabilitation service, and support for residential training centres. All general programmes administered by the Department and the commission are also open to people with disabilities. Information about the operation of all these programmes was published in the Manpower Services Commission's report for 1986-87. Measures to encourage employers to recruit and retain people with disabilities are the particular responsibility of the Department's disablement advisory service. The effectiveness of measures taken to encourage employers to develop an equal opportunity policy towards people with disabilities will be included in the review of policies and programmes which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced that we would be undertaking during the debate on the Local Government Bill, on Wednesday 19 March at column 346.

Benefits (Income Support)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether individuals who benefit from transitional protection to prevent their benefit being reduced under income support will retain the protection on leaving a place on the adult training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Race and Sex Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what information he has concerning the extent of race and sex monitoring, respectively, among major and minor industries, respectively.

(2) how many and what percentage of the significant private sector employers visited by his Department's race relations advisory service since 1985, have introduced ethnic monitoring arrangements; and how many and what percentage were considering the introduction of such arrangements at the time of the visit.

Mr. Fowler: No detailed information is available on the full extent of race and sex monitoring in the workplace. However for race in the period 1 April 1985 to 31 December 1987, of 374 major private sector employers visited by the Department of Employment's race relations advisory service, 126 (34 per cent.) have introduced or are actively considering the introduction of ethnic monitoring. No records are available to show the number who were already considering such arrangements prior to the visit being made.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will institute an inquiry to ascertain the extent to which (a) race and (b) sex monitoring practices in major and minor industries, respectively, comply with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. Fowler: I have no plans to do so at the present time.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research projects he has commissioned to ascertain the response of industry to the introduction of sex and race monitoring systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: A research project will shortly be commissioned to investigate the benefits that accrue from the introduction of ethnic monitoring systems by employers. In so far as it does not detract from the central focus of the project, the research will cover gender and disability dimensions also.

Tourists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many overseas tourists visited (a) London, (b) the rest of England, (c) Scotland, (d) Northern Ireland and (e) Wales in 1987.

Mr. Lee: The information is not yet available for the whole of 1987. However, in the 12 months to September 1987, overseas residents made 9 million visits to London 7 million visits to the rest of England, 1·4 million visits to Scotland and 0·6 million visits to Wales. A comparable estimate of visits to Northern Ireland is not available.

Tourism (North-West)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to promote job opportunities in tourism in the north-west.

Mr. Lee: My Department works with other Government Departments and the tourist boards to promote the many and varied job opportunities that exist in tourism, and to create the framework which will encourage new jobs. Jobs in tourism are growing at the rate of nearly 1,000 a week all over the country. In the north-west specifically there was a 7 per cent. increase in hotel and catering jobs in the 12 months to September 1987.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what have been the levels of funding for the Health and Safety Executive to carry out research in each of the past three years.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission and Executive are responsible for the provision of funds for research from their overall operational budget. The figures for HSE's spending on research since 1985-86 are:

	£ million
1985-86	5·3
1986-87	5·4
1987-88	[1]5·1

[1] Estimate.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people aged between 16 and 25 years were unemployed on 1 January of each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Lee: The following is the available information, which is also in the Library. The tables show for the date closest to January 1 each year for which data are available, the numbers of unemployed registrants aged 16 to 24 years in the United Kingdom for each year from 1979 to 1982 (table (a)) and the numbers of unemployed claimants in the same age category for each year from 1983 to 1988 (table (b)). The figures are affected by the changes in the coverage of the count.

Table (a)

United Kingdom	Unemployed registrants—aged 16 to 24 years
11 January 1979	524,724
10 January 1980	538,574

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the unemployment figures for the Langbaurgh division in (a) June 1983 and (b) January 1988.

Mr. Lee: On 14 January 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Langbaurgh was 6,800. The corresponding figure for June 1983 was 8,000.

Employment Protection (Complaints)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many complaints under section 19 of the Employment Protection Act have been made to the Central Arbitration Committee in each year since 1977;

(2) how many Central Arbitration Committee declarations had been made under section 19 of the Employment Protection Act for each year since 1977;

(3) how many complaints under section 20 of the Employment Protection Act have been made to the Central Arbitration Committee for each year since 1977; and how many Central Arbitration Committee awards of improved terms and conditions have been made under section 21 of the Employment Protection Act.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is as follows:

Youth Training

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will categorise the main areas of employment currently providing places for YTS trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: At 31 December 1987, 60 per cent. of YTS training was in the main occupational areas of: administrative and clerical; construction and civil engineering; selling and storage; health community and personnel service; mechanical engineering and metal processing.

A further 20 per cent. of training was in motor vehicle repair and maintenance; agriculture; electrical and electronic engineering and catering and food preparation.

YTS places exist in all sectors of the economy, covering almost all occupations. The Manpower Services Commission plans YTS places according to local labour market needs. Two-year YTS is now firmly established and offers all school leavers quality training in modern work skills.

This will be of benefit both to young people and to British industry, which will gain from a better trained, more flexible young work force.

Adult Training

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the new adult training programme will come into operation.

Mr. Fowler: The new programme, which I have decided will be called "Employment Training", will come into operation on 5 September this year. The Manpower Services Commission is now well advanced with its detailed plans for launching the new programme and it has already established contact with a wide range of training providers. This new programme, which will have resources of £1·4 billion, will enable up to 600,000 unemployed people each year to acquire the training they need to fill the job vacancies which are now increasingly available.

Gangmasters

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is now able to give the results of his Department's recent investigations into the activities of gangmasters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: Benefit fraud investigators from my Department, supported by investigators from the Department of Health and Social Security, have now concluded a major investigation into the activities of gangmasters and their workers in Lincolnshire. Of the 600 people investigated, all of whom were drawing benefits as unemployed, between 40 and 60 are likely to face prosecution for offences under social security legislation. Up to 20 of those facing prosecution are likely to be gangmasters. In addition to the likely prosecution cases 300 of the 600 claimants investigated withdrew their claims to benefit during the investigation. Benefit savings from the exercises are likely to total some £330,000.

The Government are determined to reduce abuse of the gangmaster system in the interests both of safeguarding public funds and of protecting legitimate gangmasters and their equally honest employees whose businesses are being undermined by the dishonest in the industry. Further unannounced fraud drives will therefore take place in the areas concerned at regular intervals for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by Manpower Services Commission in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Closed Shops

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the number of union membership agreements or closed shops, approved by ballot, in newspapers, broadcasting and other media since 14 August 1980; and if he will list those media companies where such closed shops currently exist.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department does not have direct access to the information requested. We are aware, however, of two such ballots which have taken place since 14 August 1980. One of the ballots reached the required majority for approval, the other did not.

Job Release Schemes

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the results of the review of the rates of allowance payable under both the job release scheme and the part-time job release scheme.

Mr. Lee: Although the job release scheme closed on 31 January 1988, the allowances will continue to be paid to participants for up to five years. Following our annual review, the allowances payable from 11 April 1988 under the job release schemes will be as follows:

Full-time Scheme

For disabled men who entered the scheme aged 60, 61, 62 and 63:

for those who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week—£75·50 a week, taxable; for all other disabled men £62·15 a week, taxable.

For women who entered the scheme aged 59 and men who entered the scheme aged 64:

for those who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week—£70·25 a week, tax free; for all others £56·05 a week, tax free.

Part-time Scheme

The part-time job release scheme closed on 30 May 1986. However, the rates of allowance for those who entered the scheme on or before that date will be as follows:

For disabled men who entered the part-time scheme aged 60 and 61 and men who entered the part-time scheme aged 62 and 63:

who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week—£44·70 a week, taxable; for all others £37·25 a week, taxable.

(There are no longer any participants receiving the tax-free allowance on the part-time scheme.)

Disability Benefit

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people received (a) provisional assessments; and (b) final assessments of under 14 per cent. in respect of disability benefit in the 12 months prior to September 1986; and what was the total amount paid.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 28 March 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

The information is as follows for the period 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1986.

	Number
Provisional assessments less than 14 per cent.	53,850
Final assessments less than 14 per cent.	[1]55,240

[1] Includes some assessments also shown under provisional assessments

Disablement benefit was paid in most of these cases as a lump sum gratuity. It is estimated that the total amount paid in this period was about £40 million.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people received (a) provisional assessments and (b) final assessments of 14 per cent. and higher in respect of disability benefit in the 12 months following September 1986; and what was the total amount paid.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 28 March 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

To date information on assessments is available only for the six-month period 1 October 1986 to 4 April 1987. It is as follows:

	Number
Provisional assessments 14 per cent. or more	5,175
Final assessments 14 per cent. or more	2,325

The total amount paid on these cases during this period is estimated to be about £5¾ million. Following changes introduced in October 1986 this sum consists mainly of weekly pensions, though it includes some lump sum gratuities.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by regional health authority of the allocation of resources to district health authorities for operations to be conducted by private hospitals to reduce waiting lists for the next financial year.

Mr. Newton: Our policy is that the Health Service and the private sector should co-operate to provide the best possible total health care for all patients. Health authorities provide us with data on contractual arrangements with private institutions annually in arrears. We do not, therefore, have data for the next financial year.

So far 20 projects which will make use of the private sector facilities are in the regional health authorities' programmes for the use of the £30 million waiting list fund for 1988-89.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the waiting list figures for September 1987.

Mr. Newton: I regret to say that there have been continuing difficulties in switching to the new and more detailed information system which have delayed the production of waiting list statistics in a validated form. They will be published as soon as possible after Easter.

Further work is being undertaken to establish whether gaps in the data so far collected by health authorities can be filled.

Mental Patients

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the amounts provided for the forthcoming year by each health region in England and Wales for bridging funds for local care of patients discharged or excluded from mental hospitals; how much in each case is provided for the long-term patients still to be discharged from hospitals and how much for those already discharged from hospitals; and what the time per patient is in each case.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of each regional health authority for the information he is seeking.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy not to announce any decision regarding proposals for hospital or ward closures during the period when the House of Commons is in the summer adjournment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Decisions on the closure of hospitals are taken, and announced, as a part of a formal process over many months involving district health authority discussion and, where appropriate, consideration by the regional health authority and Ministers. It would not be conducive to good Health Service planning and the efficient use of resources to delay formal announcements of closures by Ministers by what could be a further three months in some cases.

Griffiths Report

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to respond to proposals made by Sir Roy Griffiths in his report to the Secretary of State for Social Services, "Community Care Agenda for Action"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 29 March.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Moore: Details of each management or computer consultancy awarded by the Department in 1987 are as follows:

Patients (Treatment Statistics)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each district health authority, regional health authority and special health authority and for England as a whole (a) the number of people readmitted for treatment and tests once during the last year and the proportion of the total case load this figure represents, (b) the number of people readmitted for treatment and tests during the last year and the proportion of the total case load this represents, and (c) the number of people readmitted for treatment and tests more than twice in the last year and the proportion of the total case load this represents.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Abortions

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the results of the study currently being undertaken at the request of his Department into the incidence of post-abortion stress disorder.

Mr. Newton: The collection of data for the joint Royal College of General Practitioners — Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists "Attitudes to Pregnancy" study continued until the end of 1987. The data are still being analysed. It is hoped that some information on the psychiatric sequelae of abortion will be published this year.

Family Credit

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of the extra £220 million being spent on family credit is attributable to the cash compensation for the loss of free school meals.

Mr. Portillo: The net cost of including cash in the children's rates in place of free school meals and free welfare milk, after allowing for the cost of these items which would otherwise arise, is around £65 million. It is not possible to estimate a separate figure in respect of free school meals.

Social Security Act 1986

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what extra resources he plans to make available to his Department's local budgets to implement the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Portillo: Budgets for 1987-88 were increased by some £27 million to provide 3,000 staff for the implementation of the reforms. Thereafter, as the reformed schemes and the computerisation programmes are implemented, the Department's manpower and consequently the budgets will reduce (see Cmnd. 288-II table 15.30).

Dental Treatment

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much the maximum cost of dental treatment has risen in real terms between April 1979 and April 1988.

Mr. Newton: The maximum cost to the patient for a single course of treatment under the general dental service was £30 on 1 April 1979. On 1 April 1988 it will become £150, an increase of 400 per cent. in cash and 160 per cent. in real terms[1].

[1] adjusted in line with the RPI.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much prescription charges have risen in cash and real terms between April 1979 and April 1988.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is set out as follows:

	April 1979 £	April 1988 £	Percentage change Cash	Real[1]
Prescription charge	20	2·60	1,200	577

Smoking

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what medical evidence is available to him about the comparative health risks of (a) smoking cigarettes and (b) ingesting oral tobacco products; and if he will break down this evidence as between the different forms of health risks.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) on 23 March 1988, at columns 153-54.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps Her Majesty's Government now propose to take in the light of the publication of the Froggatt report on passive smoking to persuade smokers to change to alternative methods of ingesting tobacco; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Government do not propose to encourage alternative forms of tobacco consumption, as all common use of tobacco carries a significant risk to health.

Death Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for each year since 1979, the death rate (a) from drowning, (b) from accidents in the home and (c) from road accidents.

Mrs. Currie: Information from the registration of deaths is given in the table. Statistics for 1981 may have been affected by a dispute in the registration service, and are not comparable with other years.

Operations

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list, for each regional health authority in order of frequency, the total numbers of operations performed in each of the following categories in the latest year for which figures are available (a) kidney transplant operations (b) hip replacement operations, (c) heart surgery upon infants, (d) cataract operations, (e) male and female sterilisations and (f) terminations of pregnancy;

(2) what information he has concerning the average National Health Service waiting times in each regional health authority for operations in each of the following categories (a) kidney transplant operations, (b) hip replacement operations, (c) heart surgery upon infants, (d) cataract operations, (e) male and female sterilisations and (f) terminations of pregnancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 24 February 1988]: The total number of kidney transplants performed in 1987, by region, in which the operation was carried out according to information provided by the Unite Kingdom transplant service, is given in table 1. Information on waiting times for kidney transplants is not collected centrally.

Table 2 shows, for the remaining categories, the numbers of patients operated on in National Health Service hospitals in England during 1985 (the latest year for which the figures are available) and the median waiting times, in weeks, of those admitted from a hospital waiting list. These were estimated from a 10 per cent. sample of anonymised hospital records for in-patients and day-case patients.

Spending Power

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish figures, similar to those in his Department's tax-benefit model tables, comparing net weekly spending power for a lone mother with two children aged four and six years, in each of the following circumstances (a) not working, after one year on benefit, (b) earning £20 a week from part-time work, (c) earning £40 a week from part-time work and (d) working full time and earning (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £100, (vi) £110 and (vii) £120 per week under the tax and insurance rates announced in the Budget of 15 March, and the benefit system which will be implemented in April;

(2) if he will publish tables, similar to those in his Department's tax-benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for each of a single wage married couple (i) with two children aged four and six years and (ii) with three children aged three, eight and 11 years earning (a) £60, (b) £70, (c) £80, (d) £90, (e) £100, (f) £110, (g) £120, (h) £130, (i) £140, (j) £150, (k) £160 and (l) £170 under the tax and insurance rates announced in the Budget on 15 March and the benefit system which will be implemented in April.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 16 March 1988]: The information requested is set out in the tables. It should be noted that the results are hypothetical in two senses. First, the results are based on average local authority housing charges and do not reflect the wide variety of rents and domestic rates that people actually pay. Secondly, the other assumptions used are those set out in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits," October 1987.

Mental Handicap Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures will be undertaken by his Department and by local authorities to monitor the quality and effectiveness of community-based services for mentally handicapped people provided by his Department, the voluntary sector, the independent sector and local authorities;

(2) what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that Health Service managers and practitioners are informed of his Department's policy on mental handicap; and what measures are being taken to ensure that they are carrying out the policy.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 16 March 1988]: The Government's policy on the care of mentally handicapped people has been summarised and issued to health authorities and social services departments in a number of publications including "Mental Handicap: Policies and Priorities" under HN(85)2/LASSL (85)6 as annex 2 of the Government's response to the report of the Social Services Select Committee on "Community Care with Special Reference to Adult Mentally ill and Mentally Handicapped People" (November 1985. Cmnd. 9674). We shall be reviewing our community care policies in the light of the Wagner and Griffiths reports and reactions to them, bringing forward our own proposals in due course.

Health authorities are responsible for monitoring their own services. The Department regularly assesses progress and plans through the annual review system. The social services inspectorate maintains liaison with local social services departments, monitors the development of personal social services and helps authorities to improve and maintain standards. The inspectorate has just completed a study of the implementation of the Registered Homes Act 1984, which included 11 visits to authorities and independent homes of which 18 had facilities for mentally handicapped people. The inspectorate has also completed a study of day services for mentally handicapped people in 13 local authorities chosen to be nationally representative and a selected sample of non-statutory provision.

The Department also obtains information about health and social services through visits and reports from the national development team for people with a mental handicap, which advises health authorities and social services departments on the development of their services and draws attention to good practice. In addition, information is also obtained through the central collection of statistics, correspondence, discussions and visits involving private and voluntary provision of care as well as the statutory authorities.

Northern Regional Health Authority

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average cost per accident and emergency attendance in each hospital in the Northern regional health authority in the last year.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 24 March 1988]: The information for 1986-87 in respect of those hospitals in the northern region which undertake treatment of accident and emergency patients is as follows:

Benefits (Refusal)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total number of claimants in the Dundee area who have been refused benefit through the decision of an independent adjudication officer; if he will break this figure down according to the reasons for withdrawal of benefit; and if he will provide the information requested for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 24 March 1988]: Statistics are available only for the number of supplementary benefit decisions where benefit was refused during the period 14 April 1982 to 9 February 1988. There are no corresponding statistics for contributory benefits. The total number of decisions where supplementary benefit was refused for the above period, in the two local offices serving the Dundee area is as follows:

	Dundee East	Dundee West
1982-83	3,964	2,770
1983-84	3,089	2,946
1984-85	2,735	3,129

1986-87	4,731	3,970
1987-88	3,239	2,319

I regret that the reasons for refusal of benefit are not recorded and that no statistics are kept in respect of benefits withdrawn once entitlement has been established.

Departmental Offices, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the amount paid out in single payments at his Department's local offices at Lair Russell house, Vicar lane, Bradford, and Leeds road, Bradford, for 1987; what is the allocation for the social fund for the 12 months commencing in April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 28 March 1988]: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. In the period from 17 December 1986 to 15 December 1987 single payments expenditure at the Bradford, South office was £583,457 and at the Bradford, East office it was £649,893. Information on their social fund budget allocations for the period from 11 April 1988 to 31 March 1989 was contained in my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November 1987, at columns 774-81.

Cancer Incidence

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will ensure that all material relating to the high incidence of child cancer in the Humberside villages of Kirkella Willerby and Analaby is referred to the area statistics unit within the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine; and if, in accordance with its remit, he will request it to report as a matter of urgency;

(2) what progress has been made by the area statistics unit within the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine in identifying and analysing unusal clusters of disease in the neighbourhood of industrial installations; and what material emanating from its work has been, or is intended shortly to be, made public.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 28 March 1988]: The small area health statistics unit (SAHSU) at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine is establishing a computerised data base and, in collaboration with others, developing further methods of analysing health statistics in relation to potential sources of pollution. These advances should in due course greatly strengthen our understanding of such statistics.

Officials from Departments funding the unit met the director and his colleagues at the steering committee on 23 March. The development phase is well advanced and should be completed within two years. Before then the unit will be able to advise on any reports of unusual incidence of disease using more limited means of analysis already available. SAHSU will publish reports of its scientific investigations in the usual way.

My hon. Friend is aware that the East Yorkshire health authority has asked Dr. Ray Cartwright to assess the statistical evidence of local patterns of childhood cancer on Humberside. We await the results of that work, which I am told are expected very quickly. Because of the health authority's initiative and the unit's stage of development, we do not propose to ask SAHSU to investigate the problem reported on Humberside. Once the results are made available, we will take advice as to whether further studies would be helpful.

I understand that my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for waste disposal and sport has instigated an investigation into the radioactive discharges from Capper Pass to be carried out by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average length of stay in hospital for motor cyclists who have sustained serious leg injuries in road accidents.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The information is not currently available centrally.

NHS Patients (Private Treatment)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of National Health Service patients cared for and treated under contractual arrangements with the private sector, by specialty and regions for each year since 1979 and the cost to the regional health authorities.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 10 March 1988, c. 347]: Tables showing the requested information have been placed in the Library. Expenditure by specialty is not collected separately.

TRANSPORT

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to extend the docklands light railway into the London borough of Southwark; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: There are no current plans for such an extension. LRT, with the London Docklands development corporation and British Rail, is examining various possible improvements in rail transport for the London borough of Southwark, including a possible extension of the east London line to Peckham.

Railway Records

Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications for consents to transfers of relics, records or premises under section 144(1)(b) of the Transport Act 1968 he has received since the Act came into force; and if he will give details of those (a) to which he has consented and (b) which related to the area of the former Great Western Railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have received no applications for such consents in recent years. Records are not readily available for earlier periods.

Non-corridor Rolling Stock (Network SouthEast)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will issue a direction to British Rail to withdraw, on grounds of passenger safety, all non-corridor rolling stock from all Network SouthEast routes.

Mr. David Mitchell: Deployment of rolling stock is a matter for BR in the light of its statutory obligations, but I have discussed the recent tragic murder with Sir Robert Reid. I understand that all non-corridor rolling stock will be phased out by 1991. In the meantime it is used only on a limited number of lines and normally only at peak times. Even off-peak, non-corridor compartment coaches account for only part of the train, so that passengers have a choice between compartment and open coaches. BR is taking steps to bring this choice to passengers' attention and is considering whether further measures might be appropriate.

Kelsall Bypass

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for improving safety on the Kelsall bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following the two recent fatal accidents we have asked Cheshire county council, as our agents, to look at what might be done to improve safety. I expect its report shortly and will let my hon. Friend know what we decide.

A51 (Chester Bypass)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for constructing a bypass round Chester on the A51; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our only proposal for a bypass round Chester is on the A41 east of the city. This will include a new junction with the A51. Line and side roads orders were recently confirmed and construction could start next year.

Private Companies (Safety)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to seek to extend his powers to enforce safety improvements on private companies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We regularly seek to foster the safe movement of people and goods.

Transport Safety

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to produce a White Paper on transport safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 14 March, at column 476, to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott).

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Comprehensive records of all contracts with consultancy firms are not held centrally. It would be disproportionately expensive to collect all the information required. The following list identifies those management and computing consultancies which began in 1987 and are valued at £10,000 or more.

Firm	Subject of Assignment

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The total amount spent by the Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases, was £2·3 million.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total cost of administering the collection of vehicle excise duty in the latest year for which figures are available, broken down by (a) collection, (b) detection of evasion, (c) prosecution and (d) other.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A breakdown of costs in the form requested cannot be provided. The function of licensing vehicles and collecting vehicle excise duty (VED) cannot readily be separated from the function of running a register of vehicles. The total cost of performing these functions together in the United Kingdom in 1986-87 was £99 million. Some £8 million to £9 million of that was Department of Transport costs of detecting, pursuing and prosecuting VED evaders. Police and traffic wardens contribute substantially to the detection of VED evasion in the course of their normal duties, and costs are likewise incurred by the Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total revenue collected from vehicle excise duty in the most recent year for which figures are available; what estimates he has of the total revenue owing but not collected in that year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The net amount of vehicle excise duty collected in the United Kingdom in 1986-87 was £2,520 million. Estimated loss of revenue for that period through evasion (based on the evidence of a 1984 survey) was about £105 million. The Government are determined to increase the effectiveness of enforcement action against VED evasion. In 1986-87 £23 million was recovered in fines, back duty and out-of-court settlements, more than twice the 1982-83 total. Campaigns are an effective way of deterring evasion. Fifteen campaigns have been held during 1987-88, and 14 are already planned for the rest of the calendar year 1988.

A38 (Roadworks)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the locations of all roadworks on the A38 (Exeter to Plymouth section); whether they are on the eastbound or westbound carriageway; what is the nature of the work; when the work was started; who the contractors are on each section; what is the contract completion date on each section; and what is the cost involved.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The current roadworks are two central reserve safety barrier installations: for 3 miles at Drumbridges; and for 2·8 miles at south Brent.

Over parts of these sections one lane of both east and west-bound carriageways is closed as the work progresses. Both sections started last October and were due to be completed in February. Because of poor ground conditions work on the Drumbridges section is not now expected to be completed until the end of April. Work at south Brent should be completed before Easter. The contractor for both sections is Colas Roads Ltd. and the total cost is £576,000.

Ferries (Safety)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received on the safety of ro-ro ferries.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend receives frequent representations about ferry safety from organisations and individuals.

M40

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest estimate of the completion date of the M40 motorway; and whether final decisions have been taken as to the number of lanes in each carriageway throughout its length.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the outcome of the public inquiry held recently into the Waterstock-Wendlebury section, we plan to complete the whole of the M40 extension from Oxford to Birmingham during 1991.

The sections north of Wendlebury will be dual three-lane standard. Between Waterstock and Wendlebury, where traffic flows are forecast to be much lower, we are proposing dual two-lane standard but with the scheme designed to accommodate provision of third lanes when warranted by traffic levels. The question of standards on this section was discussed in detail at the recent inquiry. We are currently awaiting the inspector's report.

North Report

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the North committee report on road traffic laws will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 22 March, at column 61, to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs).

Public Service Obligation Grant Cash Ceiling

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make an announcement about the public service obligation grant cash ceiling for 1988-89.

Mr. Channon: For 1988-89, the cash ceiling on PSO grant, will be £605 million. For the first time this year the grant will be for the Network SouthEast and provincial sectors only. The figure of £605 million makes full provision for worthwhile investment to improve quality of service and increase efficiency.

Heathrow and Gatwick

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to respond to the report of the committee, chaired by Mr. Christopher Tugendhat, on runway utilisation at Heathrow and Gatwick.

Mr. Channon: I have responded today. Copies of my letter to Mr. Tugendhat and of the report which was published today by the Civil Aviation Authority have been placed in the Library.

InterCity

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he has made to the directions given to the British Railways Board under section 3 of the Railways Act 1974, in view of the objective that InterCity should cease to be eligible for grant from 1 April of the current year.

Mr. Channon: I have now issued a direction under section 3 of the Railways Act 1974 which excludes InterCity services from the passenger service obligation. As a result, that sector will no longer be eligible for grant, in accordance with the objectives agreed with Sir Ronald Reid in 1986. The new direction, which replaces that issued in 1974, also clarifies the status of subsequent developments in the board's activities. These changes do not mark any change of policy towards the services provided by the British Railways Board, or in the resources available to them.

A copy of the direction has been placed in the Library of the House.

National Bus Company

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the National Bus Company's disposal programme.

Mr. David Mitchell: I yesterday approved the sale of the National Bus Company's London Country (North East) subsidiary to Parkdale Holdings plc and Mr. Alan Stephenson, a bus operator. I understand that, subject to the approval of Parkdale's shareholders, the sale is likely to be completed before the end of April. This will mark the conclusion of the privatisation of NBC's bus operations.

The substantial completion of privatisation, well before the statutory deadline, is a remarkable achievement. I am particularly pleased that the outcome of the privatisation has so clearly vindicated our decision to sell NBC's operations by means of the separate disposal of individual subsidiaries. Seventy subsidiaries have now been sold, 52 of them local bus operating companies. Some 40 of the companies have been bought by management or employee teams; and many of the sales have included provision for employee share schemes or profit-sharing schemes. NBC privatisation has helped to make a reality of our policy of spreading wealth in the community instead of concentrating it in the hands of the state.

Separate sales have also achieved their objective of promoting competition in the bus industry. There are already numerous examples of ex-NBC subsidiaries competing with each other to provide better services for bus passengers up and down the country. Privatisation has thus reinforced and enhanced the success of our policy of bus deregulation.

Finally, separate sales have proved good for proceeds. Individual sale prices are not being disclosed for commercial reasons; but I hope to make a statement to the House as soon as practicable on the aggregate proceeds of the disposal programme.

In recording the success of the NBC privatisation I pay tribute to the board of NBC and in particular to the chairman of the company, Mr. Rodney Lund; to the board member responsible for privatisation, Mr. Christopher Campbell; and to their negotiating team who have worked so hard and so successfully over the past two years.

Passenger Transport Authorities

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has considered the responses to his proposal for passenger transport authorities to bill their districts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I have considered carefully all the views expressed by local authorities, their associations and others in response to my Department's discussion paper. Although most respondents disliked our proposals, they did so on the grounds that the proposals will lead to mass secession from PTAs by district councils; we do not consider this will happen but will treat any applications on their merits. Moreover, their response has confirmed our view that the proposal will deliver valuable gains in accountability. The Government, therefore, intend to introduce appropriate amendments to the Bill on Report to effect the change. I have today placed copies of the responses to the discussion paper in the Libraries of both Houses.

Cabotage

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the share of the United Kingdom cabotage market held by British shipping: and whether there is any information available as to the value of the market.

Mr. Channon: British-flagged shipping was estimated to have some 72 per cent. of the total United Kingdom cabotage market (by value) in 1986, the last year for which information was available. The United Kingdom has 59 per cent. of the cargo cabotage, 93 per cent. of the passenger cabotage and 73 per cent. of the offshore supply markets. In addition, up to a further 5 per cent. of the total traffic carried in foreign-flagged vessels may have been beneficially owned by United Kingdom nationals. Other EC states accounted for 12 per cent. of the total market. The value of the total United Kingdom cabotage market is estimated to be in the order of £440 million.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what area of the body is most often seriously injured amongst motor cyclist casualties.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 29 March 1988]: Over 60 per cent. of all serious injuries to motor cyclists are to the legs. It is estimated that leg protectors could transfer 40 per cent. of leg injuries from the serious category to slight and eliminate 30 per cent. of slight leg injuries.

Portsmouth City Transport

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a decision on the application for sale of Portsmouth City Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The Secretary of State has decided to grant his consent to the application from Portsmouth city council for the sale of Portsmouth City Transport Ltd. to Southern Vectis.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many homeless persons in Northern Ireland have previously been admitted to hospital with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses;

(2) how many homeless persons in Northern Ireland have previously been admitted to mental hospitals; and what this figure represents as a percentage of the total number of homeless persons in Northern Ireland;

(3) how many residential places in the community will be provided for those discharged from mental hospitals in Northern Ireland in each of the next seven years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what experiments in hospital hostels for discharged mental patients have been conducted in Northern Ireland; what lessons have been learnt; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Hospital hostels are regarded as part of the psychiatric hospital provision and do not accommodate patients who have actually been discharged. The hostels cater for some patients as part of their rehabilitation programmes. Experimentation with rehabilitation programmes using hospital hostels and other types of facilities is conducted on a continuing basis.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the amounts provided for the forthcoming year in Northern Ireland for bridging funds for local care of patients discharged or excluded from mental hospitals; how much in each case is provided for long-term patients still to be discharged from hospital and how much for those already discharged from hospital; what the figure per new patient is in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of £3·45 million in bridging finance is being allocated to health and social services boards in 1988-89. This consists of two amounts: £2·45 million continued funding for schemes identified by boards in 1987-88 and a further £1 million for new schemes.

These resources are intended primarily to assist in reducing the number of long-stay patients in psychiatric and mental handicap hospitals. However, some of this money will be spent on community facilities such as day hospitals which will also serve those outside hospital.

Bridging finance is only one source of funding for community care schemes, many of which will also involve the voluntary and private sectors. The initiative also involves a wide variety of schemes which are at different stages of development. As a result it is not yet possible to calculate overall costs for each patient involved.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the mental hospitals which are scheduled to (a) open and (b) close in Northern Ireland in each of the next seven years.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans either to open or close any mental hospitals in Northern Ireland over the next seven years.

Rush Park Flats (Damage)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will inquire into the conditions of hallway floors and walls and the lift walls and floors since the contractors moved into the multi-storey blocks of flats at Rush Park, Newtownabbey, County Antrim; whether damage could have been diminished by the use of a small skip inside these buildings as recommended by the tenants to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and its consultants; and whether the use of a small skip would have assisted workmen in clearing up nightly and would have facilitated the caretaker in maintaining high standards of upkeep.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that a skip could not be used inside the multistorey blocks of flats at Rush Park, Newtownabbey. Doors would have had to be removed and the lifting of the skips would have been impossible. Each floor being worked on is cleaned on a daily basis by the contractor who removes all debris to outside skips.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will inquire into the level of nuisance and disturbance, damage and general uncleanliness experienced at Rush Park, Newtownabbey, during installation of economy seven, rewiring and fitting new kitchens; what standards of work and cleanliness for work carried out by contractors for public bodies his Department lays down; and what procedures he advises the Northern Ireland Housing Executive tenants to follow when they observe damage being caused by contractors to floors, walls, lifts and security doors in blocks of flats or other property.

Dr. Mawhinney: These are matters for the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the level of disturbance experienced at Rush park, Newtownabbey, is commensurate with a major contract of this type. Standards of work and cleanliness are set by the Housing Executive within contract documentation. All materials must be to the Executive's approved specification and works must be executed by competent tradesmen in workmanlike manner and to the satisfaction of the supervising officer in all respects. The contractor is responsible for removal of rubbish, debris, sawdust and surplus material, and so on, from the site, both as it accumulates from time to time and at completion. Prior to work commencing tenants were advised at a series of meetings of the procedures to follow if they observed damage being caused by the contractor. They were informed that details should be reported to the Housing Executive district office or to the clerk of works who is regularly on site.

Cairdhu Hospital

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the present position regarding the future of Cairndhu hospital, Larne; and whether this property will be transferred to Larne borough council.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Sir Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon hospital (Cairndhu) was closed on 1 June 1986 and action to dispose of the property was begun shortly thereafter. However, the conditions under which the hospital was orginally donated may affect its disposal and the matter has been referred to the Chancery court.

I am aware of Larne borough council's interest in acquiring the property and will bear its interest in mind.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will request, through his nominees on the Eastern health and social services board, an immediate and considerable improvement in the time taken to reply to letters from right hon. and hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance was issued to boards in June 1985 on the target time scale for replying to inquiries of this type, and in the light of the right hon. Gentleman's question I will remind boards of their obligations in this matter.

If the right hon. Gentleman has any specific complaints he would like to raise with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for health matters, he would be glad to pursue them.

Windscale (Radioactive Fallout)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what actions the Government of Northern Ireland took in 1957 and 1958 to warn the people of Northern Ireland regarding the radioactive fallout from Windscale in October 1957; and what provisions were made to safeguard the health and welfare of the populace in Northern Ireland at that time.

Dr. Mawhinney: No warning action was considered necessary because the radioactive material released was carried in a southerly direction across England and Wales before travelling into parts of northern Europe. It did not therefore pose any threat to Northern Ireland.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the locations in Northern Ireland where readings of radioactive fallout were taken following the fire at No. 1 pile at Windscale in October 1957; and if he will publish the results and dates of such readings.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am not aware of any readings of radioactivity having been taken specifically in relation to the Windscale fire in October 1957. The routine monitoring of milk at that time for Strontium 90 indicated levels which were of no radiological significance for the population of Northern Ireland. As I have indicated in reply to a previous question from the hon. Gentleman, there was no threat to Northern Ireland from this incident, and therefore no additional monitoring action was deemed necessary.

Trade Refuse Collection

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those district councils which, in addition to the rates, impose an additional charge per week on ratepayers for the collection of trade refuse from their commercial and industrial premises.

Dr. Mawhinney: As there is no duty on district councils in Northern Ireland to notify the Government whether or not they charge for waste collection, the information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Brucellosis

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which dates since 24 January 1987 the dairy herd of Messrs. T and J. J. Rainey, 256-62 Ballygowan road, Crossnacreery, Belfast, has been tested for brucellosis; and on which dates the results were made available to the herd owners.

Dr. Mawhinney: Twelve animals in this herd were tested on 10 March 1987 and retested on 24 March 1987. The herd owner was verbally advised of the results by Department of Agriculture staff on 19 March 1987 and 3 April 1987 respectively. The annual brucellosis herd test was completed on 28 October 1987. Results of annual tests are notified to herd owners only when a positive or inconclusive reaction occurs. All of these tests were negative.

Community Care

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate for expenditure on community care in Northern Ireland in each of the next three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Current accounting procedures do not readily allow for separate identification of expenditure on community care, a term which itself is open to interpretation. It is estimated, however, that approximately 26 per cent. of health and social services boards' expenditure, £624 million, is currently allocated to community services. Under the regional strategy for the period 1987 to 1992 it is envisaged that this proportion will rise to 30 per cent. by 1992.

Community Programme

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if subsidised work presently carried out by individuals on community programmes puts at risk in any way the viability of small businesses employing craftsmen and tradesmen.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. ACE sponsors must satisfy the Department of Economic Development that proposed projects do not threaten existing businesses or put at risk existing jobs.

Homes (Insulation)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement detailing the number of homes insulation grants made in each of the past three years and the total amounts of money expended.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

Date	Grants made	Expenditure £
April 1985 to March 1986	4,800	333,647
April 1986 to March 1987	5,400	346,472
April 1987 to January 1988	3,146	220,284

Orthotists

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing for each area board the number of orthotists in post for each of the last five years for which figures are available; what plans he has to increase the number of orthotists in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the orthotics service in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: In Northern Ireland the prosthetic orthotic and aids service is administered by the Eastern health and social services board as a regional service supplying artificial limbs (prostheses) and appliances (orthoses). The figures requested are as follows:

Prosthetist/Orthotist

Year	Number
1983	4
1984	5
1985	5
1986	5
1987	5

Under powers conferred by statute the Department of Health and Social Security has delegated to health and social services boards its functions of providing or securing the provision of integrated health services designed to promote the health and social welfare of the people of Northern Ireland. It is for the Eastern board to decide how best to provide this particular service in the light of its assessment of need and other competing demands.

Health Care (Report)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the report entitled "A Survey of Expertise in the Northern Ireland Health Care Sector" written by United Medical Enterprises on behalf of the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 March 1988]: Yes.

Mairead Farrell

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of student grant was awarded to Mairead Farrell, in respect of her course at Queen's university, Belfast.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 March 1988]: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply given to a question by the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 18 March 1988, at column 686.

Castle Court Development, Belfast

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much public finance is being allocated for the building of the Castle Court development in Belfast, and what percentage this figure is of the total cost.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 March 1988]: The Government have offered support of up to £10 million to John Laing Developments Ltd. towards the cost of the Castle Court project. This represents 18·18 per cent. of the estimated total development cost of £55 million. The £10 million will support a profit level of up to 15 per cent. of development costs. After this point the Government will share the profits equally with Laings.

Higher Education Grants

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to monitor grants of public funds to those in higher education who have active sponsorship of terrorist organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 March 1988]: None.

Teachers (Leave of Absence)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will discuss with education and library boards the case for provision for leave of absence without pay for teachers accompanying a husband or wife who has been selected to represent Northern Ireland at a business promotion or marketing conference overseas, where requests for such leave occur not more than once in five years and the school principal can make satisfactory arrangements to cover the absent teacher; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 March 1988]: I have no plans to do so. This is, in the first instance, a matter for the employing authority, and where leave of absence without pay is recommended by the authority it is usual practice for the Department of Education for Northern Ireland to approve.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Free Food Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount of food which to date has been issued to the needy under the free food scheme for each country and each product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I will provide the hon. Member with the information once the final authorisation for release of food has been given by the Commission.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has placed the following contracts with management and computer consultants in 1987:

Management consultancy contracts

Firm	Subject of Assignment
PA Consulting Services Ltd	1. Support of the ADAS Data Flow project 2. IT Strategic Architecture Study
Hoskyns Group plc	IT Organisation/Resources Study
Peat, Marwick, McLintock	Development & Support of ADAS Work Recording System
Vauntberry Computer Services	Support of ADAS Invoicing System
Mr. P. W. Cunliffe	Review of Animal Medicines Licensing

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances mink farms may operate without a licence.

Mr. Donald Thompson: To keep mink without a licence is an offence under the Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932. However, where discussions are continuing with an applicant in order to ensure satisfactory standards, a prosecution may not be the most appropriate form of enforcement.

Milk Quotas

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the level of milk quotas in England and Wales in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. MacGregor: We announced on 31 March 1987 the arrangements for transferring quota from Great Britain to Northern Ireland. We implemented an outgoers' scheme to obtain sufficient quota to meet this requirement but none was offered. The provisional cut of about 0·3 per cent. that was imposed in 1987-88 will therefore be made definitive because the outgoers' scheme was unsuccessful. Compensation will be paid at the rate already announced; that is, 27·49p per litre spread over seven years.

Turning now to the arrangements for 1988-89, the House will already be aware of the agreement in the Community to reduce quotas permanently by 1 per cent. This is in addition to the 2 per cent. cut imposed in 1987-88. A Community outgoers' scheme to obtain as much as possible of this quantity voluntarily achieved only a very small percentage of the 1 per cent. target quantity required in England and Wales. The balance will now be achieved by making uniform cuts in each producer's quota, compensated at 27·49p per litre spread over seven years. This means that, compared with 1987-88 quotas, the reduction required in England and Wales will be very close to 1 per cent. in both wholesale and direct sales quotas.

Also as a result of Community decisions, the temporary suspension of wholesale quotas in 1987-88 was 4 per cent. of 1986-87 allocations. This will be replaced by a suspension of 5½ per cent. of 1986-87 allocations in 1988-89. Producers will be compensated for this at the rate of 6·8p per litre.

The Government's policy has been to maximise the amount of quota which producers can use by allocating the whole national quantity; this means that if new requirements arise there is no pool of quota from which they can be drawn. Some small additional adjustments are now needed within England and Wales to allow for various needs. These include the award of quota to the beneficiaries of expropriated land awards and those producers who have successfully pursued judicial reviews of allocations made to them by the Dairy Produce Quota Tribunal. It would be prudent to reduce all quotas by about one thousandth (0·1 per cent.) to meet these requirements. This will be done on a provisional basis pending a final assessment of the amount of quota actually required to meet the needs which I have mentioned.

Finally, an amendment is also being made to the prescribed quota per hectare under the end of tenancy compensation provisions. This will reflect the compulsory 1 per cent. reduction in quotas required as from 1 April 1988 and the provisional cut mentioned above. This is in accordance with the assurances regarding adjustments to standard quota given in the House of Lords on 2 July 1986.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting on 28 and 29 March in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Council of Agriculture Ministers met in Brussels on 28-30 March 1988. I represented the United Kingdom.

The major business at this meeting was to conclude discussion on a stabiliser for the wine sector necessary to complete the European Council summit package on agriculture. The negotiation was long and difficult. I had to resist strong pressure from wine-producing countries to weaken the proposals, but I am pleased to report to the House that the Council finally agreed that a much more rigorous price should be set for the quantity of surplus wine which producers are required to send for distillation. Under the arrangements agreed, the price paid to producers for this obligatory distillation will be reduced by more than half. This severe drop in price support will encourage producers to reduce production by grubbing up part or all of their vineyards. Those who opt to do so will be eligible for single payments and may be exempted from the obligation to distil a proportion of their wine production. This is a tough arrangement to tackle costs and surpluses in this sector and is fully consistent with the outcome of the European Council.

The Commissioner for Agriculture formally presented his price proposals for 1988 and Ministers had a first exchange of views on them. I made clear the importance the Government attach to the Community pursuing a strict price policy and containing the cost of the price settlement within the guideline agreed by the European Council. I stressed the current level of negative monetary compensatory amounts in the United Kingdom, reminded the Council of my strong support for the Commission objective of the removal of MCAs by 1992 and argued for measured steps towards their objective this year. Specifically on pigmeat, I pressed for complete devaluation of the United Kingdom green rate in the pig sector where monetary compensatory amounts are clearly causing market distortion.

The Council reached agreement on new terms for pigmeat production aids. I continue to believe that it is wrong to have Community financing of grant-aided schemes which encourage pig production at a time when the pig sector is under pressure and the Community is more than self-sufficient. I would have liked to see these grants phased out immediately but a majority of member states were in favour of retaining them. However, by continuing to press our case I succeeded in considerably reducing their impact on pig production from the end of March, by reducing the number of pig places per holding eligible for grant. The grants will also now cease on 31 December 1990 unless the Council decides otherwise.

The Council adopted two proposals for revision of production aid for olive oil. Under this system, on current estimates of the last harvest aid will be cut this season by 11 per cent.

In the absence of agreement on price levels for milk and beef for the coming marketing years, which were due to begin on 1 and 4 April respectively, the Council agreed to extend the current marketing years for those commodities to 30 April.

Potatoes

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has determined the market support prices for potatoes to apply in Great Britain for the 1988-89 crop year beginning on 1 July.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Agriculture Ministers have consulted the farmers' unions about the market support arrangements to apply for the 1988-89 crop year. Ministers have decided to authorise the Potato Marketing Board to enter into pre-season contracts with producers to purchase not more than 300,000 tonnes of potatoes over the period November 1988 to May 1989 at a scale of prices not exceeding a weighted average of £53 per tonne. Within the 300,000 tonnes limit the board is free to decide what tonnage to place under contract. We have also authorised the board to intervene directly on the market throughout the season where this will ensure that support can be carried out more cheaply than by purchasing under contract, provided that the total intervention during 1989-90 does not exceed 500,000 tonnes. The target area for potato plantings in Great Britain, another important factor in market stability, was fixed last July at 156,000 hectares.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review his current methods of monitoring for radioactivity post-Chernobyl, in view of the recent discoveries of high levels of radioactivity in soil.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 28 March 1988]: The principal objective of my Department's monitoring programme is to ensure the safety of foodstuffs. Whilst my Department is constantly reviewing its methods in the light of scientific and other developments, radioactivity levels in soils are only indirectly related to the level of radioactivity in food.

ADAS Advice

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers received respectively, commercial advice and advice on conservation and pollution, animal welfare and diversification, at their own request, from Agricultural Development and Advisory Service officials in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 29 March 1988]: Information is not available in the form requested. ADAS advisers have provided farmers with advice on animal welfare, environmental affairs and other relevant subjects in the course of advising on other matters and during special visits.

Free Food Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the local authorities and voluntary organisations that have indicated a willingness to participate in the European Community free food scheme in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 18 March 1988]: I am currently considering applications for designation under the scheme received from a number of charitable and other organisations and from certain local authorities. I shall announce the list of designated organisations as soon as possible.

Rylands Library (Manchester)

Mr. Robert Sheldon: To ask the Minister for the Arts what action he proposes to take to ensure that books from the Rylands library in Manchester are retained in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: I do not control sales from individual libraries. However, any book which has been in this country more than 50 years and which is valued at over £16,000 requires an individual export licence. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has statutory responsibility for export licensing.

Library Subscription Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) of 28 March, Official Report, column 722, how many letters he has received from members of the public saying that they would like libraries to provide subscription services.

Mr. Luce: I receive many letters from the public about the public library service either directly or through hon. Members. I regret it is not possible to count and analyse all of them. A significant proportion however recommend the replacement of the present free book loan service by a system of charging, often involving an annual subscription. Some letters, recognising the educational role of the service, have suggested that charges are limited to novels.

Libraries (Premium Lending Service)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) of 28 March, Official Report, column 722, which library authority recently drew up proposals to set up a premium lending service for newly published novels and biographies.

Mr. Luce: It is not my practice to disclose the identity of library authorities that seek my advice in confidence.

South Bank Arts Estate

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what arrangements are being made for the future of the South Bank arts estate.

Mr. Luce: The Chairmen of the Arts Council and of the South Bank board have asked my consent to the setting up of an independent charitable trust to administer the south bank. With the agreement of the Lord President of the Council I have given my consent, to be effective from 1 April 1988. The charitable trust to be known as the South Bank Centre will assume the powers hitherto exercised by the South Bank board as a committee of the Arts Council. The sole trustee of the South Bank Centre will be a public limited company to be called the South Bank Board Limited, and the Arts Council will grant a lease of the south bank estate to that company, in its capacity as trustee, at a nominal rent.

A report on the discharge of the responsibilities of the South Bank Centre, and its accounts, will be laid before Parliament annually, as provided by section 47 of the Local Government Act, 1985. The Accounts will of course continue to be certified by the Comptroller and Auditor General.

I have appointed Mr. Ronald Grierson, who is at present chairman of the South Bank board, to be the chairman of the South Bank Centre for three years from 1 April 1988. The other members of the South Bank board have been appointed, with my approval, to be members of the South Bank Board Limited.

As I undertook in an answer to a question by the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 14 March, at column 432, I shall be placing a copy of the trust deed setting up the South Bank Centre in the Library as soon as it has been executed.

WALES

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many households are in receipt of an education maintenance allowance for 16 to 19-year-olds in full-time school or further education; what is the average payment; which local education authorities are making such payments; and how many each authority has made in the last financial year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Not all of this information is held centrally in the form requested. The only authorities which have reported expenditure on such payments in 1986-87 are Clwyd, Gwent, Mid Glamorgan and Powys.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of his Department's budget is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Peter Walker: Separate figures are not readily available for spending in inner city and other urban areas in Wales. However, the budget or allocations for specific bodies and programmes which concentrate on urban areas for 1987-88 include; the Welsh Development Agency, £77 million; Cardiff Bay Development Corporation, £11·5 million; the urban programme, urban development grant (including URG) and special measures for the South Wales valleys, £32·4 million.

In addition, expenditure provision for main local authority programmes in Wales makes a significant contribution to spending in urban areas.

Export Breakfasts

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the £29,488 spent on his two Welsh export breakfasts was spent, respectively, on (a) the equipment, (b) the road crews, (c) the speakers and (d) the presenter.

Mr. Peter Walker: Following the competitive tender, the contract for the two breakfast time export seminars was given to the Central Office of Information and much of the work was subcontracted. Details of the costs of the various elements of the work are commercially confidential.

Press Office

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the annual cost, at constant prices, since 1985 of his Department's press office; and what is the planned future budget provision for 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: Expressed in real terms as measured by the GDP deflator at market prices using 1986-87 as the base year, the information requested is as follows:

1985-86 £ Thousands	1986-87 £ Thousands	1987-88 £ Thousands	1988-89 £ Thousands
145	147	154	156

Forestry

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that grant money will not be paid by his Department, or through the Forestry Commission, in respect of its activities in Wales, for schemes whereby broadleaf forests are replaced by conifer forests.

Mr. Peter Walker: There is already a strong presumption in operation against the payment of grants for the conversion of broadleaved forests to conifer forests.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the Welsh house condition survey.

Mr. Grist: On 6 May.

Local Authority Services (Competition)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the results of the consultation exercise undertaken in November 1987 on competition in the provision of local authority services.

Mr. Peter Walker: All responses to the consultation exercise have now been carefully considered. As a result I propose to make the following changes to the initial proposals circulated in the consultation document. These take account of the fact that a decision on the possibility of adding sport and leisure management to the list of defined activities has not yet been taken, and therefore, if this activity is added by order, some delay in implementing competition for it is inevitable.

1. The initial implementation date will be deferred from 1 April to 1 August 1989, with the second phase of implementation starting on 1 January 1990 and so on thereafter.
2. The implementation of ground maintenance competition will be by five annual tranches of 20 per cent. instead of six monthly tranches of 10 per cent. as originally proposed. The initial implementation date for ground maintenance will be 1 January 1990.
3. Refuse collection has been separated from other cleaning such as street cleaning, thus enabling authorities to let these activities on a different time scale from each other.
4. The implementation of school and welfare catering and building cleaning will be separated by at least one year. This will reduce the burden on education authorities in the implementation of school catering and school building cleaning competition.

Those local authorities which responded to the consultation exercise were content with the grouping of local authorities for implementation purposes detailed in the consultation document. As a result, I do not intend to make any changes. Nor do I intend to change the £100,000 "de minimis" level suggested in the document, below which work carried out by authorities is exempt from competition.

I have arranged for copies of a revised schedule arising from the proposed changes, giving details of phasing in of competition by authority, date and activitiy, to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of foreign-owned plants established each year in Wales since 1983, and the number in each zone which have been closed down since 1983;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1983 the number of new plants established in Wales by foreign-owned firms which were not already manufacturing in other countries in the United Kingdom and the total numbers now employed in such plants compared to the numbers employed in 1983.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The number of new plants and major new developments and expansions by overseas companies commenced during the period 1983 to 1987 were as follows:

	Number
1983	21
1984	45
1985	43
1986	36
1987	52
TOTAL	197

In addition to this investment, a further 17 companies were acquired by overseas investors during the period.

Of the six plants which subsequently closed, three were located in Gwent, and one each in the counties of Gwynedd, Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan. In 1987 plants established by foreign firms since 1983, and still open, employed 3,500 as compared with 100 in 1983. However, it is not possible to say which of these firms were already manufacturing elsewhere in the United Kingdom without incurring disproportionate costs.

Manufacturing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for manufacturing plants in Wales generally and for those which are owned by Japanese firms (a) the gross value added as a percentage of gross output, (b) wages and salaries, respectively, as a percentage of gross output, and (c) average wages and salaries, respectively, per head.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The information is given in the following table:

Manufacturing units in Wales 1986

	Gross Value Added as a percentage of gross output (per cent.)	Payments to ATC's as a percentage of gross output (per cent.)	Payments to Operatives as a percentage of gross output (per cent.)	Payments to ATC's in pounds per head (pounds)	Payments to Operatives in pounds per head (pounds)
All units	31·0	5·0	9·9	10,960	8,181
Japanese-owned units	18·8	3·0	6·0	8,979	6,659
All United Kingdom units classified "Electronic consumer goods and other electronic equipment not elsewhere specified"	16·6	4·6	5·3	10,304	6,527

Source: Annual Census of Production, 1986

Notes:

ATC = Administrative, technical and clerical staff. These payments have been used to indicate salaries, and payments to operatives to indicate wages.

The third line of figures is a more appropriate comparison for Japanese-owned units in Wales since the category is the dominant one for these units.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 30 March 1988]: The following centrally managed contracts were awarded by my Department in 1987.

Firm	Subject of assignment
Inbucon Management Consultants Ltd.	Financial, management and policy review of the National Museum of Wales
Frank Griffiths Associates	Review of Departmental Purchasing
R. A. Pengelly	Review of Welsh Dental Advisory Committee
Burgoynes Consultants	Atlantic Trading Estate and Barry Dock Public Inquiry

It is not possible to identify without disproportionate costs management or computer consultancy contracts awarded in respect of projects not centrally managed.

Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing (a) the establishment figures, (b) the funded establishment figures and (c) the in-post figures of each health authority in Wales for the following nursing grades: regional nursing officer 1 and 2, regional nurse 1 and 2, district nursing officer grades 1 to 7, director of nursing services grades 1 + to 6, senior nurse grades 1 + to 8, sister I, sister II, health visitor, deputy nursing sister, staff nurse, senior enrolled nurse, enrolled nurse and nursing auxiliary/assistant; and if he will publish, for each grade category, the number of employees in full-time posts, the number of part-time employees and the whole-time equivalent of those part-time employees.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 30 March 1988]: Only information regarding staff in post is available centrally and is given in the following table (as at 30 September 1987).

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that all mink farms in Wales comply with the terms of the Mink Keeping Order 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 30 March 1988]: The Mink (Keeping) Order 1987, prohibits the keeping of mink on certain offshore islands of Great Britain and in certain areas of Scotland and prohibits the keeping of mink in the rest of Great Britain except under licence. Any new premises to be used as a mink farm are inspected after an application for a licence is received or if it becomes known that mink are being kept in captivity. In considering an application for a licence my officials would wish to be satisfied that the mink are to be kept in the manner prescribed in the Mink (Keeping) Regulations, 1975, as amended. Any other relevant factors would also be taken into account including the likely impact on farming and wildlife if mink were to escape from captivity. Licences are valid for a period of up to 12 months. There are powers of revocation.

ENERGY

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the energy programme is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Parkinson: This information is not available in the form required.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of the new £250 limit on resourcing the answers to parliamentary questions, he will review all replies given since June 1987 that gave no substantive answer on the grounds that such were only possible at disproportionate cost, to ascertain whether substantive replies may now be given following the resource increase.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Ministerial Interview

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to obtain from the BBC copyright permission to place in his departmental library a copy of the interview on the Radio Four "Today" programme broadcast on 28 March, with the hon. Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) the Under-Secretary of State, on opportunities for United States commercial investment in the privatised United Kingdom nuclear programme.

Mr. Parkinson: No. I understand that the Library of the House does obtain transcripts from the broadcasters on behalf of hon. Members.

Power Station Statistics

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the uranium charge of each operating Magnox and advanced gas-cooled reactor in the United Kingdom; what will be the expected figure for the pressurised water reactor plants to be constructed; and how much plutonium he estimates will be produced by each during the effective life of the stations.

Mr. Parkinson: For the uranium charges for Magnox and advanced gas-cooled reactors, I refer the hon. Member to the reply by the hon. Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 14 December 1977 at column 218. I understand that the core of a pressurised water reactor of the type under construction at Sizewell B requires approximately 500 tonnes of natural uranium in its manufacture.

The lifetime production of plutonium during the life of any nuclear station is dependent on its load factor and assumed lifetime. In evidence to the Sizewell inquiry, a copy of which has been placed in the House Library, British Nuclear Fuels plc estimated that the total lifetime production of plutonium from the United Kingdom's civil Magnox and advanced gas-cooled stations will amount to some 78 tonnes. The amount of plutonium produced by a PWR station similar to Sizewell B during its lifetime was estimated to be about 8 tonnes.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, assuming that no fuel elements were reprocessed in the United Kingdom, what accumulated tonnage of untreated nuclear fuel elements would have to be stored; and on the basis of reprocessing, what tonnage of waste will have accumulated in the United Kingdom by 1991, taking into account all types of operating nuclear power plants.

Mr. Parkinson: Spent fuel currently stored under water in the United Kingdom will have to be reprocessed for safety reasons. Details on the volumes of raw wastes arising from reprocessing to the year 2029 were published in the eighth annual report of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. This is available in the House Library. The relevant table is table 5, appendix F.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the total throughput of spent Magnox fuel, expressed in terms of uranium content, which was reprocessed at BNFL Sellafield in each year from 1979 to 1987, by financial year;

(2) what was the total throughput of spent Magnox fuel, expressed in terms of uranium content, which was reprocessed at the Windscale reprocessing works in each financial year from 1963-64 to 1969-70;

(3) what was the total throughput of spent Magnox fuel, expressed in terms of uranium content, which was reprocessed at the BNFL Sellafield in each of the financial years 1977-78 and 1978-79.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 11 December 1985 at columns 638-39, to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 1 February 1988 at columns 473-74, and the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) on 16 December 1987 at column 516.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, what is his estimate of the likely stockpiling of plutonium resulting from reprocessing spent nuclear fuel from United Kingdom reactors over the next 10 years.

Mr. Parkinson: Production of plutonium from reprocessing of irradiated fuel from United Kingdom civil magnox reactors is expected to continue at a rate of 1·5 to 2 tonnes per year for the next 10 years. Reprocessing of irradiated fuel from United Kingdom AGR reactors, which is expected to commence in the 1990s is expected to produce up to 5 tonnes of plutonium over the next 10 years.

Bradwell Reactor

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the implications for other electricity board Magnox reactors on the grid of the decision to close the Central Electricity Generating Board Magnox reactor at Bradwell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate has listed a number of measures that the Central Electricity Generating Board will need to take to allow continued operation of the Bradwell reactors after certain dates. I understand that the CEGB is considering what action to take: no decision to close Bradwell has been taken. Work on long-term safety reviews of other Magnox reactors is in hand and the NII's decisions on these will be announced in due course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industry Regeneration (Lewisham)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will put forward proposals to regenerate industry in Lewisham.

Mr. Atkins: Industry in Lewisham, as elsewhere, stands to benefit from all we are doing to create a climate that stimulates enterprise, cuts red tape, encourages healthy competition and expands markets for British products and services. The business consultancy scheme which we launched earlier this year, under the enterprise initiative, can help small and medium-sized firms improved their performance and profitability. Lewisham is an urban programme area with a programme of £1·95 million proposed for 1988-89. As a result of this status, eligible companies there qualify for the higher rate of assistance under the enterprise initiative and may also submit projects for city grant. The borough was also the finishing point this year for our national US roadshow, offering detailed guidance on the United States' market to local exporters.

British Steel (Privatisation)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in the preparations for the privatisation of British Steel.

Mr. Atkins: The British Steel Bill is currently in Committee. Other preparations for privatisation are also proceeding, and a number of Government advisers have been appointed.

Manufacturing Industry (Exchange Rate)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the effects of a high exchange rate on British manufacturing industry; and what is his expectation of the effect on Anglo-German trade in manufactured goods of a sustained exchange rate of the pound sterling equalling over 3 deutschmarks.

Mr. Alan Clark: The exchange rate is only one of many factors affecting performance in manufacturing, as Germany's experience confirms. The outlook for United Kingdom manufacturing output, investment and exports generally is one of continuing growth. Our improved performance in areas such as quality, design, and reliability is particularly relevant to the demands of the German market.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the trade and industry programme is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department plans to spend £1,250 million in 1988-89. All its programmes take account as appropriate of the needs of the inner cities. Inner cities will in particular benefit from the enhanced rate of support for business development consultancies under the enterprise initiative. But it is not possible in every case to identify that proportion of the budget which is spent in the inner cities. However expenditure by the inner cities unit and grant in aid for English Estates new managed workshop programme are solely directed at inner city areas and this will amount to £27 million in 1988-89.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list in the Official Report which wards of which local authorities he treats as part of the inner cities;

(2) which local authorities, or parts of local authorities, are covered by the inner cities;

(3) which areas of the United Kingdom are not eligible for assistance under the action for cities programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The areas for action for most of the cities programmes are shown in the map in the "Action for Cities" document, copies of which have been placed in the Library and Vote Office, and distributed to Members of the House with urban constituencies. Some programmes or initiatives, such as the urban development corporations, urban programme, enterprise zones, and inner city task forces, operate within precisely defined boundaries. For urban programme purposes, priority areas are either formally defined, in the case of partnership areas, or agreed with local authorities in order to target resources through inner area programmes. Urban programme areas are also used to target some other forms of support including special assistance under the enterprise initiative. Support through other programmes, such as housing association grant and estate action is available more widely, but is concentrated in inner cities.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give for each inner city area, and for inner cities in total, the population, employment, unemployment, child population, school population and pensioner population.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Figures are available only for urban programme areas and not for any other definition of inner city areas. Those figures are shown in the tables. Table 1 gives the latest available estimates of numbers of employees, taken from the September 1984 census of employment. The results of the September 1987 census are expected to become available next year. Table 2 gives estimated district level unemployment percentage rates for November 1987, using 1981 census data on population as the denominator. Table 3 gives the usually resident self-employed population aged over 16, drawn from the 1981 census. Table 4 gives OPCS population estimates for mid 1986, broken down (i) for under 15s, (ii) for those of pensionable age.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the expenditure of each Department in the inner cities in each year since 1978-79;

(2) what was the expenditure of each Department on the inner cities planned for 1988-89; and what is the estimated outcome for 1986-87 and 1987-88;

(3) if he will state the expenditure for 1988-89 and all the years of the public expenditure White Paper spent by each Department as part of the inner cities programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information on inner city expenditure by Departments is not available on a consistent basis before 1988-89. Final decisions have not been taken on the proportion of planned expenditure which will be directed to inner cities for later years of the public expenditure survey. My right hon. Friends are responding individually to the hon. Member on the proportion of their Department's expenditure directed at inner cities. We estimate that some £3,000 million will be directed to the inner cities through the programme and initiatives described in the "Action for Cities" document, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Peter Luff

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will specify what steps he has taken to ensure that the departmental duties of the special adviser, Mr. Peter Luff, are not compromised by the investigation of his former employers by his Department into possible illegal takeover conduct; and when these steps were taken.

Mr. Butcher: It has been established practice, followed in Mr. Luff's case, that special advisers should not at any time have access to information about companies for whom they worked.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will reinstate Export Credits Guarantee Department cover to Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Cover is available for short term business (up to 180 days credit) subject to the security of confirmed irrevocable letters of credit. The position on cover for medium-term business is kept under review.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Central and South American countries are currently covered by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: Some cover is currently available, subject in some cases to payment security, for all Central and South American countries except Argentina.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when Nicaragua ceased to be covered by the Export Credits Guarantee Department; and how long cover had been provided prior to its cessation.

Mr. Alan Clark: Medium-term cover for Nicaragua was withdrawn in October 1978 because of the economic problems caused by the war and the acute shortage of foreign exchange. Prior to that date such cover had been available over a continuous period. Short-term cover (up to 80 days) remain available subject to the security of confirmed irrevocable letters of credit.

Fida 88 Exhibition, Chile

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what level of support was given to British companies exhibiting at Fida 88 in Chile; and what companies were involved.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government provided no financial support for companies exhibiting at the Fida trade fair.

Action for Cities Initiative

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to hold the first working breakfast in his action for cities initiative; and what is the location.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The first working breakfast following the announcement of the Government's action for cities initiative will be held at Newcastle on Wednesday 13 April 1988.

EC Countries

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many committees have been established under the process of unifying standards throughout the European Community, on which subjects and how many of the chairmen are British.

Mr. Butcher: Standardisation in Europe is carried out by two bodies — the European Committee for Standardisation (CEN) for non-electrical products, and the European Committee for Electrotechnical Standardisation (CENELEC) for electrical products.

According to our latest information, CEN has 90 technical committees, of which 11 are chaired by the United Kingdom , while CENELEC has 44 technical committees of which 11 are chaired by the United Kingdom.

Letter Post

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made by the Post Office in the implementation of the recommendations made in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the letter post service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the letter post service of the Post Office in the head post office areas of Glasgow, Belfast and Cardiff and in the numbered London postal districts (Cmnd. 9332) was published in September 1984. The report made 78 recommendations covering quality of service, financial control, costing and forecasting, mechanisation and manpower and industrial relations. Of the 78 recommendations, 76 were accepted by the Post Office. The Commission was also asked to include in its report a view on whether the Post Office was pursuing a course of conduct which operated against the public interest. It concluded that it must suspend judgment on this since so much depended on what was achieved in the following years.

The Post Office has now produced its three-year report on progress in implementing the MMC's recommendations and I am placing copies in the Library of the House. The Post Office reports that it has implemented the great majority of the 76 recommendations it accepted.

There are still certain recommendations where further work is required, several of which the Post Office declared at the outset would take longer to implement, and my Department will continue to monitor progress. The Post Office reports eight recommendations as still undischarged. One of these recommendations, that the Post Office should seek to increase post code usage to 70 per cent. of all mail, has been accomplished since the Post Office reported on progress in September. Of the remainder, three concern the establishment of standard times and costs and a productivity scheme based on standard times. This is an area in which the Post Office has experienced many industrial relations problems, but I am glad to say the work measurement scheme is now proceeding well and I understand that the new bonus scheme introduced as part of the agreement concluded between the Post Office and its unions in December on a shorter working week will form a better basis for the introduction of a full standard-based scheme.

The other recommendations which remain undischarged concern quality of service, the introduction of a computerised system for manpower statistics, the computerisation of the system for recording and notifying weights of airmail bags and the replacement of sorting machines at the Post Office's foreign section with modern equipment. While there has been an improvement in quality of service since the report was made, both in the intra-London service and nationally, it is disappointing that the Post Office has continued to fail to meet its targets. As the Post Office comments in its progress report, a factor in this has undoubtedly been the high level of unofficial industrial disputes in recent years. On the other recommendations, although there are plans for their implementation, it is disappointing that the introduction of the new systems and machinery required has been so long delayed.

There are also several recommendations recorded as discharged, particularly those relating to the introduction of better costing information for management, on which, while I acknowledge that the Post Office has done much towards carrying out the MMC's recommendations, further long-term work remains to be done. I shall continue to monitor progress in all these areas.

I do, however, acknowledge and welcome the significant progress that has been made over the three years since the MMC reported, particularly in the introduction of mechanisation and improved working methods. It was largely because of failure to implement recommendations in these areas made in its 1980 report on the inner London letter post that the MMC was led to conclude that it should suspend judgment on the question whether the Post Office was operating against the public interest. I also acknowledge the Post Office's creditable track record over the period in terms of price control, growth in business, profitability and employment creation.

Regional Aid

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total spending, and the number of cases assisted in Houghton and Washington, through (a) regional selective assistance and (b) regional development grant from 1984 to 1987, broken down into manufacturing and service industries.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The information requested on regional selective assistance and regional development grant in Houghton and Washington[1] from 1984 to 1987 is as follows:

	Manufacture	Service
Regional Selective Assistance[2]
Expenditure (£ million)	3·6	0·5
Number of cases assisted	40	3
Regional Development Grant[3]
Expenditure (£ million)	3·7	0·8
Number of cases assisted	215	41

[1] Interpreted as the parliamentary constituency of Houghton and Washington.
[2] Project and training grants only. Information on the Business Improvement Services and Exchange Risk Guarantee Schemes is not available at the local level.
[3] Detailed data are available only for the revised scheme, introduced in November 1984. However, £15·7 million was paid under the original scheme to companies in the Houghton and Washington employment office areas during the period in question.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Capitation Payments

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to capitation paid to (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in (i) the Inner London education authority and (ii) outer London boroughs in each of the last five years; what information he has as to such payments to be made in the coming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Authorities have submitted some details of their per capita allowances for 1985-86 and 1986-87 as part of Her Majesty's inspectorate's 1986 review of LEA provision for education. However, it is not possible to set out accurate comparable data for individual LEAs because each authority has its own type of scheme. Comparisons can be misleading because the allowances do not always cover the same area of expenditure or class of pupils and they are often combined with additional amounts for certain subjects or departments.

ILEA (Abolition)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the proposed abolition of the Inner London education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: We have received some 1,650 letters from hon. Members, organisations and individual members of the public about the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend on 4 February.

Testing

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much the introduction of testing for seven, 11, 14 and 16-year-olds will cost; what is the estimated annual cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The costs will depend on the nature of the tests and assessment arrangements required for various national curriculum subjects. My right hon. Friend will be reaching decisions on these matters, in the light of advice from subject working groups and the task group on assessment and testing. Overall, the Government expect the implementation of the national curriculum and assessment to be contained within its planned level of provision for education, where necessary by redeploying and using resources more effectively.

School Meals

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the results of the October 1987 census of school meals; and what are the comparable figures for the previous census.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Maintained Schools (Including Nursery and Special): England

	October 1937		October 1986
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
Pupils in attendance	6,210,640	100·0	6,351,870	100·0
Pupils taking meals on payment	1,989,746	32·0	1,956,310	30·8
Free	1,101,132	17·7	1,143,817	18·0
Total	3,090,878	49·8	3,100,127	48·8
Pupils bringing own food	2,008,172	32·3	1,937,151	30·5
Pupils having other arrangements	1,111,590	17·9	1,314,592	20·7

An analysis of the returns shows the following proportions for primary and secondary pupils, as percentages of pupils in attendance:

	Primary		Secondary
	1987	1986	1987	1986
Pupils taking school meals	51·9	51·8	46·2	44·5
Pupils bring own food	39·4	37·3	24·4	23·3
Pupils having other arrangements	8·7	11·0	29·4	32·1

Detailed tabulations on the returns from local education authorities in England, from which these national totals were derived, are being placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Official and Library Corridors

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Lord President of the Council under what circumstances access to the Official Corridor and the Library Corridor is permitted to anyone other than right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Wakeham: I shall write to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will list the Bills guillotined since 1979; at what stage each Bill was guillotined; for how many hours such Bills had been debated (a) on Second Reading and (b) in Committee; and how many hours were subsequently allowed for each of the remaining stages.

"The House Magazine"

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council what forms of access to the precincts are given to employees of Parliamentary Communications Ltd. for the purposes of the operation of "The House Magazine"; if any advance information is given to the magazine by staff of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Three representatives of "The House Magazine" have access to the Press Gallery. In addition, two research assistants have registered an interest in connection with that magazine, as required by the Resolution of the House of 17 December 1985. The only advance information provided to the magazine, in common with that provided generally to the Press Gallery, is on the future activities of Select and Standing Committees.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council when "The House Magazine" was granted permission by the House of Commons (Services) Committee to use the portcullis associated with the House as its insignia.

Mr. Wakeham: I am advised that a record of the information requested cannot be traced.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Non-military Aid

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the change in the total value of Her Majesty's Government's overseas non-military aid between 1979 and 1987 in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Figures for gross public expenditure on overseas aid for 1987 are not yet available. Between 1979 and 1986, expenditure in real terms fell by 16 per cent. In the period since 1982, however, it has been more than maintained and, as the recent public expenditure White Paper made clear, the aid programme is now planned to grow in real terms.

Biwaters Project (Malaysia)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who carried out the independent check that established value for money in the Biwaters Malaysian project.

Mr. Chris Patten: The value-for-money check was carried out by consultants Coopers and Lybrand, in association with Sir William Halcrow and Partners.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Overseas Development Agency appraisal mission to Malaysia reviewed the performance of Biwater projects elsewhere, particularly in Nigeria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The appraisal mission was concerned specifically with the project in Malaysia. In the light of its findings, and other investigations carried out, the Government were content both with the viability of the project and with the capability of Biwater to implement it. A review of other projects carried out by the same contractor is not normally practicable, particularly where the Overseas Development Agency is not involved in funding them.

Aid Projects (Single Contractors)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Governments of Cameroon, Chile and Thailand have insisted on negotiating a contract with a single contractor for United Kingdom aid projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: No. Where assistance is sought from the aid and trade provision, the nature of contracts is primarily a matter for the contractual parties concerned in the light of the circumstances of each case.

Ethiopia

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a further statement on aid by the United Kingdom to Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: British commitments for famine relief in Ethiopia, through bilateral and European Community channels, total over £45 million since the beginning of 1987. This includes the cost of 94,500 tonnes of bilateral food aid to help in meeting needs during 1988 and £3 million to support airlift operations by the office of the United Nations disaster relief co-ordinator. It also includes assistance with transport, port handling equipment, medicines and grain storage.

The United Kingdom also maintains a technical co-operation and training programme for Ethiopia and is assisting with famine rehabilitation including a £1·2 million well rehabilitation project in Welo region.

Khmer Rouge

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to prevent aid provided by Her Majesty's Government for refugees at the Thai-Cambodia border from being diverted for use by the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our assistance, which is provided through the relevant United Nations agencies, is subject to the stipulation that it should go only to the occupants of those camps controlled by the non-communist elements of the Cambodian resistance. We have received assurances that this stipulation is observed.

Nicaragua

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the last technical assistance training award was made to Nicaragua; how many were made in the previous five years; and why they have ceased.

Mr. Chris Patten: The last technical co-operation training award was made to Nicaragua in 1982. We have no separate statistics of new awards made to Nicaragua in the five years previous to 1982. After 1982, we provided assistance to Nicaragua only for disaster relief or through voluntary agencies or international relief organisations; the European Community has provided substantial aid of which Britain's share is around 20 per cent.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will resume technical assistance training awards to Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have no plans to do so.

Special Advisers (Payments)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules govern the receipt of payments by special advisers from former employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: All special advisers, including those on secondment from outside employers, are subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Pay and Conditions of Service Code—except for the rules governing acceptance of outside appointments after resignation or retirement, and certain aspects of the rules on political activities.

EC Budget (United Kingdom Contribution)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total net contribution made by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community in the financial year 1987-88; and by what amount this total had to be reviewed in light of the recent European Council agreement.

Mr. Brooke: Final information on the outturn of our net payments to European Community institutions in 1987-88 is not yet available. An estimate was contained in table 3.1 of the latest public expenditure White Paper. On the question of revisions to that estimate, I refer my hon. Friend to the information given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary in the debate on the White Paper on 24 February, at columns 316-17.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list all those representations he has received to amend the exemption limit for inheritance tax on donations to political parties; and if he will place the submissions in the Library;

(2) what was the basis on which he calculated that there will be no loss in revenue from his decision to amend the exemption limit for inheritance tax on donations to political parties;

(3) how many estates in which donations were made to political parties in each year since 1979 have been subject to inheritance tax liability or capital transfer tax;

(4) how much (a) inheritance tax or (b) capital transfer tax has been paid in each year since 1979 on donations to political parties.

Mr. Major: Information is not kept of the number of estates paying inheritance tax or capital transfer tax on gifts to political parties or of the amount of tax paid, but it is not thought that under present rules gifts of £100,000 or more are normally made, so the loss in revenue from abolishing the limit is likely to be negligible. No representations have been received to amend the exemption limit.

Loans (Tax Relief)

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what circumstances any interest on loans qualifying for tax relief during a lifetime has obtained tax relief for any interest paid after death in any of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Generally speaking, relief for interest paid ceases to be available when the borrower dies. However, in certain circumstances, interest on a loan to buy a borrower's main residence may continue to be eligible for relief where paid after the borrower's death by his personal representatives or the trustees of his will settlement, provided the home continues to be the main residence of the deceased's spouse or dependent relative. No figures are available of the claims made under this provision.

Elderly Home Owners

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has regarding the number of elderly home owners who have raised money by means of (a) home reversionary schemes, (b) mortgage annuity schemes and (c) building society maturity loans in each of the last five years; and what total sums are involved in each case.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is not readily available in the form requested.

Privatisation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for each privatisation measure since 1983, the Government's merchant bank advisers, brokers and reporting accountants, and details of any advertising agency involved; and if he will state whether any form of competitive tendering was undertaken in each case for each service.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's merchant bank advisers and brokers in each of the privatisation sales since 1983 are as follows. Reporting accountants and advertising agencies employed in the sales were usually joint appointments with the company, and are also listed. In addition, a number of sales of subsidiaries were carried out by nationalised industries. Details of the advisers for these sales are not held centrally.

In each of the privatisation sales, except for British Airways, the appointment of merchant bank advisers, brokers and advertising agencies was subject to competition. In the case of British Airways, Hill Samuel (the merchant bank advisers) had advised when privatisation was first considered in 1980 and were retained for the sale because of their knowledge of the company—a competitive rate having been negotiated.

The appointment of reporting accountants was subject to competition in the case of Enterprise Oil, British Telecom and the Plant Breeding Institute/National Seed Development Organisation. In the other privatisation sales the companies' auditors were appointed without obtaining alternative tenders, to take advantage of their knowledge of the companies where this was expected to give rise to worthwhile savings in terms of time and costs. In each case a competitive rate was negotiated.

Age Allowances

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of retirement pensioners (a) aged 65 to 79 years and (b) aged 80 years or over who will be better off by (i) £1 per week, (ii) £1 to £2 per week, (iii) £2 to £3 per week, (iv) £3 to £4 per week, (v) £4 to £5 per week, and (vi) £5 per week or over as a consequence of the increase in the age allowances to £3,180 and £3,310 for a single person and £5,035 and £5,205 for a married couple.

Mr. Brooke: Estimates are given in the table. The first two columns analyse tax units by the gains in 1988-89 due to the proposed increases in the age allowances and, where appropriate, the main personal allowances. The final two columns analyse tax units by the gains in 1988-89 due to all the reductions in rates of tax and increases in allowances proposed in the Budget. Estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 Survey of Personal Income and are provisional.

Computer Services

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the computer services of (a) the Department of Health and Social Security, (b) the Inland Revenue, (c) the Home Department or (d) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are to be contracted out.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise announced recently that the Department's proposed new entry processing system (CHIEF) would, subject to satisfactory contractual negotiations, be developed and operated by British Telecom Applied Technology. This company already runs the existing departmental entry processing system (DEPS).

Apart from this, and the use of IT consultancy services for specific functions, the Department has no present plans to contract out its computer services.

The Inland Revenue has for several years made extensive use of the private sector in supporting its computer services and will continue to do so, but there are no plans to contract out any computer services functions.

Responsibility for computer services in the Department of Health and Social Security is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and in the Home Office the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Higher and Senior Executives

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that higher executive officers and senior executive grades will receive a pay award in 1988 sufficient to meet the increased cost of living in London and elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury has discussed the 1988 pay claim for the executive grades with the National Union of Civil and Public Servants. An offer of a 4 per cent. increase was made to the NUCPS on 29 March. In response to the claim from the Council of Civil Service Unions the Treasury on 29 March offered an increase of 10 per cent. in London weighting rates. These offers take into account the need to recruit, retain and motivate staff within what can be afforded. Both offers are with effect from 1 April.

Taxation Changes (Purchasing Impact)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the net purchasing impact of taxation changes in his Budget on the regional economies of (a) the south-east, (b) the north-west.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend's Budget will provide a stimulus to enterprise and initiative in all regions of the country.

EC Finance Ministers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet his counterparts from other European Community states; and what matters he intends to raise.

Mr. Brooke: The next meeting of the European Community's Council of Economic and Finance ministers is expected to be held on 18 April. The agenda for the meeting is likely to include the liberalisation of capital movements, a presentation by the Economic Policy Committee on the Commission's indirect tax approximation proposals, and the implementation of the Brussels European Council conclusions on budget discipline.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will clarify the proposed rules for companies which will carry on qualifying activities for relief under the business expansion scheme, through the letting of homes on assured tenancies; and whether he intends that the company will be able to give notice to tenants at the end of the five-year qualifying period for relief under the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Brooke: The proposed rules for this relief will be set out in the Finance Bill. The tenant under an assured tenancy which qualifies for the purposes of the business expansion scheme will have security of tenure (subject to the right of the landlord to recover possession of his property on certain specified grounds set out in the Housing Bill and the Housing (Scotland) Bill).

Drugs (Illegal Imports)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of estimated illegal imports of drugs are now seized by Customs and Excise or intercepted prior to distribution, by category of drug for each of the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportions of seizures of illegally imported drugs, by category of drug, come from EEC countries and from each of the other major source countries for each of the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Income Tax (Higher Rates)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much in tax concessions has been received by those on tax rates above 40 per cent. since June 1979 at constant prices to the latest available date; what estimates are available of the amount that has gone to each region and of the regional numbers of taxpayers in the tax bands above 40 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 21 March 1988]: Income tax due from the top 2½ per cent. of taxpayers in 1978-79, the group liable at rates above 40 per cent., amounted to £3·4 billion, equivalent in real terms in 1988-89 to some £7·1 billion. In 1988-89, the tax due from the top 2½ per cent. of taxpayers will be about £9·0 billion — an increase of £2 billion, despite the reductions in tax rates and real increases in allowances since 1978-79. If the taxable incomes of the top 2½ per cent. of taxpayers in 1988-89 were as they are now forecast to be, and at the same time were subject to 1978-79 income tax rates and allowances indexed to 1988-89 levels by reference to the statutory formula, their liability would increase by £6 billion. However, the assumption on which this estimate is based is inherently implausible.

I regret that corresponding information for each region is not available. Estimates of the number of taxpayers paying tax at the 45 per cent. rate or above in 1985-86, the latest year for which regional information is available, are given in the table.

London Weighting Allowance

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the total value of that part of salaries paid as London weighting of the employees of each Government Department during the last year for which full figures are available; and what proportion of the total value of salaries paid by each Department of London employees the London weighting payments account for;

(2) how many and what proportion of the employees of each Government Department receive London weighting payments.

Mr. Brooke [holding answers 25 March 1988]: The information is as follows, for non-industrial and industrial staff separately. There is no central record of the total salaries paid by each Department to London employees and this could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Pensions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking changes to reduce the effective 41·6 per cent. rate of tax for pensioners in receipt of age allowance.

Mr. Major [holding answer 25 March 1988]: There have been a number of representations on this subject.

The situation to which my hon. Friend refers affects fewer than 2 per cent. of pensioner households, and has nothing whatever to do with the Budget changes. The age allowance has always been withdrawn progressively for taxpayers with incomes above a certain limit. This income limit is at its highest ever level in real terms, and the effective rate within the withdrawal band, at 41·6 per cent., is in fact at its lowest ever level. Those few taxpayers who have incomes within the withdrawal band will gain an extra £2·50 per week from the increase of £800 in the income limit proposed in the Budget, on top of the benefit they receive from the double indexation of the personal allowances and the basic rate cut.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 30 March 1988]: Following is the available information:

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by the Inland Revenue in 1987 giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 30 March 1988]: The Inland Revenue awarded the following consultancy contracts in 1987:

Job Dispersal

Mr. Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the outcome of the programme for dispersing Government work out of London and the south-east announced in 1979; and whether the Government intend further initiatives on the location of Civil Service work.

Mr. Brooke: In 1979 we announced a programme designed to disperse 5,900 posts, mainly to Scotland and the north. Over 5,500 posts have been dispersed under this programme, and planning is in hand for the remainder. Over the same period, and on their own initiative, Departments have relocated well over 6,000 other posts out of London and the south-east. About four fifths of the Civil Service is now located outside Greater London.

No further central targets for relocation are being set, but Departments will be reviewing their location of work with a view in suitable cases to finding locations offering advantages in terms of recruitment and retention of staff, value for money and other considerations relevant to service delivery and management. In their reviews, Departments will consider localities which offer such advantages, including where appropriate areas which are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies. A copy of the guidelines issued to Departments for these reviews has been placed in the Library of the House.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of Exchequer if he will estimate the effect of unsterilised exchange rate intervention on the growth of monetary aggregates over the last 12 months; and if he will estimate any consequent effect on the retail prices index.

Mr. Lilley: The impact of intervention on MO is offset automatically by the Bank of England's daily money market operations. There is no simple relation between the intervention and broad monetary growth. The Government's policy is to fund all intervention, that is, to sterilise it. The published provisional figures for February 1988 indicate that all intervention and other borrowing has been fully funded in the 12 months to that date.

Overseas Investments

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of earnings from overseas investments in 1987-88; what proportion this constitutes of the national income; and what are the comparable figures for the preceding five years.

Mr. Major: The figures are shown in the table.

Year	Net earnings[1] on overseas assets £ million	Per cent. of GDP
1982-83	2,056	0·7
1983-84	2,678	0·9
1984-85	4,493	1·4
1985-86	2,905	0·8
1986-87	5,629	1·4
1987-88[2]	4,196	1·3

[1] In respect of United Kingdom investments overseas less overseas investments in the United Kingdom.
[2] First three quarters only available.

Interest and Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the connection between interest rates and the exchange rates.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 2.11 of the 1988-89 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Income Tax

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly gain of a single person earning £150,000 a year from his Budget tax changes.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly gain of a single person earning £100,000 a year from his Budget tax changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1988]: I regret the figures given were incorrect. The answer should have been as follows:

"The weekly gain from the Budget of a single person earning £100,000 and £150,000 a year, with no other income, would be £271·92 and £463·23 respectively. The figures refer only to income tax and assume that the taxpayer is entitled to no income tax reliefs or allowances other than the single person's allowance. The calculation is made by comparing the taxpayer's income tax liability under the 1987-88 tax regime with that under the proposed regime for 1988-89."

TRANSPORT

Aviation Safety

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies of aviation safety have been made by his Department in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's air accidents investigation branch is responsible for investigating aircraft accidents and their reports are published. The following accident reports have been published during the last 12 months.

No. 1/87 Bell 212 G-BJJR in the North Sea. Issued on 28 April 1987.
No. 2/87 Lockheed Tristar G-BBAJ at Leeds. Issued on 25 September 1987.
No. 3/87 Turbo Commander EL-BGL at Eastbourne. Issued on 29 July 1987.
No. 4/87 DHC-6 Twin Otter G-BGPC at Laphroaig. Issued on 10 December 1987.
No. 5/87 Chinook G-BISO in the North Sea. Issued on 20 January 1988.
No. 6/87 Short SD3 EI-BEM at East Midlands. Issued on 20 January 1988.
No. 7/87 Twin Squirrel G-BKIH at Swalcliffe. Issued on 29 February 1988.
No. 8/87 Boeing 747 G-AWNB at Heathrow. Issued on 29 February 1988.
No. 9/87 Bell 214ST G-BKFN in the North Sea. Issued on 28 March 1988.
No. 1/88 DH 89A Dragon-Rapide G-AGTM at Duxford. Issued on 28 March 1988.

Otherwise, the regulation of air safety is the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority.

British Rail (Electrification)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what Government subsidies have been made available to British Rail in each year since 1979 towards its electrification programme.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government do not give BR specific investment grants. The public service obligation grant includes provision for the appropriate share of revenue investment and depreciation on capital assets used in the grant-aided railway. A significant proportion of electrification expenditure has, therefore, been eligible for grant. No grant will however be available for inter-city services from 1 April this year: their investment will be expected to show a commercial rate of return.

Road Bridges

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road bridges currently in use were constructed before the introduction of national design standards in 1922; and how many of these are recognised as requiring replacement or strengthening to answer the needs of modern vehicle weights.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The bridge census and sample survey report, which was published in March 1987, shows that there are about 25,000 bridges on local roads in England built before 1922. There are also about 900 pre-1922 bridges on trunk roads in England. The sample survey indicates that about a quarter of these bridges may require to be strengthened to meet the requirements of the new bridge assessment code BD 21/84. In November the Government announced a programme for the rehabilitation of bridges on motorways and all-purpose trunk roads including the assessment and strengthening of the older bridges. Discussions are taking place with the owners of bridges off the national road system about a similar programme for their bridges.

InterCity

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest available figures for the proportion of British Rail InterCity trains that arrive on time; and to what extent these figures differ from the figures published by British Rail according to its definition of on time.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have agreed with BR its objective that 90 per cent. of InterCity trains should arrive within 10 minutes of the timetabled time. I understand that in the four weeks to 27 February, the latest period for which figures are available, 86 per cent. of InterCity trains arrived within 10 minutes of right time. My Department does not monitor figures for arrival at timetabled times.

M25

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a further statement about improvements planned for the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The motorway is being widened to four lanes between junctions 11 and 13. Consultants are investigating ways of widening the length between junctions 15 and 16. No other major improvements are planned between completion of the review of the motorway as a whole. Details of the review will be announced soon.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress there has been in establishing responsibility for the problems in construction of the M25 between Leatherhead and Reigate.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under the conditions of contract it is for the engineer to decide where responsibility rests. He has determined that responsibility rests partly with the Department and partly with the contractor. The Department is considering its position. I shall make a statement as soon as possible.

A51 (Clotton)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a speed limit for Clotton on the A51.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Conditions on this part of the A51 still do not meet the nationally applied criteria for a speed limit.

A6 (Disley-High Lane Bypass)

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the special landscape areas of (a) Cheshire and Derbyshire were, and (b) Stockport and the Etherow-Goyt River Valley Park were not, included in his published map of the proposed A6 Disley-High Lane bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The special landscape areas of Cheshire and Derbyshire were shown diagramatically in the consultation brochure because they formed part of those councils' planning policie. Although the Greater Manchester structure plan designated an area that falls within Stockport MBC's boundary as land of special landscape policy it was only on 12 January, six days before the public consultation bagan, that the areas were included in the Stockport borough local plan after committee approval. We shall take account of the special designation in our further consideration of options for a High Lane-Disley bypass.

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he saw a delegation from the High Peak borough council in connection with the proposed A6 Disley-High Lane bypass; what was discussed at the meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I met a delegation from High Peak borough council on 21 March. The delegation explained its concern about the effects of the "Brown Route" and sought more information on the alternatives.

It was agreed that officials from the Department would meet council members and officials to explain the bypass alternatives in more detail. I confirmed that the council's views together with many others we have received would be fully considered in reaching decisions on whether to add a scheme to the national trunk road programme and on choice of route.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the transport programme is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Around 40 per cent. of the value of the national road programme is accounted for by schemes under construction or in preparation which will benefit inner cities.

About 30 per cent. of the value of all local road schemes accepted for transport supplementary grant consist of schemes costing over £1 million in or assisting inner cities. In addition, there are a large number of smaller schemes which will help transport and provide safety benefit in inner cities.

Over 80 per cent. of grants paid in respect of schemes currently being undertaken under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 and nearly 60 per cent. of grants paid in respect of current schemes under the Industrial Development Act are supporting inner city projects.

Inner cities also benefit from a substantial, though unquantifiable, proportion of Government grants to British Rail and London Regional Transport.

Traffic Growth

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's assumptions on growth in traffic (a) overall and (b) on motorways in percentage terms in 1988-89 over 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: (a) The Department of Transport's national road traffic forecasts predict average rates of annual traffic growth over periods of several years; they are not calibrated for year-on-year forecasting. Since the forecasts were made, traffic has grown at about the upper end of the forecast range. Given a continuation of economic growth, recent trends in traffic growth are likely to continue.

(b) The Department does not forecast traffic by road type.

Road Schemes

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many major road schemes have been announced as due to start in 1987-88 or 1988-89; and how many of these are now scheduled to be started in the current year; how many in 1988-89; if he will list those schemes now likely to be delayed until at least 1989-90; and how many trunk road and local bypass schemes announced and scheduled since 1984-85 have now experienced major slippage in time scale.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to my replies on 2 April 1987 Official Report columns 571-2 and 8 February 1988 Official Report columns 2-4 when I announced that we planned to start work on 40 schemes in 1987-88 and 34 schemes in 1988-89. Work started on 29 schemes in 1987-88 as indicated in my further answer of 8 February Official Report columns 3-4. Of the remaining schemes originally scheduled to start in 1987-88, we now aim to start 10 in 1988-89 and 1, the A140 Dickleburgh bypass, in 1989-90. Two of the 34 I announced as 1988-89 starts are not now expected to start until 1989-90. They are A16 Boston to Algakirk and A43 Blisworth bypass.

The June 1985 report, "National Roads England", showed 40 bypasses on which work was scheduled to start between June 1985 and March 1987. Of these, 17 have not been started.

The progress of local bypass schemes is a matter for the appropriate local highway authority.

White Hart Roundabout, Northolt

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to improve the flow of traffic and the environment at the White Hart roundabout, Northolt, during current and future work on the Hayes bypass and related works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Any proposals to improve the flow of traffic and the environment at the White Hart roundabout are a matter for the London borough of Ealing, which is the highway authority responsible for this scheme. I understand that the opening of a section of the new roundabout today together with associated traffic management should improve the situation. The scheme includes environmental measures.

Central London Rail Study

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 264, if the central London rail study will take account of (a) his forthcoming announcement concerning the financial objectives of London Regional Transport, (b) the cross-rail proposals of the British Railways Board, published in November 1980 and (c) the type of cost-benefit analysis applied to capital investment on the Victoria line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I expect to receive initial results from the central London rail study in July, in advance of setting any new objectives for London Regional Transport. The terms of reference are sufficiently wide to embrace any relevant scheme. Detailed appraisal of any such scheme will be in accordance with established appraisal criteria and techniques.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 264, if he will make it his policy to direct the central London rail study to take account of, and report on (a) whether any benefits are to be obtained from increasing the volume of rolling stock and train staff on British Rail and London Underground Limited, (b) whether any benefits are to be gained by improvements in the standards of, and number of persons employed in maintenance of track, signalling and rolling stock of British Railways and London Underground Limited, (c) whether there are any benefits for line capacity and punctuality of more platform staff and (d) what are the costs and benefits of dual voltage electrification of the line from Willesden junction to Clapham junction.

Mr. David Mitchell: The existing terms of reference expressly require the study to examine the scope for improving services and to have regard to the need to make the best use of existing assets.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer concerning the central London rail study of 25 March, Official Report, column 264, (a) which bodies or representatives, or other persons will constitute the membership of the review body, (b) which persons or bodies will be eligible to present evidence to the review body, (c) from which official or other bodies he expects the review body to receive information concerning future levels of passenger demand and if such information will be publicly available, (d) what assumptions the review body will be required to make concerning the level of fares relative to the general cost of living, and the method of ticketing or passes to be used within the Greater London travel-to-work area, (e) what assumptions the review will be required to take account of concerning strategic planning policies of Her Majesty's Government and county councils within the London travel-to-work area and its impact on the growth of daily passenger travel to and from and within London, and (f) what changes in travel demand or pattern the review will be required to take account of consequent on the plans of Her Majesty's Government for the de-regulation of bus services in the area now served by London Buses Limited.

Mr. David Mitchell: The study will be conducted by LRT, BR and my officials. It is not envisaged that the study team will call for outside evidence. I have not laid down a set of assumptions for the study, but would expect the team to consider how variations in all major assumptions—particularly those relating to demand—would affect its conclusions.

Summer Time

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents about the impact of summer time changes on road accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have not had any recent representations from the society on this subject. I am aware of its views. My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary, is today issuing a consultation document which will set out the options under consideration.

Airports (Landing Charges)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to by how much more or less than the retail prices index landing charges at Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted and Manchester have increased in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no standard index for charges at each of these airports. An approximation is provided by aggregate traffic income per passenger. The table shows aggregate traffic income per passenger for the period 1978-79 to 1986-87 indexed relative to the RPI.

1978-79 = 100

	Heathrow	Gatwick	Stansted	Manchester
1978-79	100	100	100	100
1979-80	93	90	77	96

1984-85	89	91	77	95
1985-86	84	95	80	91
1986-87	80	95	90	90

Note: Figures prior to 1983-84 include security levy paid to the then Department of Trade.

Radio Beacons

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a national policy for United Kingdom radio beacons; what representations he has made in north-west European discussions on the future of Decca and Loran; which countries are involved in the discussions; when he expects to conclude these discussions; when he expects to make an announcement; if he will list the comparative advantages and disadvantages between Decca and Loran; and if he will detail the total estimated cost of each system.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Decca navigator system currently provides the main electronic position-fixed system in United Kingdom waters. The system is operated under a contract between the general lighthouse authorities and Racal Decca Marine Navigation Ltd. The contract runs to 1994 and is extendable to 1997.

My right hon. Friend is not yet able to make a statement about the international discussions on the possible adoption of Loran C as a standard civil electronic aid in north-west Europe. Informal feasibility discussions are proceeding between the United Kingdom, Norway, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Denmark, Iceland, Ireland and the Netherlands, but none of the states concerned is yet committed to any change. Examination of the technical and cost aspects of an international co-operative development of Loran C has yet to be completed. If firm proposals for a change emerge from these discussions, my right hon. Friend expects to seek the views of interested parties before reaching a decision. Full account would be taken of user interests and of the relative costs, accuracy and technical suitability of the respective systems.

Seagoing Craft (Radios)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for making (a) VHF radio, (b) Decca or equivalent or (c) radar compulsory for all seagoing craft.

Mr. David Mitchell: VHF radio is mandatory on all passenger ships and cargo ships of 300 gross tons and upward. Decca is not mandatory.

Radar is mandatory on all merchant ships of 1,600 gross tons and upwards and those constructed after 1 September 1984 of between 500 and 1,600 gross tons.

There are no plans for making any of these equipments compulsory for all seagoing craft.

Signposting

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of French signpost practice on (a) motorways and (b) other roads regarding (i) sites of tourist interest and (ii) the availability and quality of hotel accommodation; and what representations he has had on future signposting in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On signing matters generally, we are in close touch with other member countries of the European conference of ministers of transport. We are aware of practices in France in relation to signing of tourist attractions and hotels. We have received a variety of representations about signing in the context of the review of directional signs which we completed last year. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

In the light of this review we are conducting an experiment in Kent to assess the benefits to be derived from a limited amount of hotel signing on the highway. We have to balance in all this the need of travellers for information against road safety considerations (too many signs are a distraction to the motorist), and the damage to amenity which would arise if there came to be a clutter of signs on the highway.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Barry Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the relative risk of injury in road traffic accidents for motor cyclists compared with other road users.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The information requested is given for all two-wheeled motor vehicle TWMV riders. It is taken from the annual publication "Road Accidents Great Britain — The Casualty Report, 1986".

DEFENCE

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the information recorded on the aircraft accident data computer in the Royal Air Force inspectorate of flight safety includes, for each accident (a) the height at which the aircraft was authorised to fly, and (b) the height at which the aircraft was flying immediately prior to the accident.

Mr. Freeman: In those cases where the height at which an aircraft was flying just before an accident can be determined it is recorded on the computerised database of the Royal Air Force's inspectorate of flight safety. Information about authorised heights is not so recorded.

Inner Cities

Mr. Bryan Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the defence programme is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It would probably not be possible to make a sensible estimate of the proportion of the defence programme spent in the inner cities, but, even if it were, this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tanks (Purchase)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce a decision on the future purchase of tanks for the British Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bridlington (Mr. Townend) on 12 January, at column 200.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has carried out any tests upon the Challenger II tank for use by the British Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. A Mk 2 Challenger does not presently exist in fully developed form.

Journalists (Hospitality Costs)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, South of 22 March, Official Report, column 115, what was the estimated cost of hosting Ian Bevitt and Ron Sibbald to the unit at Belize; and what method of travel, from and to which points, was used.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The cost of hosting the journalists was about £35, which was met from unit funds. They travelled by Land Rover and helicopter between military bases in Belize, accompanying service men on routine duties.

Exercise Arrowhead Express

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what part British forces played in the recent NATO Exercise Arrowhead Express in northern Norway; and if he will make a statement on the result of that exercise.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The United Kingdom element of the Allied Command Europe Mobile Force (AMF), including an infantry battalion, a logistic support battalion, a force artillery HQ, force reconnaissance unit, helicopter support and RAF Jaguars, played a full role in deployment, deterrent and combat operations conducted in Exercise Arrowhead Express. The exercise tested the AMF in its role as an immediate reaction force deployed to a threatened flank area of ACE to deter aggression, to demonstrate NATO solidarity and resolve and to operate alongside host nation forces.

Detailed assessment and evaluation of the exercise is currently being undertaken by participating nations and the appropriate NATO authorities.

From a United Kingdom viewpoint early indications are that the exercise was very successful.

North Sea (Air Combat Platforms)

Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consultations his Department has held with British Aerospace in respect of the construction of six air combat manoeuvring system platforms in the North sea; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether his Department has held any discussions with or issued any guidelines to British Aerospace as regards the nationality of the tenderers for the contract to build air combat manoeuvring subsystem platforms in the North sea;

(3) what information he has as to the locations of the air combat manoeuvring instrumentation system platforms in the North sea to be built by British Aerospace;

(4) whether his Department intends to make use of the air combat manoeuvring instrumentation systems to be constructed by British Aerospace; and whether there will be any restrictions placed on use of this system by the defence forces of other nations;

(5) what provision he has made for the cost of contracts which his Department may enter into in respect of the air combat manoeuvring instrumentation system;

(6) whether the defence forces of any other country will be allowed to contract directly with British Aerospace in order to make use of the air combat manoeuvring system to be constructed in the North sea;

(7) what information he has on the principal use of the air combat manoeuvring instrumentation system to be constructed by British Aerospace;

(8) whether British Aerospace is working to any Government guidelines or function specifications as regards the air combat manoeuvring instrumentation project.

Mr. Sainsbury: Further to my answer at column 365 on 28 March, I can confirm that British Aerospace has presented to my Department its unsolicited proposals to build, on a private venture basis, an air combat manoeuvring installation in the North sea. If constructed, use of this training facility by prospective customers would be a matter for the company within the terms of any applicable legal or other regulations. The details of British Aerospace's proposal are under study in this Department. No commitment of any kind has been made to the company and no funds have been provisioned against future use of such a facility by this Department. No guidelines have been given to the company about any technical specifications nor about any commercial aspect of the venture.

Scientists (Deaths)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will institute an inquiry into the security implications of the deaths of Mr. Victor Moore, Mr. Ashad Sharif, Mr. Vimal Dajibhai, Mr. David Sands, Mr. Peter Peapell and Dr. John Brittan;

(2) whether Dr. John Brittan or Mr. Peter Peapell were involved in any subcontracting work for Marconi while in the employment of his Department;

(3) whether the current investigation by Ministry of Defence police into contracts placed with Marconi has at any stage in the past involved questioning or examining Mr. Victor Moore, Mr. Ashad Sharif, Mr. Vimal Dajibhai, Mr. David Sands, Mr. Peter Peapell or Dr. John Knight.

Mr. Sainsbury: The answer to all three questions is no.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and dates of periods of covert monitoring of low-flying operations conducted by Royal Air Force police since 1974.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1987, c. 736-37]: Records of locations where covert surveys of low-flying activity have been carried out only exist for July 1979 onwards. Thereafter, the available information is as follows:

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1974 disciplinary proceedings have been instituted against pilots found to have been infringing low-flying regulations by Royal Air Force police involved in covert monitoring in low-flying areas, but where no complaints were received from the public.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1987, c. 736-37]: Responsibility for disciplinary action against pilots found to have been infringing low-flying regulations by Royal Air Force police lies with the commanding officer at the appropriate RAF station. Central records of the action taken by commanding officers in such cases are not kept.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force police, expressed as full-time equivalent staff, are currently assigned to covert field monitoring of low-flying aircraft; and what changes have taken place in these staffing levels since 1977.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1987, c. 736-37]: Total hours of all RAF police personnel devoted to covert field monitoring of low-flying aircraft currently amounts to the equivalent of approximately one third to one half of a single full-time RAF policemen's job. Figures for 1977 are not available, but there has been a general increase in the number of covert observations carried out since 1979. We are currently reviewing the numbers of personnel devoted to covert and non-covert monitoring.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the practice of covert monitoring of low-flying by Royal Air Force police was introduced.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1987, c. 736-37]: Covert monitoring of low-flying aircraft has been carried out by the RAF police at least since 1977.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the methods used by Royal Air Force police involved in covert monitoring of low-flying activity to assess height and speed of low-flying aircraft.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1987, c. 736-37]: Covert monitoring of low-flying aircraft is carried out visually following the survey of a suitable site noting relative heights and distances of local landmarks. Teams of two RAF police are normally made up one experienced observer and one in training.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Third World Debt

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet representatives of the British banks to discuss Third world debt, and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend regularly meets representatives of major British banks; Third world debt is often discussed. We remain very concerned about the debt problem, but debt owed to commercial banks is a matter for negotiation between the banks and debtor Governments.

Conventions and Protocols

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many conventions and protocols of the Council of Europe have been signed on behalf of the United Kingdom; how many have been ratified; and if he will list in the Official Report those conventions and protocols which have been signed but not ratified.

Mrs. Chalker: We have signed and ratified 73 conventions and protocols of the Council of Europe. Nine conventions and protocols have been signed but not yet ratified. These are:

1. Protocol 4 to the Convention of Human Rights securing certain other Rights and Freedoms.
2. European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.
3. European Convention on the Recognition of the Legal Personality of Non-Governmental Organisations.
4. European Convention on the Control of the Acquisition and Possession of Firearms by Individuals.
5. European Convention on the Compensation of Victims of Violent Crimes.
6. Convention Relating to Stops on Bearer Securities in International Circulation.
7. Convention on the Establishment of a Scheme of Registration of Wills.
8. European Convention for the Protection of Animals for Slaughter.
9. European Convention for the Protection of Vertebrate Animals used for Experimental Purposes.

Bananas

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to continue to protect the access to the British market of those countries which are traditional suppliers of bananas; if he will support the continuation of the banana protocol to the Lomé III convention in the negotiations with the EEC for Lomé IV; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We remain committed to provide preferential access for bananas from the United Kingdom's traditional suppliers. Following a recent review of banana policy, we have also decided that the United Kingdom market should be enabled to expand gradually, with a guaranteed minimum of licences to import dollar area bananas allocated to small independent importers. This is consistent with our general objectives of promoting competition and consumer choice. The United Kingdom will fight hard in the negotiations for Lomé IV to ensure that preferential access for these traditional supplies from Jamaica and the Windward Islands is maintained.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of his Department's programme is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

South Africa (EC Companies)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about cases of companies in the European Community seeking to sell to the Republic of South Africa submarine propulsion technology; and if he will make a statement on what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to prevent this.

Mrs. Chalker: It is not our practice to take up with other Governments allegations of breaches of the United Nations arms embargo on South Africa. This is properly a matter for the Security Council committee established under Security Council resolution 421 of 1977.

Israel (Non-proliferation Treaty)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 25 March, columns 241-42, when he last made a specific representation to the Israeli Government to sign the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend had a recent opportunity to raise the non-proliferation treaty with the Israeli Government. But, at his request the Permanent Under-Secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office did so on 22 October 1987 with the political director of the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Israel (Mordecai Vanunu)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 25 March, column 242, if he will now make it his policy, in the light of the 18-year prison sentence passed on Mordecai Vanunu on 27 March, to make representations to the Israeli Government for a reduction in sentence on human rights grounds.

Mr. Mellor: No.

South Africa (Rugby Tour)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for relations with the Commonwealth of the planned World XV rugby tour to South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear, we stand by the statement made by Commonwealth Heads of Government in June 1977—the so-called Gleneagles Agreement—which discourages sporting contacts with South Africa.

Central American Parliament

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance will be provided by Her Majesty's Government in the setting up of the Central American Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: At the San José IV meeting in Hamburg we and our European partners agreed to provide assistance in the holding of elections to the Central American Parliament. The form of the assistance is to be defined in discussion between the European Community and the Central American Governments.

Guatemala Agreement

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the measures being taken by Her Majesty's Government to support the Guatemala agreement.

Mr. Eggar: We and our European partners have on a number of occasions expressed our support for the agreement and urged the Central American Governments to fulfil their commitments under the agreement. We have also appealed to countries with links and interests in the region to lend constructive support for the peace efforts of the Central American countries. We have also condemned all acts of violence which might jeopardise the peace process.

Hong Kong (Vietnamese Refugees)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many families among Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong have requested to be repatriated to Vietnam, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The numbers of Vietnamese who have asked to be repatriated to Vietnam in each of the last 10 years are as follows: six in 1978; two in 1979; two in 1980; two in 1981; four in 1982; three in 1984; one in 1985; one in 1987 and 21 in 1988. Fifteen have been successfully repatriated, 10 withdrew their applications and 17 applications are still being processed by UNHCR. According to Hong Kong Government records there has been only one family application, consisting of a husband and wife and their two children.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese refugees have (a) sought sanctuary in Hong Kong and (b) subsequently been accepted for settlement (i) in the United Kingdom and (ii) in any other non-Communist country in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: (a) The Hong Kong Government have accepted all Vietnamese arriving in Hong Kong in boats and has turned none away. The figures for those accepted since 1979 are: 1979 — 68,748; 1980 — 6,788; 1981—8,470; 1982—7,836; 1983—3,651; 1984—2,230; 1985—1,112; 1986—2,055; 1987—3,395; 1988 up to 15 March—716.

(b) The table gives details of departures from Hong Kong since 1979 for the United Kingdom and all other countries:

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice is currently being given to British citizens resident in, and travelling to, Panama.

Mr. Eggar: Our current advice is that there is no danger to British citizens resident in Panama. Visitors are advised not to travel to Panama until further notice unless on urgent business. Those who must travel should bring sufficient cash in US dollars in small denominations to cover all expenses incurred during their stay. They should contact the embassy on arrival.

Council of Ministers (Forthcoming Business)

Sir Peter Blaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present five meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for April.

The Research Council will meet on 11 April. The provisional agenda anticipates the formal adoption of the Esprit II programme (1988-1991) and the adoption of the drive, biotechnology, science, bureau of Community reference (BCR) and Delta programmes as 'A' points. Common positions on the fusion programme and the 1988-91 programme of the joint research centre (JRC) will also be discussed. The German presidency will be presenting, for first discussion, papers on the relation between EC and Eureka programmes and the contribution of research programmes to Community norms/standards.

The Economic and Finance Council meets on 18 April to consider the Commission's proposals on the liberalisation of capital movements, indirect tax approximation and the discussions on budgetary discipline with the European Parliament.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 18-19 April to discuss the 1988 price-fixing measures, and proposals on quick frozen foods, additives, materials and articles in contact with food, harmonisation of meat charges and trade in meat with third countries.

The Foreign Affairs Council meets on 25-26 April. Discussions are expected to include follow-up action to the European Council conclusions on financing the Community; EC relations with Japan; a review of progress in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations; preparations for the EC/Turkey Association Council; the 1988 guidelines for the Community's programme of aid to developing countries in Asia and Latin America; and progress made in negotiations with Hungary on a trade and co-operation agreement.

The Budget Council will meet on 28-29 April to discuss the European Parliament's amendments and modifications to the 1988 draft budget.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Labelling

13. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any further proposals for the declaration of nutritional information on food products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are pressing manufacturers and retailers to adopt the standard approach to voluntary nutrition declarations set out in the guidelines we issued on 21 January. Proposals for legislation to set out the form in which voluntary declarations must be given, will be considered once we have experience of the operation of the system and European Community intentions on nutrition labelling are clearer.

Less-favoured Areas

17. Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the tribunals deciding upon the final less-favoured area lines will complete their deliberations; and how long after this date he expects to make the decisions public.

Mr. Gummer: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the appeal panels which were set up to hear appeals from farmers whose land is currently excluded from the less-favoured areas. The panels do not themselves fix the LFA line, but advise Ministers on whether the land concerned seems likely to meet EC physical criteria for LFA designation. They have now completed their work in England and all the farmers concerned have been notified of the outcome.

Country Landowners Association

19. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Country Landowners Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: I meet Mr. Gordon Lee-Steere frequently to discuss agricultural matters.

Forestry Commission

20. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Forestry Commission; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I meet the chairman of the Forestry Commission from time to time to discuss a wide range of forestry matters.

Torry Research Station, Aberdeen

21. Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research is being undertaken by staff at the Torry research station, Aberdeen, into the processing of fish.

Mr. Gummer: The main areas of research concern the preservation of fish, the safety of fish products for the consumer and the utilisation of fish and fish products.

23. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of people employed in the Torry research station, Aberdeen; and if he will break that number down by occupational category.

Mr. Gummer: The number of staff currently employed at Torry research station is 115, of which 64 are scientific, professional and technical staff, 27 are in industrial worker grades and 24 are administration group staff.

33. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to visit the Torry research station in Aberdeen within the near future.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so; I visited Torry research station in 1986 and hope to do so again this year.

EC Agricultural Budget

22. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is now satisfied with the recently agreed control mechanism for European Economic Community agricultural budget expenditure.

Mr. MacGregor: I am satisfied that it is as good as we could possibly have got it in the recent negotiations.

Sheepmeat

24. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in the current year on the future of the European sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have received a number of representations on many aspects of the Commission's proposals for reform of the sheepmeat regime.

Poultry and Eggs

25. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to assist the United Kingdom poultry and egg industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We shall continue to assist the eggs and poultry industry by promoting efficiency and ensuring that it trades under conditions of fair competition.

Rivers (Pollution)

26. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to reduce pollution in rivers arising from agricultural activities.

Mr. Gummer: My Department warns farmers of the dangers of polluting rivers and the severe fines which successful prosecution brings with it. I myself reinforced these views at a recent conference on silage effluent and my Department continues to support water authority action to encourage farmers to avoid pollution. Grants for tanks to handle silage and slurry effluent are available at the rate of 60 per cent. in the less-favoured areas and 30 per cent. elsewhere.

Milk Quotas

27. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest position on the operation of milk quotas.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson).

Pigs

28. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present state of the pig industry; and if he will make a statement.

40. Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to meet the National Farmers Union and other representatives from the pig industry to discuss EEC import subsidies.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) today.

Agricultural Policy

29. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet his opposite number in the EEC to discuss agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: The next meeting of Agricultural Ministers is scheduled for 18-19 April.

34. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the National Farmers Union about reforming the common agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh).

Food Aid

30. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with organisations eligible to operate the EC free food scheme.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 30 March.

35. Ms. Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about progress in implementing the EC free food scheme.

43. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the arrangements for the distribution of surplus EC food in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 30 March and to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) today.

Monetary Compensatory Allowances

31. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will increase beef cow hill land compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances to apply this year were announced in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on 9 December 1987 at column 157. The allowances for 1989 will be considered later this year following the autumn review of the economic conditions in the hill and upland areas.

Tenant Farmers Association

32. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Tenant Farmers Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: I saw him on 4 March when were both at a conference discussing diversification and the tenant farmer. We are also in regular contact with tenant farmers and their representatives to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Wool Board

36. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Wool Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend, the Minister, last met the chairman of the Wool Board on 1 February 1988 to discuss the prospects for the 1988 clip year.

Green Pound

37. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the green pound from the National Farmers Union and Farmers Union of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received representations from both these organisations.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received in the current year on the value of the green pound.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark).

Milk Marketing Board

38. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board on 1 March when a number of issues of current concern to the dairy industry were discussed.

Freezer Trawlers

39. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current number of United Kingdom registered freezer trawlers; what are the fishing grounds within which they operate; and which species they are allowed to catch.

Mr. Gummer: Fishing vessels are not required to state their method of operation when registering. However, there are currently five vessels which are licensed by United Kingdom fisheries departments as freezer trawlers; of these, three are licensed for the full range of stocks in Community waters for which the United Kingdom has quotas. The two remaining vessels are licensed for demersal species only. Three of the five vessels also have access to licences which enable them to fish in external waters for species for which the Community has quotas.

Farm Woodland Scheme

41. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for reducing the minimum acreage to qualify for the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Gummer: None.

Pollution

42. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to introduce special help for farmers or take any other measures to combat the pollution caused by modern farming methods.

Mr. Gummer: My Department continues to encourage farmers, through the provision of assistance and advice, to adopt practices which minimise the risk of pollution. These measures are kept under continuous review to ensure they remain effective in combating pollution.

Set-aside Scheme

44. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total estimated expenditure on set-aside payments for (a) 1988, (b) 1989 and (c) 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Public expenditure planning totals were increased in the last survey by £16 million for 1989-90 and £22 million for 1990-91 to cover set-aside and extensification in the United Kingdom.

Bass

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the net sizes for the bass regulations are posed so as to exclude the standard channel mesh size.

Mr. Gummer: The measures recently proposed for the management of the bass fishery are intended to protect juvenile bass and safeguard recruitment to spawning stocks. They include mesh size restrictions for gill and other specified nets, but for this purpose we do not consider it necessary to apply these restrictions to trawls, Danish seines or similar towed nets used in the English Channel for which Council regulation (EEC) No. 2968/87 prescribes a minimum mesh size of 75mm, increasing to 80mm from 1 January 1989.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to ensure that the proposed bass regulations prevent the French from fishing spawning stock in mid-Channel; and what information he has on the amount taken from the spawning stock by French fishermen.

Mr. Gummer: As I explained on 21 March in reply to an earlier question from my hon. Friend at column 14, I have no plans to prevent fishing for adult bass. I have no recent figures of French bass catches in the Channel, but I am advised that statistics published in France show landings of bass from the Channel area up to 1983 as between 600 and 800 tonnes a year. This includes bass from French stock caught both in French inshore waters and in mid-Channel.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many French fishing boats were engaged in bass fishing in the English Channel last season.

Mr. Gummer: This information is not held by my Department.

Agriculture Council

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the outcome of the Agriculture Council meeting held at the end of March.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 30 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss).

Forestry

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations were held between his Ministry and timber and land-owning interests concerning the proposed new grant arrangements for forestry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he proposes to revise his estimate of annual new planting of trees in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I intend that the combination of the new woodland grant scheme and the proposed farm woodland scheme will result in a significant increase in new planting in England and Wales.

Farming Unions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the farming unions; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Fylde (Mr. Jack) and for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh).

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the agriculture, fisheries and food programme is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Expenditure in the inner cities under this programme is not separately recorded.

Salmon Farming

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the representations he has received from Mr. Chris Tyderman of the World Wildlife Fund on the dangers of salmon farming to wild salmon returning to rivers for spawning.

Mr. Gummer: I have received no such representations from the World Wildlife Fund (UK).

Arctic Foxes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy towards the farming of arctic foxes within Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 8 March at column 130-31 to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on the subject of arctic foxes.

Food Irradiation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about the irradiation of foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am still receiving some representations about the safety of food irradiation and the need for controls over the use of the technique. The Government have, of course, already made it clear that we need to be satisfied as to effective controls before there could be any question of lifting the present general prohibition — over which there would in addition be further consultation.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the amount per week which the common agricultural policy adds to the average family food bill in the United Kingdom; and if the sums spent on exporting food are additional to this amount.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The magnitude of the costs of the CAP to consumers and taxpayers depends on the nature of the alternative policy envisaged. The Government's aim is to achieve lower levels of support worldwide thereby reducing the costs borne by consumers and taxpayers.

Free Food

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had within the European Community about operating the free food scheme.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have requested the Commission to allocate to us a sum equivalent to £10·4 million in 1988 which the Commission has indicated is the maximum available for the United Kingdom. I await the response of the Commission.

Pig Producers

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps he proposes to take to help British pig producers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We continue to be in close touch with the representatives of the pig producers. The market appears to have stabilised following the support measures which were taken earlier. Cereal prices continue to show a downward trend. We accept the objective of removing the MCAs from the pigmeat sector and will be actively pursuing this.

Farm Woodlands

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effects the new grant arrangements for forestry will have on his proposals for farm woodlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The farm woodland scheme will be linked to the Forestry Commission's new woodland grant scheme. However, we have decided that farm woodland scheme planting will only attract increased planting grants for broadleaves. These will apply to both pure broadleaf planting and the broadleaf component of other woodlands and will increase the incentive to mixed and broadleaved planting under the scheme. The planting grants for conifers will remain unchanged.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in each month since October 1987 in (a) each county of England and (b) the areas of the former metropolitan counties of west midlands, Greater Manchester, Greater London, Tyne and Wear, West Yorkshire and South Yorkshire.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 March 1988]: The information requested is set out in the table:

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the police, immigration officials or staff working in Department of Health and Social Security fraud units will be able to inspect names and addresses found in the community charge register.

Mr. Lang: Under section 20(2)(a) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 certain parts of the community charges register, including addresses and names, will be made available for public inspection.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy to include in the next edition of his recent publication "You and the Community Charge" information to the effect that the name and address of individuals who appear on the community charge register may be sold without their knowledge or consent;

(2) if he will make it his policy to include in the next edition of his recent publication "You and the Community Charge" information to the effect that the name and address of individuals who appear on the community charge register may be used by the police, Inland Revenue or Department of Health and Social Security specialist squads.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to issue a further edition of the booklet "You and the Community Charge". As to his policies in respect of the matters referred to, I refer the hon. Member to my replies of 9 February at column 63 and of 21 March at columns 14-15.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on current and future plans to prevent the spread of HIV in Scottish prisons;

(2) what is the latest number of HIV-positive prisoners in Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my right hon. and learned Friend made clear in his statement on 29 March 1988, the Government take the problems of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) and transmission of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection very seriously. Guidance has been issued to the Scottish prison service informing staff of the nature, the effects and the modes of transmission of HIV infection and the hygiene and other precautions necessary to prevent transmission in prison.

The guidance makes it clear that there are no medical reasons for segregating inmates who are known to have HIV infection or for limiting the normal range of work or recreational activities in which they may engage. This guidance has been supplemented by local training using audio-visual material.

Medical staff have been issued with specialist guidance on testing and counselling. Testing is available on request to any inmate who may be risk. In the absence of compelling medical indications, testing would not be undertaken without prior explanation and consent or in the absence of suitable arrangements for counselling and support when the result is known. Selected nurse officers are being given training to improve their counselling techniques.

The public education campaign to draw the dangers to the attention of those at risk has been extended into prisons and will be continued as further suitable material becomes available. It will continue to be Government policy to seek to restrict situations likely to high risk of transmission of HIV infection in prison. The management of symptomless carriers and the treatment of inmates who are ill as a result of HIV infection will share the aims and principles which are applied to care in the community. Specialist advice or support is sought as required from the National Health Service through the normal system for referral.

Full annual returns for 1987 are not yet available, but the number of inmates so far confirmed as HIV positive by medical officers for penal establishments, or who have indicated that they have been positively tested prior to coming into custody, is 73.

It is impossible to estimate numbers who may have been infected prior to reception into custody but have not yet been tested either in the community or in custody.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the Forestry Commission's mapped assessment of the suitability of land in the flow country of Caithness and Sutherland for afforestation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to one of a set of indicative overlays prepared by the Forestry Commission for use by a working group of officials. It related to technical plantability only and did not show the major constraints on planting, such as the need to protect areas of high conservation value.

I will arrange for a map, prepared from that overlay, to be placed in the Library of the House.

Paper Board and Timber Mills

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report information available to him on the paper board and timber mills reliant on home-produced timber since 1980, the amount of public subsidy, assistance, grant or other inducement given to encourage the establishment of those plants and the estimated cost to public funds of each job created.

Mr. Lang: Information in the form requested is not available. However, in 1985 plants classified to the pulp, paper and timber industries* employed some 10,600 people in Scotland with sales of around £533 million. Since 1980, offers of regional selective assistance (RSA) made to firms classified to these industries have amounted to £17·5 million, associated with the creation of 1,420 jobs and the safeguarding of a further 3,140 jobs. Since the inception of the revised regional development grant scheme (RDG2), approvals to companies in the paper board and timber industries have totalled £6·4 million, and been associated with the creation of 840 jobs. It should be noted that some firms may receive both RSA and RDG2 and that where this occurs associated jobs may appear twice in the above figures.

* Pulp, paper and timber industries are defined as plants classified to the following Activity Headings on the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification.

4610 Sawmilling, planing, etc. of wood.
4620 Manufacture of semi-finished wood products and further processing and treatment of wood.
4710 Pulp, paper and board.

Strip Searches

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many body searches and strip searches were carried out in Cornton vale prison in 1986 and 1987; and what are the comparable figures for such searches in other prisons in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of body and strip searches carried out at Cornton vale institution in 1986 was 3,270 and in 1987 it was 2,651 (the statistics kept do not differentiate between body and strip searches). Statistics are not kept on the number of strip or body searches carried out at other prisons.

Forestry

45. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to give new grants to assist forestry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 23 March, at columns 138-9 a new woodland grant scheme is to be introduced on 5 April 1988.

North Sea Oil

46. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his intention to place in the Library copies of the cards which give the latest readings of suspended wellhead positions on the United Kingdom continental shelf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Cards providing the location of suspended wellheads on the United Kingdom shelf are published on a half yearly basis by the fisheries Departments from data supplied by the Department of Energy and the Sea Fish Industry Authority. The cards are readily available and are distributed free of charge to fisheries organisations, local fishery offices and other interested parties at home and abroad, and I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of his Department's budget is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's statement in the House on 29 March about urban renewal measures in Scotland.

Department of Agriculture and Fisheries

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the current annual expenditure involved in the provision of (a) the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland, area office in Inverness and (b) the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland, area sub-office in Dingwall; if he will give his estimate of the anticipated annual savings which will accrue from the closure of the latter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The current annual expenditure, including the cost of administration support staff, involved in the provision of: (a) the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland Area office in Inverness is £205,247 and (b) the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland Area sub-office in Dingwall is £35,710. The anticipated annual savings resulting from the closure of the latter is estimated to be £22,000.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the number of farmers and crofters within the district covered by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland, area sub-office in Dingwall; how many obtain their information and services from the area office in Inverness; what information and services are sought from Inverness rather than Dingwall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 1,174 farmers and crofters are located within the district presently covered by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland area sub-office in Dingwall. All of those farmers and crofters within that district requiring information and services in relation to certain schemes obtain these from the area office in Inverness. Information and services sought from Inverness include advice and guidance from surveying staff in relation to capital grant schemes, crofting counties agricultural grant schemes, crofters building grants and loans schemes, procurement of labels under the seed potato labelling scheme, and veterinary services in relation to animal heath schemes.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the proposed closure of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland, area sub-office in Dingwall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representations concerning the closure of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland area sub-office in Dingwall have been received from the Dingwall community council and also from the Dingwall and district chamber of commerce.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the retention of Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland, area sub-offices; if he will list all such offices in the Official Report; whether he is considering any Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland, territorial areas for further rationalisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Retention of Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland area sub-offices depends on the location of the individual area sub-offices in relation to the area offices themselves and on the extent to which these offices can be justified for the maintenance of an economical and efficient service. Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland area sub-offices are presently located at:

Dingwall
Lerwick
Lairg
Stornoway
Benbecula
Elgin
Cupar
Stirling

The operational need for the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland area offices and sub-offices is kept under review on a continuing basis.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the nature and extent of public consultation which took place prior to his decision to close the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland, area sub-office in Dingwall; which representative public bodies were involved and what was the nature of any submissions made by them; what was the time between the commencement of such consultations and the announcement of his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The decision to close the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland area sub-office in Dingwall was made in the light of the need to make the most economical use of resources without impairing the efficiency of the service provided to the agricultural community. My noble Friend, the Minister of State, had regard to the good communications between Dingwall and Inverness and to the fact that, as well as certain services provided direct from the area office of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, the animal health divisional office and the college advisory services for the Dingwall area are already provided from Inverness. No public consultations were carried out at this time.

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the size and location of each mink farm currently operating in Scotland;

(2) how many licences are current for the operation of mink farms in Scotland; what the figure was 12 months ago; and if he will give similar information for the number of mink farms actually in operation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As at 31 March 1988 there were six licences for the farming of mink covering eight farms in force in Scotland. All of these farms are currently operational. As at 31 March 1987 seven licences were in force covering eight farms.

Farms currently in operation are located in the undernoted regions of Scotland:

Region	Number
Central	1
Grampian	2
Lothian	1
Strathclyde	[1]2
Tayside	2

[1] The renewal of a licence for one of these farms is currently under consideration following a change of ownership.

Two of these farms carry stocks of over 5,000 mink; the remainder carry stocks of less than 5,000.

Police Inquiries (Guidelines)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the guidelines which are issued to members of local police committees on the action to be taken by individual members when they or their spouses are the subject of police inquiries into matters which may lead to criminal charges being made.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such guidelines addressed specifically to members of police authorities have been issued by the Scottish Office. I shall send my hon. Friend a copy of the national code of local government conduct.

NHS (Seminar)

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost to public funds of the seminar arranged by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Scottish Office, the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) and held on 2 October 1987, dealing with privatisation in the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of the seminar — which discussed competitive tendering not privatisation —was £263·93.

Michael Forsyth Ltd.

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to refrain from dealings with the company Michael Forsyth Limited so long as it continues to trade under the name of a Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind: No. Government dealings with private companies are carried out in accordance with rules that are generally well understood; I do not propose to add to these rules any proposition about the name under which a company chooses to trade. The Minister for education and health no longer has an interest in Michael Forsyth Limited.

Patient Administration (Computerisation)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made regarding the computerisation of hospital patient administration systems and their introduction by health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Contracts were signed today by the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service with Honywell Bull Ltd. and McDonnell Douglas Information Systems Ltd. for the provision of systems and hardware for the following hospitals.

Company and hospital	Health board
McDonnell Douglas
Huntlyburn	Borders
Dunfermline and West Fife	Fife

The total value of the equipment, software and services provided under these contracts is £8 million.

Prisons (Alcoholism)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what factors he attributes the fall in the number of male inmates in Scottish prisons treated for alcoholism between 1985 and 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 February 1988]: There has been a continuous fall since 1982 in the number of male inmates in Scottish prisons treated for alcoholism. Inmates who are diagnosed by prison medical officers as suffering from alcoholism fall into two groups: those convicted of crimes related to drunkenness and those convicted of other crimes who may, coincidentally, have drink problems. This continuous fall in numbers treated for alcoholism is attributable in some degree to changes in police practice and court sentencing patterns over recent years and in the Aberdeen area, particularly to the establishment, with substantial Government financial support, of Albyn house as a designated place. This has been a major factor in the reduction of prosecutions for drunkenness in the Aberdeen area. Thus, in the five-year period between 1981 and 1986, there was a 67 per cent reduction in the number of persons in Scotland proceeded against for drunkenness and a 54 per cent. reduction in the number of persons received into prison either directly or by default following convictions for drunkenness. Between 1985 and 1986 in Scotland there was a particularly marked fall of 57 per cent. in the number of fine defaulters convicted and fined for drunkenness.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by the Scottish Development Agency in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 March 1988]: In 1987-88 (to 31 March 1988) the Scottish Development Agency commissioned 113 management or computer consultancies of a value of £5,000 or more. Several hundred consultancies to a lesser value were also commissioned: these were not exclusively management or computer consultancies. A detailed breakdown comprising the names of companies which have successfully tendered for contracts and the subject of these contracts cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate expense.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount spent by the Scottish Development Agency in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The amount spent by the Scottish Development Agency on consultants' fees in 1987-88 (to 31 March 1988) was £6,851,863.

This includes fees for research and development, advisory services, appraisal and administration, such as tax and accountancy advice, pension and legal consultancies, as well as management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is as follows:

Firm and Subject of Assignment

J. B. Schofield & Partners — To develop a fully integrated database system for monitoring the design, construction, inspection, and maintenance of highway structures.

Babtie Shaw & Morton — To develop a computer programme for estimating the cost of alternative designs for new bridges.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people of pensionable age in England and Wales were in receipt of housing benefit during 1987;

(2) how many people of pensionable age in England and Wales were in receipt of housing benefit during 1975, 1979, 1983 and 1986.

Mr. Portillo: Table A shows the number of pensioners in receipt of housing benefit in 1979, 1983, 1986 and 1987. Information for 1975 is not available, and from 1983 onwards information can be provided only for Great Britain. These figures refer to rate rebate only to avoid the risk of double-counting.

Table B indicates the more detailed position of pensioners gaining or losing entitlement as a result of the April 1988 changes. These modelled figures encompass gains and losses in rate rebates, and in rate rebates or allowances.

Table A
Numbers of pensioners receiving rate rebates[1]

	'000s
1975	n/a
1979	[2]2,000
1983	[3]4,100
1986	[3]3,990
1987	[4]4,040
1988	[5]3,390

[1] The figures relate to rate rebates only to avoid the risk of double counting. They understate the numbers of recipients by the very small numbers getting rent allowance or rent rebate only.
[2] Figure derived from the Department of the Environment, which had policy responsibility for housing benefit until 1982, and based on a small sample for England and Wales only. This figure excludes those who then received help with rates via supplementary benefit.
[3] Source: DHSS statistical enquiries, Great Britain.
[4] Source: Table 15.14 to the 1988 Public Expenditure White Paper, Great Britain.
[5] Estimate derived from DHSS model, based on the Family Expenditure Survey, related to expected caseload in the 1988-89 fiscal year and refers to tax units in which the head or spouse is aged 60 or above.

The estimated figures for pensioners gaining or losing housing benefit (rate rebate, rent rebate and rent allowance) as a result of the social security reforms are illustrated in the following table:

Table B

		Thousands
a.	(i)Gain from existing entitlement	970
	(ii)Gain from new entitlement	20
b.	(i)Lose some housing benefit, retain entitlement	2,570
	(ii)Lose all housing benefit entitlement	750
c.	Total on housing benefit after April 1988	3,560

Notes:
1. Figures relate to expected claimant caseload from April 1988, taking the effect of the Budget into account.
2. Figures denote tax-units, rather than households, in which the claimant or spouse is aged 60 or above.
3. These tables include in the gains and losses those losing, or gaining less than 50p per week.

General Practitioners (Charges)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the annual yield, excluding administration cost, from requiring all patients to pay £5 for each consultation with a general practitioner;

(2) what is his estimate of the annual yield, excluding administration costs, from requiring all patients, except the chronically sick, to pay £5 for each consultation with a general practitioner;

(3) what is his estimate of the annual yield, excluding administration costs, from requiring all patients, except those in receipt of retirement pension, to pay £5 for each consultation with a general practitioner;

(4) what is his estimate of the annual yield, excluding administration costs, from requiring all patients, except those in receipt of supplementary benefit, to pay £5 for each consultation with a general practitioner;

(5) what is his estimate of the annual yield, excluding administration costs, from requiring all patients, except the chronically sick and those in receipt of retirement pensions or supplementary benefit, to pay £5 for each consultation with a general practitioner.

Mr. Newton: The figures requested are as follows. Broad estimates only are possible, as the Department does not collect any data on a routine basis on consultations with general medical practitioners. The only information which is available is derived from the general household survey which is an annual inquiry based on some 12,000 households. It gives consultation rates by age and sex, but does not identify separately the consultation rates applying to specific groups such as the chronically sick or those in receipt of retirement pension or supplementary benefits; and an assumption has therefore been made that the consultation rates for these groups are the same as for the population as a whole in the relevant age group for each sex. The figures give the estimated annual gross yield on this basis before deduction of administration costs, and assume no change in present consultation patterns.

Estimated annual yield in England assuming a payment of £5 for each consultation with a general medical practitioner applying to:

	£ million
All patients	980
All patients except the chronically sick[1]	670
All patients except those in receipt of retirement pensions[2]	760
All patients except those in receipt of supplementary benefit[3]	840
All patients except the chronically sick and those in receipt of retirement pensions and supplementary benefit[1 2 3 4]	470

Notes:
[1] The chronically sick are defined as those reporting a long-standing illness in the General Household Survey.
[2] Those receiving retirement pensions are assumed to be all men aged 65 and over, and all women aged 60 and over.
[3] It is assumed that partners and dependents of people in receipt of supplementary benefits would also be excepted.
[4] It is assumed that the same proportion of chronically sick people are in receipt of supplementary benefit as the population as a whole in each age group for each sex.

No estimate has been made of the administration costs involved in collecting such charges but these costs would not be insignificant.

Cleveland Child Abuse Inquiry

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to reimburse North Tees health authority for the costs of representation at the Cleveland child abuse inquiry.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 25 March 1988 at column 248.

Spending Power

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables similar to those published in reply to the hon. Member for Kensington, Official Report, 4 February, columns 737-42, but taking account of changes proposed in the Budget.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 30 March 1988.

Mentally-ill People

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many mentally-ill people received treatment (a) as in-patients and (b) as out-patients in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority in (i) Calderstones, (ii) Brockhall and (iii) other hospital sites in the last 12 months.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986, the latest year for which information is available, the table shows the number of in-patient admissions and out-patient attendances at NHS mental illness hospitals/units in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority.

Hospital	In-patient admissions	Out-patient attendances
Burnley General	847	9,447
Rossendale General	345	2,189

These figures include patients who have been admitted or attended hospital on more than one occasion during the year.

Brockhall and Calderstones hospitals are mental handicap hospitals. Central information shows very few admissions to these hospitals of mentally handicapped residents with an associated mental illness diagnosis.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a list of the community health councils in England together with their expenditure of public funds in the latest available year.

Mr. Newton: Following is the information requested derived from the 1986-87 annual accounts of the relevant health authorities.

Prostaglandin Abortion (Poison)

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the use of poison in the case of prostaglandin abortion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Successive Governments have accepted since the passing of the 1967 Abortion Act that legislation in this field is initiated by private Members. The Government's position is that the method by which a legal abortion is performed is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned, having regard to all the circumstances of the particular case.

District Health Authorities (Land)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the ability of a district health authority to cede land to a voluntary housing society.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are required to dispose of surplus land in a publicly acceptable manner and, in general, to obtain the full market price. There are provisions under which with Ministers' agreement, surplus land can be leased to voluntary bodies on concessionary terms, provided the use to be made of the land complements a NHS service. Land cannot be gifted without the approval of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the health budget is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Newton: Total expenditure for 1986-87 (the latest year for which figures are available) in health districts and family practitioner committee areas, which cover inner city areas, was as follows:

	£ million
Hospital and Community Health Services[1] (Revenue and Capital)	4,449
Family Practitioner Services[2]	1,222

[1] Includes an element of £158 million (estimated on a pro-rata to total population basis) for revenue and capital expenditure incurred by regional health authorities for their regions as a whole.
[2] Expenditure on family practitioner services cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions or districts. Total expenditure has been estimated pro-rata to the total population of each region with expenditure assigned to each region geographically (ie from the annual accounts of the family practitioner committees which account for it).

This was a total of £5,671 million within a total expenditure of £14,745 million. However, it should be noted that many of these districts and FPCs serve a geographical area considerably wider than the inner city and, in particular, that a number of the inner city districts contain teaching hospitals and provide regional specialty services, in addition to their local services. It is not possible to disaggregate those elements of expenditure which relate directly to the inner city areas.

Social Fund

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he and his Department have received from Councillor Sam Darby and the town clerk of Manchester in regard to social fund allocations for 1988-89; what reply he is making; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Permanent Secretary of the Department and I have received letters dated 21 March from the town clerk, and Councillor Darby of Manchester city council, respectively. Replies will be sent shortly.

Project 2000

Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had on the proposals in Project 2000 relating to nurse training and education; and what conclusions he has reached.

Mr. Newton: All four health Departments have undertaken widespread consultation on the "Project 2000" proposals put forward by the United Kingdom Central Council for the reform of nurse education and training. We hope to be in a position to make a response to the proposals in the near future.

Hepatitis B

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress is being made against the spread of hepatitis B infection; what groups of people are being inoculated against it; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The number of cases of acute hepatitis B reported to the public health laboratory service has declined from approximately 2,200 in 1985 to approximately 800 in 1987. During this period there has been not only an increase in vaccination against the disease but the issue of detailed advice to health authorities on preventing the spread of both hepatitis B and HIV infection in specific high risk situations, as well as widespread publicity on the risks of AIDS and HIV infection.

The current memorandum from the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation (JCVI), which advises the health Departments on all aspects of immunisation, recommends that specific groups of health care personnel, patients, and family contacts should be considered for vaccination against hepatitis B. We hope shortly to make an announcement about a review of this guidance which has been undertaken by the JCVI.

Chlamydia

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress is being made to diagnose, treat and counter the spread of the chlamydia infection within the community.

Mrs. Currie: Facilities exist in every district to diagnose chlamydia, and the disease responds readily to the appropriate antibiotics.

The public information campaigns about AIDS by the Department and the Health Education Authority should not only help to reduce the risks of HIV infection but should assist, with other work on public education, in preventing the spread of sexually transmitted diseases, including chlamydia.

Nurses (Professional Conduct)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what complaints have been received by the professional conduct committee of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting on allegations of poor nursing practice and negligence in each year since 1979;

(2) how many of the complaints of poor nursing practice and negligence brought to the attention of the professional health conduct committee of the Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting have been settled by mutual agreement without conducting a hearing in each year since 1979;

(3) what has been the cost to his Department of the settling of cases of complaints of poor nursing practice and negligence brought to the attention of the professional conduct committee of the Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting but which were settled by mutual agreement without conducting a hearing in each year since 1979;

(4) what assessment has been made by his Department of the proportions of cases of allegations of poor nursing practice and negligence brought to the attention of the professional conduct committee of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting which arise from instances of low staffing levels and low morale.

Mr. Newton: The work of the professional conduct committee is the responsibility of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (UKCC) which was formally established in 1983. I understand from the council that most of the information sought is not available in the form requested.

It is the committee's function to determine the outcome of the cases brought before it. None are settled by mutual agreement and there is no cost to the Department. Information on the work of the professional conduct committee may be found in the annual report of the UKCC which is in the Library.

Community Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many placements of people who have been transferred from long-stay mental handicap hospitals into community-based settings have proved unsuccessful due to (a) lack of funding, (b) poor service design and (c) neighbourhood hostility.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not available centrally. However, the Department is not aware of any significant number of unsuccessful transfers of residents from mental handicap hospitals to community-based settings, although there may be initial difficulties for a number of reasons in such placements.

South Manchester Health Authority

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford of 28 March, he will give precise details of the date on which the Minister for Health the right hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) decided to refuse to meet a delegation of hon. Members about South Manchester health authority, having been asked to reconsider his decision to refer the matter to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary;

(2) if, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, he will give details of the circumstances, including the means of communication by which he learned of the refusal of the hon. Member for Stretford to meet the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State about South Manchester health authority.

Mr. Newton: My decision not to see a delegation of hon. Members about South Manchester health authority after they had refused to meet my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary was made on 14 March 1988. It was conveyed over the telephone by my private office the same day to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), who had requested the meeting on behalf of hon. Members and from whom my office learnt of the delegation's refusal to meet the Parliamentary Under-Secretary.

Strontium 90

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the average levels of strontium 90 present in the bone marrow of children of the same age, born and raised in the United Kingdom, at intervals of five years from 1975 to the present; and whether the figures are based on actual measurements or from estimates from air and food levels.

Mrs. Currie: I am not aware of measurements or estimates which provide the information requested. Strontium 90 if found principally in bone rather than the bone marrow. The National Radiological Protection Board has made estimates for adults of radiation dose from strontium 90; these estimates are of notional lifetime dose from a particular year's intake. They are derived, using mathematical models, from measurements of levels of Strontium 90 in the diet.

Sheltered Housing (Rents)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has made on the representations from the hon. Member for Woolwich dated 19 February about the decision of Greenwich council to raise rents for its frail elderly tenants in sheltered housing schemes.

Mr. Portillo: My office wrote to the hon. Member on 7 March explaining that the correspondence was forwarded to the Department of the Environment as the matters raised are the responsibility of that Department.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with other European countries about problems associated with benzodiazepines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have had no such discussions.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received since 1 January 1987 about suspected adverse drug reactions involving benzodiazepines; and how many of these have been from (a) members of the public, (b) voluntary organisations counselling patients who claim to have suffered adverse effects and (c) general practitioners.

Mr. Newton: Since 1 January 1987, we have received 22 letters from hon. Members or members of the public on this matter. None has been from a voluntary organisation or a general practitioner.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of prescriptions for each type of benzodiazepines dispensed by community pharmacists in Great Britain in each of the years 1978 to 1986 inclusive, giving the cost to the National Health Service in each case.

Mr. Newton: Information on the number of prescriptions for benzodiazepines in each of the years 1978 to 1986 and on the net ingredient cost in 1986 is set out in the table. Information on the costs for earlier years is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the Council on Involuntary Tranquilliser Addiction on Merseyside about problems associated with benzodiazepines; and what his response has been.

Mrs. Currie: I have received an invitation to visit the Council for Involuntary Tranquilliser Addiction which I have regretfully had to decline. I have also received representations on the council's behalf from the hon. Member, to which I responded today.

Northern RHA (Performance Indicators)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria will be used in the proposed use of performance indicators to assess the Northern regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: Health Service indicators show each regional and district health authority's position in relation to other health authorities on a whole range of issues. The purpose of the indicators is, using local knowledge, to stimulate questions and enquiry about the reasons behind the variations across the country and between districts within regions. Northern region and its districts are being asked, like all other authorities, to analyse their indicators for the past four years and present the results to their authorities. Regions are specifically asked to look at variations across the region and at progress over time in addressing performance issues raised by the analysis. The results of these regional analyses will be discussed during this year's accountability reviews between the Department and regions.

Social Security Advisory Committee

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Social Security Advisory Committee will be publishing its next annual report.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the SSAC's sixth report will be published on Wednesday 6 April 1988. Copies will be available in the Vote Office on that day.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the eligibility criteria for applications to the Independent Living Fund.

Mr. Scott: Broadly, the fund will be open to severely disabled people on low incomes who receive attendance allowance and who have to pay for domestic care.

The detailed criteria are as follows:

THE INDEPENDENT LIVING FUND

Target Group

People who are severely disabled, whether physically, mentally or sensorially, to the extent that they need help with their domestic duties and/or personal care to enable them to live independently in their own homes.

Eligibility Criteria

1. The applicant is living in the UK either:
   a. alone; or
   b. with a partner, or parent or parents, or other person or persons who are unable because of old age, ill-health, disability, other responsibilities, or the extent of the care need, to provide the total amount of personal care and domestic assistance required.

For this purpose paid or voluntary support on a live-in basis does not disqualify an applicant from receiving help.

2. The applicant is:
   a. receiving attendance allowance or constant attendance allowance; or
   b. has claimed and been found to satisfy the attendance allowance eligibility criteria, but the six months qualifying period has not yet been completed.

If the applicant has submitted a claim to attendance allowance which has still to be decided but which the Trustees consider is likely to succeed, they may make an interim payment until decision of the claim if that would prevent the applicant's admission to institutional care.

3. The applicant is severely restricted in his ability to perform normal personal care and/or domestic tasks because of his disablement without extensive help.

4. The applicant or partner, or parent in the case of a dependent child, is:
   a. in receipt of income support; or
   b. not in receipt of income support but has net income in excess of income support level of less than the amount needed to pay for his essential personal care or domestic assistance and has capital of less than £6,000 (the Trustees may disregard capital earmarked for specific uses such as for adaptations or a car as they see fit.)

5. That part of personal care and domestic assistance provided by a close relative who incurs only minimal expenses, or provided by a local authority, is not normally eligible for help from the fund.

6. Personal care and domestic assistance has to be paid for.

7. The above criteria having been satisfied the Trustees may give such assistance with the cost of provision of personal care and domestic assistance, having regard to receipt of attendance allowance, invalid care allowance, the income support severe disablement premium, excess income under 4(b), net housing costs, to other care needs and to such other factors as they think fit.

8. Notwithstanding that the above criteria may not all be met, the Trustees may exceptionally make payments as they think fit if such payments would prevent a severely disabled person's admission to institutional care.

9. In the case of payments from the fund being taken into account for the assessment of housing benefit, payment may be made from the Fund to make good the housing benefit reduction, retrospectively, once legislation has been made to disregard payments from the Fund for the purposes of assessing housing benefit.

Notes

1. Domestic duties are taken to be normal household duties such as cleaning and tidying; cooking and preparing meals and washing up; essential laundering and ironing, and essential shopping.

2. Personal care duties are taken to be those personal duties that a fit person would normally do for himself such as dressing, eating, washing and bathing, helping in and out of bed and with general mobility around the home.

NHS (Compensation Payments)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now publish the outturn figures for 1986-87 for compensation payments to National Health Service staff in respect of redundancies and early retirements in the manner described in the Government's reply to the first report from the Social Services Committee of Session 1984-85, breaking down the figures to distinguish between competitive tendering and other cases.

Mrs. Currie: The outturn figures for 1986-87 are as follows:

	Number of cases	Compensation cost £	Total cost including superannuation £
Competitive tendering
New cases	1,935	3,999,000	8,808,000
Continuing cases	1,479	1,487,000	2,099,000
Other cases
New cases	1,767	6,100,000	16,401,000
Continuing cases	7,790	12,098,000	24,185,000

Social Security Reform

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in each of the social security regions on converting existing supplementary benefit claims to income support; and when he expects the conversion to be completed.

Mr. Portillo: We plan to complete the conversion of current supplementary benefit claims to income support by 11 April in all offices although a small number of offices still have some way to go. The table shows the position in each of the seven regions on 11 March 1988.

Region	Percentage local converted[1]
Scotland	89
North East	83
North West	84
Midlands	82
Wales and South Western	85
London North	74
London South	70

[1] Staff are using the conversion to update claims records. The exercise has shown that some claims are still recorded as live even though the person is no longer receiving supplementary benefit. This means that some recent counts of the number of current supplementary benefit claims on which these percentages are based have not reflected the fall in the number of people receiving supplementary benefit.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide for employee families with children, figures similar to those in table 9B of "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits" showing average changes in disposable income after housing costs (a) below gross earnings levels ranging from £75 to £200 and (b) below present disposable income levels after housing costs ranging from £75 to £200, the figures all to be displayed in £25 steps.

Mr. Portillo: The figures are in the table:

All income related benefits:
Average change in disposable income after meeting housing costs:
Employee families with children in real terms

Gross weekly original income, less than (£)	Average change £ per week	Present disposable income after housing costs, less than (£)	Average change £ per week
75	+4·10	75	+12·60
100	+3·10	100	+3·70
125	+3·60	125	+3·40
150	+3·40	150	+3·50
175	+3·40	175	+3·50
200	+3·40	200	+3·40

The estimates are consistent with assumptions in "Impact of The Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits," October 1987, cover survey families of all sizes, ages and tenure types and include both couples and lone parents who are employees in employment working 24 or more remunerative hours. No adjustments have been made for the 1988 Budget changes.

Adjudication Officers' Guide

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the adjudication officers' guide will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The adjudication officers' guide will be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office today. Its 10 volumes contain detailed guidance on the full range of adjudicable social security benefits including the new benefits of family credit and income support. Previous guidance on other benefits, most of which was not published, has been completely rewritten. The guide will be invaluable both to adjudication officers in determining social security claims and questions and to outside agencies in providing help and advice to claimants. Copies have been placed in the Library.

NHS Finance

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each district health authority, regional health authority and special health authority and for England as a total the amount of income to the National Health Service from (a) charitable appeals, (b) subscriptions, (c) donations and grants, (d) legacies, (e) dividends and interests and (f) the total trust fund income for the latest available year.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 1 March 1988]: Tables showing information for National Health Service trust funds and derived from the 1986-87 accounts of health authorities in England have been placed in the Libarary.

Children in Care

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the annual figures for the number of children received into care by reason of homelessness; if he will give this information for England as a whole and for each local authority area; what are the latest figures for the number of children in local authority care where the reason for their admission into care was homelessness; if he will give this information for England as a whole for each local authority area for the years ended 31 March 1985, 1986 and 1987 or the three most recent years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 25 March 1988]: A child may be taken into care for a number of reasons of which homelessness may be a contributory factor, although not identified as a specific cause in the statistics.

Information on children in care where the specific cause was that their family was homeless is given in the tables for 1984, 1985 and 1986 for each local authority in England.

EMPLOYMENT

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this be not done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Lee: The Department of Employment operates a system whereby responses to consultative documents issued by my Department are made available in the Library for public inspection, on request. Responses are not made available when the respondents have stated that they do not wish their comments to be made public.

Deaf People (Training Schemes)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what plans he has to increase the supply of properly qualified communicators with deaf people on training schemes;

(2) whether he intends to establish further courses along the lines of that run at Bournville further education college, Birmingham, to train communicators with deaf people.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission is committed to assist in increasing the supply of trained communicators for deaf people in order to support deaf trainees in the commission's youth and adult training programme. Plans include the setting up and running of a number of courses over the next year to 18 months based on the experiences of the Bournville course, which was itself funded by the commission.

Telephone Communications

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why telephone callers to his Department's advertised number of 213 3000 are being asked successively to redial two further numbers, the last of which is mainly engaged; what action he proposes to take to improve telephone communications with his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The 213 3000 number for this Department was changed to a new number on 18 January 1988 as part of the modernisation programme of the Whitehall telephone exchange system which is run by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA), as part of the common service to Government Departments.

After the changeover, a recorded message was placed on the 213 number and callers were asked to phone a central switchboard where they are told the new number of the person or section they want to contact. Provided the extension is not busy the call is then transferred, avoiding the need to dial an additional number.

However, the passport office was also on the old 213 exchange and because of the large number of people who ring there the number has sometimes become overloaded. At such times operators have asked callers to dial the new number directly in order to deal more quickly with new inquiries.

The CCTA has recently installed a new intercept recorded announcement message, which gives more prominence to the new number of the passport office. This should reduce the number of callers erroneously ringing the number used by this Department. The volume of callers on the 213 number is also decreasing as people are becoming aware of the new numbers. The CCTA is also ensuring that all callers who ring the 273 number are transferred to the new extension number and are not being asked to make a further call.

Adult Training Scheme

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received asking him to reconsider his decision to require those participating in the adult training scheme to pay the first £5 of their travel expenses.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received asking him to reconsider his decision to require those participating in the adult training scheme to pay the first £5 of their travel expenses.

Mr. Nicholls: None. It was the unanimous recommendation of the Manpower Services Commission that only participants' travel expenses in excess of £5 should be met, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted this.

Dock Workers

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent registered dock workers in the East Anglia labour board area in each year from 1980 to 1986 have been dismissed by their employer for an offence justifying summary dismissal under the disciplinary provisions of the dock labour scheme; how many of these men have been reinstated by order of the local dock labour board and appeal tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The figures requested are as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Permanent workers dismissed for offence justifying summary dismissal	—	—	—	2	—	—	—
Reinstated by order of East Anglia Dock Labour Board and Appeal Tribunals	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dismissal upheld by East Anglia Dock Labour Board and Appeal Tribunals	—	—	—	2	—	—	—

Training Schemes

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many school leavers were on YTS/YOPs schemes during 1987; and hos many and what percentage of these school leavers obtained work on completing their time on the scheme.

Mr. Cope: There were on average about 400,000 young people training on YTS at any one time in 1987. The youth opportunities programme ended in 1983. The latest Manpower Services Commission follow-up surveys of YTS leavers show that of those who completed their training programme between April 1986 and September 1987, 73 per cent. were in work at the time of the surveys.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the employment programme is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Cope: In 1987-88 it is estimated that approximately one third of the expenditure by this Department and the Manpower Services Commission on employment, training and enterprise programmes in England is in the inner cities.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to privatising the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government have no plans to privatise the Health and Safety Executive.

Wages

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will delineate the average, in percentage and real terms, increase in wage levels in all regions of the United Kingdom from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: I am sending the hon. Member the information requested, which is also available in the Library.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of applications to industrial tribunals in each of the last three years for which figures are available have been subject to a pre-hearing assessment; in how many cases a warning as to costs was issued; and following such warning how many applications were withdrawn.

Mr. Nicholls [pursuant to his reply, 7 March 1988, c. 37]: I regret that there were some errors in my original reply. The correct information should read as follows:

	12 months ending
	31 December 1984	31 March 1986	31 March 1987

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent registered dock workers in the West Scotland local dock labour board area in each year from 1980 to 1986 have been dismissed by their employer for an offence justifying summary dismissal under the disciplinary provisions of the dock labour scheme; and how many of these men have been reinstated by order of the local dock labour board and appeal tribunals.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places have been allocated under the community programme for crime prevention.

Mr. Hurd: On 29 February 1988, the latest available date for which information is available, 8,637 community programme places had been approved on 323 crime prevention schemes.

Charities

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to amend the law governing charities so as to give the Charity Commission power to take action against a charity operating contrary to the law.

Mr. Hurd: Charities are subject to the criminal law in the normal way. In addition, the Charity Commission has powers under sections 6 and 20 of the Charities Act 1960 to investigate any charity and where necessary take action to protect its property. The Government have accepted that the commission's powers for dealing with abuse should be strengthened in line with the recommendations of the Woodfield report, and will introduce legislation accordingly.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to amend the law governing charities to ensure that greater importance is attached to the methods by which the charity fulfils its objects.

Mr. Hurd: Trustees are under a clear obligation to ensure that the method by which a charity fulfils its objects are within the law. Action can be taken against a charity wherever there is evidence that its activities are not in the public interest.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ensure persons with convictions for dishonesty are not permitted to become charitable trustees.

Mr. Hurd: One of the recommendations of the Woodfield report is that provision should be made that no person should, without the permission in writing of the commissioners, act as the trustee of a charity if they have been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty. The Government intend to introduce legislation to implement the Woodfield report's recommendations before the end of the life of this Parliament.

Prisoners (Education)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison daytime and evening education classes were held; what was the average number of prisoners in each class, and what was the total number of hours of education in the most recent convenient week, at each of the following prisons: Birmingham, Leeds, Pentonville, Manchester, Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs and Holloway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information for the week commencing 14 March 1988 is as follows:

	Number of classes		Average number of inmates in each class	Total number of class hours
	Day	Evening
Birmingham	33	0	8·3	66
Leeds	75	36	7·2	222
Pentonville	64	33	6·5	193
Manchester	44	15	7·6	109
Wandsworth	47	49	7·8	209·5
Wormwood Scrubs	21	39	8·3	120
Holloway	[1]102	20	8·6	244

[1] Figure includes vocational training.

As the Government's recent reply to the second report from the Select Committee on Education, Science and Arts on prison education makes clear, very positive efforts are being made to improve both the quantity and the quality of education in Prison Department establishments. The figures for a small selection of prisons, including some of our most overcrowded local establishments, should not be regarded as representative. At Birmingham, for instance, where the level of overcrowding makes movement to classes very difficult, considerable work has been done on the development of learning packs for use in cell.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act the Metropolitan police and police national computer unit have received; what were the anticipated number of requests; and whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by the police as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that from 11 November 1987 to 24 March 1988, the Metropolitan police have received subject access requests under the Data Protection Act 1984, as follows:

	Number
i. for disclosure from the police national computer	34
ii. for disclosure from data registered in common on the police national computer and on force systems	45
iii. for disclosure from Metropolitan police systems only	10

The Metropolitan police had anticipated some 4,000 applications per annum.

Over the same period, the subject access office of the National Identification Bureau, which deals with requests for access to data on the police national computer, has received 404.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will provide information to the Data Protection Registrar in a way that does not compromise national security, on the number, scope and extent of the certificates that he has signed under section 27 of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Hurd: Such arrangements are not required by the Data Protection Act and would not be in the interest of national security.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the benefits for the public of the code of practice covering personal data used for police purposes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The public benefit from the procedures set out in the code of practice since they seek to ensure that personal data held on police computer systems are properly obtained, maintained and secured in all forces, and comply with the data protection principles laid down in the Data Protection Act 1984.

Prison Workshops

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many workshops there are; and for how many hours they were open in the most recent convenient week at each of the following prisons: Birmingham, Leeds, Pentonville, Manchester, Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs and Holloway.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the week ending 28 February 1988 the following numbers of industrial workshops were in operation in each of the listed prisons:

Number of Workshops	Opening Hours

Heavy Textiles I	13.75

Prisoners (Employment)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum number of prisoners who can be employed; and how many prisoners were actually employed (a) in workshops and (b) on other tasks in the most recent convenient week, at each of the following prisons: Birmingham, Leeds, Pentonville, Manchester, Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs and Holloway.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

	No. of Employment Places		Average number Employed in w/e 28 February 1988
	Industrial Workshops and Farms and Gardens	Domestic Catering and Maintenance Duties	Industrial Workshops and Farms and Gardens	Domestic Catering and Maintenance Duties

Wandsworth	451	288	202	288
Wormwood Scrubs	228	204	137	173
Holloway	52	97	14	90

In addition to those employed in work as defined above, significant numbers of prisoners were also engaged in other out of cell activities including full or part-time education, vocational training and construction industry training courses.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of his Department's expenditure is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Hurd: Much Home Office expenditure goes to inner city areas without being specifically targeted to them. It would involve disproportionate cost to calculate the sums involved.

Police Officers (Firearms)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance he has issued to chief constables about the use by police officers of firearms to shoot animals;

(2) what was the number of operations in which firearms were issued to police officers in England and Wales in 1987 where the firearms were used to shoot animals; how many animals were so killed; and if he will list the species involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The guidance issued to chief constables about the use of firearms to destroy dangerous animals is contained in a comprehensive booklet prepared by the West Yorkshire police force in conjunction with the Association of Chief Police Officers. I am arranging for a copy of that guidance to be placed in the Library.

Firearms were issued to police officers on 41 operations in England and Wales in 1987 for the destruction of animals; 44 beasts were destroyed. The species included bullocks, bulls, cows, deer, dogs, horses and pigs.

Passports

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it is now taking his Department's office at Peterborough to process legitimate passport applications.

Mr. Renton: Correctly completed non-urgent applications are now being dealt with within 26 working days. Urgent applications are given priority.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for the urgent return of passports were received by his Department during February from people whose passports had been sent to the Home Office before 31 December 1987 in connection with applications for British citizenship.

Mr. Renton: No comprehensive statistics are available concerning the number of such requests. The practice is to undertake searches when urgency is established.

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there has been an increase in demand for passports; what action is being taken to avoid delays in the handling of passport applications in advance of computerisation of the passport offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: So far this year overall demand for new passports and for amendments to existing passports has been over 25 per cent. up on the corresponding period of 1987. In anticipation that this heavy demand will continue throughout the summer months a number of special measures are being taken to help reduce delays at the passport offices. These include:

(1) the recruitment of additional staff at all offices;
(2) overtime working at weekends;
(3) the immediate grant of free short-term extensions to expired passports for personal callers;
(4) issuing emergency travel documents to personal callers whose postal applications cannot readily be traced.

In addition, Governments of countries to which British citizens travel most frequently have been approached and invited exceptionally to accept travellers using uncancelled United Kingdom passports which have expired within the last five years, or British visitor's passports, where these are not already accepted. British visitor's passports, which are already accepted by all countries in Western Europe, are currently available from the 1,500 main post offices in Britain from Monday to Friday only. It is hoped to extend this service shortly to Saturday mornings.

To date, the following countries have either agreed, or have indicated their willingness in principle, to accept expired passports and British visitor's passports under these arrangements:

USA
Israel
Netherlands
Hong Kong
Antigua and Barbuda.

Information about these arrangements, including the operative dates of agreements with other countries, will be made available through the travel trade, on Prestel, and through the media.

The phased programme of computerisation of the United Kingdom passport offices is due to begins in July this year. Glasgow will be the first, and arrangements are in hand to disperse work on postal applications now done in London to that office as soon as practicable following computerisation, to relieve the pressures on the London office. Computerisation of the remaining five passport offices should be completed by the end of 1989.

Computerisation is designed to enable the passport offices to cope with the anticipated rises in future demand for passport services without the excessive and unacceptable delays that have arisen in recent years with the present outdated manual system of passport production.

Prisoners (Drug Addicts)

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the percentage of prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons who have a drug addiction and who have their habit sustained while they are in prison custody.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of inmates reported by medical officers as having some degree of dependence on drugs at the same time of their reception into custody is included in the medical statistics on page 70 of the "Report On The Work of the Prison Service 1986-87" (Cm. 246), a copy of which is in the Library. It shows that 3,051 were so reported during that year. Information is not available on which to estimate how many sustain their addiction while in custody. The House was informed in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 14 December 1987, at column 342, of measures taken in Her Majesty's prisons to prevent and detect illicit drugs.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what treatments and counselling services are provided for those receiving prison sentences who are found to be hard drug addicts;

(2) what survey is made of those prisoners serving sentences who have a hard drug addiction; and what clinical and psychological efforts are made to get them off the habit and to attempt to dissuade them from returning to drug taking, either in prison or after their release.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As the House was informed in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 14 December, at columns 342-43, the possibility of a history of drugs misuse is one of the factors medical officers inquire into during the course of their examination of inmates being received into prison custody. Where indicated, medical help in withdrawing is offered, its nature and extent determined by the medical officer's clinical assessment of the individual case. Additionally, at a number of establishments personal support continuing after withdrawal is provided by members of staff or drug counselling agencies from the community.

Guidelines prepared in discussion between the Prison Department and probation service for the introduction at all establishments of a more co-ordinated response to drug misusers were issued on 25 September 1987. These describe the responsibility of the Government to ensure the development of a coherent system and the complementary roles of medical and probation officers in the provision of care and support. The use of suitable drug counselling agencies from the community is encouraged. The particular advice offered an inmate prior to discharge will depend upon individual circumstances but progressively as the system is introduced will include the issue of a brief advisory card with which all establishments have been supplied. A copy of the guidelines and card are in the Library.

Traffic Wardens (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many traffic wardens were deployed in each London borough during the last three completed years.

Mr Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The traffic warden service was restructured under the reorganisation of the force and responsibility for operational matters devolved to areas. The number of traffic wardens in each of the areas at the end of the last two years was as follows:

	31 December 1986	31 December 1987
No. 1 Area (North)	185	154
No. 2 Area (East)	89	100
No. 3 Area (South East)	169	156
No. 4 Area (South)	189	153
No. 5 Area (South West)	75	77
No. 6 Area (West)	176	156
No. 7 Area (North West)	196	187
No. 8 Area (Central)	429	413
	1,508	1,396

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has, pursuant to his reply of 11 March, Official Report, column 357, on the reasons for the reduction of traffic wardens in London between 31 December 1984 and 31 December 1987.

Mr Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the fall in the number of traffic wardens is due to a high level of resignations and a shortfall in recruitment. Dissatisfaction with pay and conditions are given as the main reasons for resignation. A scrutiny of the traffic warden service has made recommendations for improvements which are being considered.

London Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he refused to allow the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority to maintain the Greater London co-ordinating centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Greater London co-ordination centre (GLECC) has been maintained by the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority by virtue of temporary sanctions under section 19 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982. The authority sought primary legislation which would enable it to maintain GLECC on a permanent basis. We concluded, in the light of expert advice, that there was no role for GLECC that could not otherwise be met and that primary legislation would not be justified. The London boroughs have the necessary powers to fund the authority to maintain GLECC if they consider there is a need.

Police Act 1964

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases in 1987 damages have been paid after judgment under section 48(2)(a) of the Police Act 1964; what was the average settlement figure; and what was the average level of damages awarded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Metropolitan Police (Wrongful Acts)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the amounts paid in out-of-court settlements of claims arising from the wrongful acts of Metropolitan police officers in 1987; and what were the amounts paid under awards made by courts in 1987 and the number of cases concluded in 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that in 1987 the total amount paid by the Metropolitan police in settlements out of court arising from allegations of wrongful acts by Metropolitan police officers (whether or not formal proceedings were instituted) was £173,714. A total of £11,233 was paid under awards made by the courts. In all, 133 cases were concluded.

BBC Hulton Picture Library

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future of the BBC Hulton picture library.

Mr. Renton: I understand that it is the BBC's intention to sell the Hulton picture library. There are likely to be certain conditions attached to its sale, however, which might include a requirement for it to remain in the United Kingdom and for it to retain its title.

Immigration Officers (Birmingham)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers were based at the Birmingham immigration office at 31 December 1987.

Mr. Renton: Twenty-four.

Entry Clearance Applications

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many entry clearance applications had been referred to his Department by entry clearance officers but had not yet been allocated to an immigration office at 31 December 1987.

Mr. Renton: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Summer Time

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government have in mind for the future of summer time.

Mr. Hurd: An order has been laid before Parliament to continue the present arrangements for 1989. Departments are being asked to consult interested groups on the merits of three options which emerged with the most support from a preliminary survey towards the end of last year. These are the continuation of the present position: the harmonisation of the date for ending summer time to bring it into line with the rest of the Community; or the introduction of Greenwich mean time plus one hour in the winter, with Greenwich mean time plus two hours from the end of March to the end of September. The last option would mean that the United Kingdom would be in the same time zone as most other EC countries throughout the whole year. Copies of the consultation document have today been placed in the Library of the House. After this consultation process has been completed the Government will canvas public and parliamentary opinion more generally with a view to testing the degree of support for change.

Lunar House, Croydon

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average and maximum recorded delay before members of the public are able to get through by telephone to the passport and immigration departments, respectively, at Lunar house, Croydon.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 25 March 1988]: Information is not available on the number of calls to Lunar house which receive an engaged tone. Information is available on the average and maximum recorded delays for calls from members of the public who have been connected to the nationality telephone inquiry bureau at Lunar house but whose calls have not yet been answered. This does not, however, distinguish between calls that are answered and those that are terminated by the exchange equipment or the callers.

Over the three months from December 1987 to February 1988 the average and maximum recorded delays described above were three minutes and 14 minutes respectively.

Similar information about calls answered by the immigration telephone inquiry bureau is not available. However, on the afternoon of 22 March, the average waiting time was six minutes. The longest delay was nine minutes.

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are currently employed answering telephone calls from the public in the passport and immigration departments at Lunar house, Croydon; and what was the comparable figure 12 months ago.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 25 March 1988]: The nationality telephone inquiry bureau has nine staff answering telephone calls from the public compared to six, 12 months ago.

The immigration telephone inquiry bureau has an average of 10 staff carrying out this duty compared to 17 a year ago. The reduction reflects the priority given to providing staff for the public inquiry office which deals with those who call in person.

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve telephone access to the public of the facilities at Lunar house, Croydon.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 25 March 1988]: The matter is being given urgent consideration.

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outside telephone lines are currently available to receive calls from the public at the passport and immigration departments at Lunar house, Croydon.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 25 March 1988]: The nationality telephone inquiry bureau has 14 telephone lines available to receive calls from the public. There are 30 lines in the immigration telephone inquiry bureau.

Michael Ryan

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to what procedure was used by the late Michael Ryan to deliver his original firearms form 1 application to Thames Valley police;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the date and procedure used by the late Michael Ryan to deliver firearms form 1 applications for variation to Thames Valley police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that this information is not available.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to the date and procedure used to deliver the original firearms certificate to the late Michael Ryan and the registration identification number;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to the date and procedure used to deliver the varied firearms certificates to the late Michael Ryan, and the registration identification number.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that records relating to the delivery of firearm certificates are destroyed after six months. The information requested is therefore not available. However, the normal practice is to send firearm certificates by recorded delivery through the post.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to which of the chief constable, deputy chief constable or assistant chief constable personally authorised the original grant of the firearms certificate to the late Michael Ryan, or the rank to which they delegated that responsibility;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the date on which either the chief constable, deputy chief constable or assistant chief constable personally authorised the variations to the firearms certificate of the late Michael Ryan or the rank to which that responsibility was delegated.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that Michael Ryan's application for a firearm certificate was authorised at assistant chief constable level and that his variation applications were also authorised at that level on 30 April 1987 and 30 July 1987.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to the ranks of police officers or civilians receiving the late Michael Ryan's application for the original grant of a firearms certificate at police headquarters;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to the date on which the original firearms form 1 application was received and recorded at local station level and by what rank of police officer or civilian acting for the police in the case of the application of the late Michael Ryan;

(3) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the date and the rank of police officers or civilians recording receipt of the grant fee of £25, the receipt number and date in respect of firearms certificates issued to the late Michael Ryan by Thames Valley police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that Michael Ryan's application for the grant of firearms certificate was received at Hungerford police station on 26 November 1986 by a police constable who issued a receipt (number 472484) for the fee paid. The application was received at police headquarters by the assistant chief constable on 10 December 1986.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the contents of the statement made by the ex-manager of the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon, to the police, into the status of the late Michael Ryan's membership on 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 December 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: No. It is not the practice to disclose the contents of statements obtained during police inquiries into criminal offences.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the police have located or seized a 7·65mm/0·32 Scorpion machine pistol alleged to have been held at any time by the late Michael Ryan on a firearms certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that they have no knowledge of the weapon in question.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many firearms certificates had been granted on, or prior to, 11 December 1986 by the Thames Valley police to applicants giving their good reasons as (a) probationary or (b) full membership of the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that no firearm certificates were issued on or before the date in question to applicants giving probationary membership of the Dunmore shooting centre as their good reason for possessing a firearm. Information in respect of applicants having full membership at that time is not known.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place a copy of the original home approval certificate for the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon, and any subsequent amendments or additions to, and renewals of it in the Library;

(2) if he will (a) list and (b) place in the Library copies of all relevant documents relating to inquiries made and completed by his Department and Thames Valley or other police forces into the applications by the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon, for consideration for the issue, amendment, additions to, or renewals of, his Department's approval certificates;

(3) if he will (a) list and (b) place in the Library a copy of all documents submitted in the course of the applications by the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon to the police or his Department for the issue, amendment, addition to, or renewal of, his Department's approval certificates;

(4) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to on which date the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon, was first granted his Department's approval and on which subsequent dates this approval was reviewed and certificates reissued or renewed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: The club in question was approved for the use of small and full-bore pistols on 16 September 1986 and approval was extended to small and full-bore rifles on 15 February 1988.

It is not the practice to place documents of this kind in the House Library.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of Home Office form coded PSL 4381 Firearms 20. (Rev. 5/69) and all such amended variations since 1968 to include draft and any final copies of those forms recommended by his recent working parties.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: We have been unable to identify the form requested with either the Home Office stationery branch or Her Majesty's Stationery Office. If the hon. Member would care to send further details of the form requested we will look into the matter further.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place in the Library (a) a copy of Thames Valley police form FIR 25(9/74), (b) all such previous variations of copy since 1968, (c) all amended variations of copy form since 19 August 1987 and (d) a copy of the questionnaire completed by police officers or civilians after interview of the late Michael Ryan upon receipt by Thames Valley police of his original firearms form 1 application for a firearms certificate;

(2) if he will place in the Library (a) a copy of Thames Valley police form FIR 25(9/74) and (b) a copy of the questionnaire completed by police officers or police civilian employees after interviewing the late Michael Ryan upon receipt by Thames Valley police of his firearms form 1 variations applications to his firearms certificate;

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that Michael Ryan's applications for a varitation of his firearm certificate were received on 24 March 1987 and 17 July 1987 at Hungerford police station by a police sergeant who issued receipts for the variation fee paid (numbers 503378 and 508185). It was received by the assistant chief constable the following day for approval. His second application was submitted by a police constable to an acting inspector on or about 25 July 1987 who forwarded it on the same day to a chief inspector. The application was received on 30 July 1987 by the assistant chief constable for approval.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that a police constable visited Michael Ryan's house on 30 November 1986 to inspect his storage and security arrangements in respect of his application for a firearm certificate. Further inspections were carried out on 28 March 1987 and 25 July 1987 by a police officer of the same rank in respect of applications made to vary the original certificate. A survey was also carried out by a police constable from the community liaison department as a crime prevention officer.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to date on which the late Michael Ryan signed and dated his original firearms form 1 application for a firearms certificate; and if he will place a copy of it in the Library;

The requested documents are essentially for police operational use, and I do not think it right to place them in the Library.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the date and the ranks of police officers or civilian police employees completing the checks with the criminal records office for the variations to the firearms certificate of the late Michael Ryan;

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that it is common practice for reporting officers to telephone club secretaries to confirm membership of a club and to discuss an application with the secretary. Available police records indicate that the secretaries of both clubs in question were contacted but not the dates on which inquiries were made.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to on what dates police officers or civilians acting for the police discussed the application for the original grant of a firearms certificate with the late Michael Ryan;

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that the good reason given by Michael Ryan on his firearm application and renewal forms was target shooting on approved ranges.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many Thames Valley police officers were involved in giving any form of instruction or guidance in (a) the use of firearms or (b) related matters, to the late Michael Ryan, giving ranks and dates.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that Michael Ryan's applications for provisional and full membership of the club in question were granted by its manager on August bank holiday 1986 and 8 December 1986 respectively. Details relating to the consideration given to these applications is not known. Nor is it known whether the applications were made in writing.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the date of purchase, sale or transfer by the late Michael Ryan of all firearms, giving the make and model and quantity of each calibre of ammunition in each case and the names of all firearms dealers involved.

I further understand that Michael Ryan was authorised to possess, at any one time, 500 rounds of each calibre, but restricted to acquiring only 200 rounds at any one time of each calibre. Information relating to the amount of ammunition he purchased is not known as this is recorded on the firearm certificate presumed destroyed at the fire at his home.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many entries were made by the late Michael Ryan in the register of users of the range facilities of the Dunmore shooting centre;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many visits were made, and on what dates, by the late Michael Ryan to the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that since September 1987 the club in question requires a minimum period of six months probation before full membership may be conferred.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the dates and ranks of all police officers or civilians (a) involved in and (b) authorising by means of signature each stage of inquiries relating to the original grant of the application by the late Michael Ryan of a firearms certificate; and which stages did not contain a request for a signature, rank, or date by inquiring police officers;

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. Local provision of living accommodation available for those discharged from mental hospitals comprises a wide range of residential types including hostels, group homes, residential and nursing homes and private accommodation run by individual carers. This range of accommodation is operated by the statutory, private and voluntary sectors and is not necessarily solely for those discharged from mental hospitals.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses have been discharged from mental hospitals in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is given below:

1981	1,015
1980	1,078

1977	1,040

These figures may include patients discharged more than once in the same year.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is estimated that 36·8 per cent. of the population of Northern Ireland aged 16 and over in 1987 were Roman Catholic and 60·9 per cent non-Roman Catholic. In the survey from which these figures are taken 2 to 3 per cent. of those surveyed did not state a religion.

	Protestant per cent.	Catholic per cent.
Bank of Ireland	42	58
Allied Irish Banks plc	28	72

The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland employs Allied Irish Banks plc as its banker. No other Northern Ireland Department employs either bank as its principal banker, although several have isolated accounts with one or the other.

International Investments Ltd.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the progress of inquiries into the losses incurred by Northern Ireland investors with International Investments Ltd. of Gibraltar.

Mr. Stanley: The Royal Ulster Constabulary's fraud squad has been conducting an investigation into the financial affairs of International Investments Ltd. following the collapse of the company in June 1984. I can confirm that papers on the case have been passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions, who directed no prosecution against agents employed by the company in Northern Ireland. The police investigation is continuing into other aspects of the case and it is likely to be some time before it is concluded.

Radioactive Fallout

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the medical consequences of the radioactive fallout in Northern Ireland (a) as anticipated following the fire in No. 1 Pile at Windscale in October 1957 and (b) by today's standards.

Dr. Mawhinney: No medical consequences were anticipated in 1957 nor have the Government any evidence to suggest that the health of people in Northern Ireland has been adversely affected by this incident.

1985	3,233	169

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which district councils are within each group system for the employment of environmental health and building control staff; in each group, which council has the authority to make the individual appointments; and what roles or authority the other councils have in each group when new appointments are being made.

Dr. Mawhinney: The district councils which are within each group system for the employment of environmental health and building control staff are prescribed in article 3 of the Local Government (Employment of Environmental Health Officers) Order (NI) 1973 (SR & O (NI) 1973 No. 168) and the Local Government (Employment of Building Control Staff) Order (NI) 1973 (SR & O (NI) 1973 No. 167) copies of which are available in the Library. Article 4(1) of those orders identifies those councils, known as employer councils, which have authority to make individual appointments.

Other councils within each group have a representative role in relation to appointments. They are represented on a group committee which advises the employer council on staffing levels and they may also be present on shortlisting and interviewing panels for new appointments although they have no voting rights.

Community Programme

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the guidelines set out for entrance on the community programme in the Province; and whether consultations are held with relevant representatives of commerce and business prior to community programme schemes being undertaken.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has of how many jobs outside Harland and Wolff are directly related to the activities of the company (a) in Northern Ireland and (b) in Great Britain.

Dr. Mawhinney: Based on a number of recent studies the number of jobs in Northern Ireland directly related to the activities of Harland and Wolff is about 500. There are insufficient statistical data available to provide an accurate assessment of the numbers in Great Britain.

Residential and Commercial Property

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to have replaced the use of site value as a basis of compensation for residential or commercial property compulsorily required for redevelopment by a more equitable arrangement for compensation through market value payments.

Dr. Mawhinney: Legislation to abolish the site value rule for residential property in article 91(1) of the Housing (NI) Order 1981 will be brought forward as soon as practicable in line with a similar proposal for Great Britain. The current site value rule does not apply to commercial properties for which compensation is already assessed on the basis of market value.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of his Department's budget is spent in the inner cities.

Mr. Stanley: There is no formal definition of inner city areas for Northern Ireland. However, several measures are specifically designed to promote urban regeneration and the budget for these schemes in 1988/89 is £15·4 million.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the role of Royal Ulster Constabulary informants and paid agents, and the control over payments made to them and as to what sums were used for these purposes in the latest available year; what was the largest sum paid to one individual in the latest available year; when changes were last made in the financial controls; what were the last changes made in procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: It is not the practice to comment on such matters.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what form of declaration of secrecy officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary are required to sign; and what guidance is given to them on the extent to which this permits or obliges them to conceal material evidence from investigating officers or the courts.

Mr. Tom King: All RUC officers are subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act 1911, 1920 and 1939. No guidance of the type mentioned by the hon. Member is given.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Royal Ulster Constabulary personnel are also members of the Orange Order, Freemasons, Royal Black Preceptory and the Apprentice Boys; if he will initiate an investigation into the effects of this membership and compatibility of such membership with service in the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 28 March 1988]: The information requested is not available. There are no plans to initiate such an investigation.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civilians have been killed by members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary since 1969.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Forty, including civilians believed to have been terrorists and civilians who were not.

Urgent Needs Payments

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recovery of urgent needs payments made as a result of flood damage in Strabane, indicating what consideration was given to the questions referred to in 58602 (2) of the urgent cases regulation 25 under the Supplementary Benefit Act 1976, section 4(2).

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The recovery of urgent needs payments made as a result of flood damage in Strabane is being considered in accordance with regulation 25 of the urgent cases regulations and with paragraph 8602 and other relevant paragraphs of the supplementary benefit manual.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the procedure instructions in code AX to adjudication officers in Northern Ireland regarding the manner and rate of recovery of an urgent needs payment and whether to abandon recovery.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The procedures for both the recovery and abandonment of recovery of urgent needs payments in Northern Ireland follow those in operation in the rest of the United Kingdom. They provide for recovery to be abandoned where the claimant's resources are at or below supplementary benefit level and there is no, or is unlikely to be, available capital or disregarded income from which recovery may be made. In those cases where recovery action is appropriate, repayment may be made either by a lump sum payment, where the claimant has available capital, or by instalments, or deduction from supplementary benefit or other prescribed benefits. In each case the rate of recovery is determined in relation to the claimant's resources and requirements. Where supplementary benefit is in payment the weekly rate of recovery is subject to an overriding limit of £10 where there is available capital, or half the weekly amount of disregarded income.

Where supplementary benefit is not in payment, the weekly rate of recovery is limited to the amount by which resources exceed supplementary benefit requirements plus half of any disregarded income or £10 where there is available capital, subject to an overriding limit of one third of the claimants' personal benefit rate.

Homes (Insulation)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the total financial allocation to the new homes insulation scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 March 1988]: The allocation for this scheme for the 1988-89 financial year is £297,000.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the numbers of insulation grants made in each of the past three years to people who were not on housing benefit, supplementary benefit, or family income supplement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 March 1988]: No such information is available.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the numbers and total values of supplementary benefit single payments for insulation or draught-proofing in Northern Ireland in 1986 and 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 March 1988]: Information in the precise form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the annual statistical inquiry shows that the following payments were made for draughtproofing during the preceding 12 months to people on supplementary benefit at the time of the inquiry:

Inquiry	Single Payments
	Numbers	£
February 1986	8,307	468,718
May 1986	11,776	502,319

Source: 5 per cent. sample.

Chernobyl

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations have taken place into the presence of radioactive materials deposited in Northern Ireland as a result of the accident at Chernobyl; what is his assessment of the period which will pass before restrictions on the affected areas will be lifted; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 March 1988]: Following the accident at Chernobyl the Departments of Agriculture and Environment undertook Province-wide investigations into the levels of radioactivity in milk and milk products, meat, fish, forage, fruit, cereals, migratory birds, air and water. Experimental investigations were carried out on the transfer of radio caesium from forage to milk, milk products and sheepmeat.

It is not possible at this time to predict when the controls on the movement and slaughter of sheep from the three restricted areas could be lifted.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been paid, for how many sheep, and to how many farmers in Northern Ireland for each year or financial year as a result of the Chernobyl accident.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 March 1988]: To 28 March 1987 in the current financial year, £951·85 was paid to three farmers in respect of market loss on 121 sheep and £11,688·30 was paid to 83 farmers in respect of handling costs of 8,991 sheep.

Extraditions (Irish Republic)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now list the names of the persons for whom extradition warrants were sent from Northern Ireland to the Irish Rebublic in each of the last five years, indicating in each case which persons were extradited, which warrants were held to be defective, and the manner in which they were defective in each case, and whether the persons being sought were to be charged with terrorist-type activity.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 29 March 1988]: As I indicated to the hon. Gentleman on 9 February, at column 165, it would not be in the public interest to give details of individual cases prior to Irish court proceedings, Furthermore, it must be remembered that an extradition application can consist of many individual warrants and be the subject of extensive discussion with the Irish authorities.

Against this background, the available information is as follows:

Table A
Terrorist-type offences

Year of request	Number of requests	Granted	Held to be defective while before Irish courts	Other outcome[3]

1987	21	0	0	21

[1] B. Burns—warrants defective owing to irregularity in issue.
[2] J. G. O'Reilly—warrants defective primarily because it could not be proved that the person issuing them was a judicial authority.

Table B

[3] Includes cases where the warrants were subsequently withdrawn, the fugitive was arrested in the United Kingdom, cases rejected by the Irish courts for other reasons and cases as yet uncompleted.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 29 March 1988]: Total expenditure under this head in 1987-88 is estimated at £2,862,000.

MV Saga Moon

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the incident on the vessel Saga Moon in the port of Belfast, on 14 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 28 March 1988]: No. The officers involved in the alleged incident on the Saga Moon were members of the Belfast harbour police and as such do not come under the jurisdiction of the Chief Constable of the RUC.

Sinn Fein

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about his policy towards proscription of Sinn Fein and organisations which may pose a threat to the state.

Mr. King [holding answer 28 March 1988]: As I made clear in the House on 17 March, at columns 1247-48, in response to questions from the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis) and my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), we keep such matters under review.

Homelessness

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the number of homeless households in a given week in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 24 March 1988]: Information on the exact number of homeless households in Northern Ireland is not available. However, the following information gives some indication of the extent of homelessness in Northern Ireland.

At 31 December 1987 26 homeless families and 75 homeless single people were living in temporary accommodation arranged or provided by area health and social services boards and voluntary organisations.

At the same date the total number of applicants who had been awarded A1 status — that is, in need of accommodation because of homelessness or threatened homelessness or other emergency situations—under the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's housing selection scheme was 601. Few, if any, of these applicants were without shelter of some form.

Civilians (Deaths)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civilians have been killed by members of the British armed forces in Northern Ireland since 1969.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Two hundred and forty, including civilians believed to have been terrorists and civilians who were not.

Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing (a) the establishment figures, (b) the funded establishment figures and (c) the in post figures of each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland for the following nursing grades; regional nursing officer 1 and 2, regional nurse 1 and 2, district nursing officer grades 1 to 7, director of nursing services grades 1+ to 6, senior nurse grades 1+ to 8, sister I, sister II, health visitor, deputy nursing sister, staff nurse, senior enrolled nurse, enrolled nurse and nursing auxiliary/assistant; and if he will public, for each grade category, the number of employees in full-time posts, the number of part-time employees and the whole-time equivalents of those part-time employees.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Supplies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the allocation of responsibility for water pipes up to the meter.

Mr. Moynihan: An announcement will be made shortly on this and other aspects of the water and sewerage law review.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to report on water board monitoring of the chemical content of water supplies; and what steps he will take if the chemical content is found to be too high.

Mr. Moynihan: If the chemical content of a public water supply exceeds concentrations permitted under the EC drinking water directive, the water authority must take steps to reduce the concentrations to an acceptable level. If this will take time, the water undertaker must submit an action programme to the Department for approval. My right hon. Friend has no plans to report on monitoring by water undertakers.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there has been any official communication from Her Majesty's Government to the European Commission that the United Kingdom will comply with the European Community drinking water directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The information contained in my statement of 20 January 1988, at column 742, about the withdrawal of nitrate derogations, and in the statement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 21 December 1987, at column 915, about the interpretation of the term "maximum admissible concentration" in the drinking water directive has been officially communicated to the European Commission by Her Majesty's Government.

Non-governmental Organisations (Grants)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the non-governmental organisations in receipt of grants from his Department during 1986-87 and 1987-88 together with the size of each grant.

Mr. Ridley: I have placed in the Library a list of some 185 bodies in receipt of grant from the Department in the relevant years. The Department also operates schemes for providing revenue support to housing associations; assisting companies and other organisations with the cost of reclaiming derelict land; assisting with the provision of water supply and sewerage in assisted areas; and assisting statutory water companies with civil defence costs. The list excludes organisations in receipt of local authority or non departmental public body contributions supported by grant from the Department.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list at 1988-89 prices his Department's initial housing investment programme allocations (a) to English local authorities, (b) to local authorities in Greater London, (c) to metropolitan authorities outside London, (d) to non-metropolitan authorities in the south-east and (e) to English non-metropolitan authorities (i) for 1978-79, (ii) for 1980-81, (iii) for 1982-83 (iv) for 1984-85 (v) for 1986-87 and (vi) for 1988-89.

Mrs. Roe: The figures are in the table:

Local authorities' housing investment programme allocations: England

£ millions: 1988-89 prices

	1978-79	1980-81	1982-83	1984-85	1986-87	1988-89
London boroughs and GLC	1,785	1,177	820	648	469	372
Metropolitan districts	1,339	909	783	579	407	300
Non-metropolitan districts in South East	756	420	389	308	228	150
Other non-metropolitan districts	1,386	864	856	610	435	305
Total	5,266	3,370	2,848	2,145	1,539	1,127

Notes:
1. Figures include the basic allocations and homes insulation scheme allocations, also additional retrospective allocations for 1982-83.
2. South-east is the standard region comprising the authorities in the Department of the Environment administrative eastern (excluding East Anglia) and south-eastern regions.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, at 1986-87 outturn prices, local authorities housing capital expenditure (a) on new building, (b) on renovation of local authority stock, (c) on renovation grants, (d) on loans to housing associations and (e) on other purposes during (i) 1976-77, (ii) 1978-79, (iii) 1980-81, (iv) 1982-83, (v) 1984-85 and (vi) 1986-87; and if he will give this information (1) for England as a whole, (2) for Greater London, (3) for metropolitan authorities outside Greater London, (4) for non metropolitan authorities in the south-east and (5) for non metropolitan authorities in England.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether regulation 4(1)(e) of the Local Government (Prescribed Expenditure) (Amendment) Regulations 1988 applies to capital receipts arising from the disposal of assets acquired by councils from development corporations under the new towns transfer agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to the hon. Members.

North Sea Conference

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the reasons for the United Kingdom's rejection of the European Commission proposal of December 1987 to implement the results of the North sea conference at European Community level.

Mr. Moynihan: Far from rejecting any formal proposal, the United Kingdom agreed with all other member states of the Environment Council on 3 December 1987 on conclusions welcoming the significant progress made at the second international conference on the protection of the North sea. The council recalled the need to combat fresh water and marine pollution, and expected to pursue Community action in this field on the basis of appropriate proposals by the Commission.

McDonald's Hamburgers Ltd.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications submitted by McDonald's Hamburgers Ltd. have been turned down by local authorities since 1979, which have been the subject of an appeal to him; how many appeals have been successful; and from which local planning authority each application has been made.

Mrs. Roe: The information requested is not readily available from departmental records, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Westminster Council (Sale of Cemeteries)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many complaints he has received about the actions of Westminster city council in respect of the sale of cemeteries owned by the authority.

Mr. Chope: Since 4 January we have received 74 letters from members and 39 direct from members of the public.

Chlorofluorocarbon Gases

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be meeting the management of ICI to discuss the phasing out of chlorofluorocarbon gases production.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no plans to do so. Officials in the Department keep in close touch with both United Kingdom producers of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) on the steps they are taking to develop suitable and safe substitutes for the CFCs controlled by the Montreal protocol. ICI has recently reaffirmed its commitment to the development of such alternatives and has scheduled a rapid increase in its investment in this field.

Rating Reform

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of English local authorities regarding the poll tax; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend and I frequently meet representatives of English local authorities in the course of official business and discuss many aspects of the proposed community charge.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the average community charge and the national non-domestic rate that would be levied in 1988-89 if the Local Government Finance Bill were in force.

Mr. Howard: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any analysis from the Association of District Councils regarding the costs of collecting and administering the poll tax in Nottingham.

Mr. Howard: The Association of District Councils undertook a survey last year of the preparation and collection costs of the community charge. From this survey the association extrapolated national estimates but did not supply figures for individual authorities nor offer analysis of their estimates. Nottingham is one of the sample authorities included in the study now being undertaken by Price Waterhouse for my Department.

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the initial costs which will be incurred by Eastbourne borough council in setting up the administrative machinery for the proposed community charge in each of the two years ending 31 March 1989 and 1990 and of the annual administrative costs thereafter; and what financial assistance is proposed to be made by his Department towards those costs.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend included estimates of these costs for all charging authorities in the financial memorandum to the Local Government Finance Bill. I have announced initial capital allocations totalling £25 million towards these costs in 1988-89, which will be distributed to authorities including Eastbourne borough council within the next few days. We shall reflect the further resources needed in 1989-90 and subsequent years in future capital allocations and grant settlements.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from member of religious orders seeking exemption from the community charge; and what response he intends to make.

Mr. Ridley: I have received a number of representations from members of religious orders. The Government propose to table amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill which will have the effect of exempting from the community charge members of religious orders the principal occupation of which is devoted to prayer, contemplation, the relief of suffering, education or such other activities as may be prescribed. The exemption will be limited to those who are dependent on their communities for their material needs, and who have no income or capital of their own.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the average cash figure paid by the lowest paid 5 per cent. of households under the present system towards the cost of local services; what this amount is as a percentage of their average after-tax income; and what these figures will be when the community charge is implemented;

(2) what is the average cash figure paid by the highest paid 5 per cent. of households under the present system towards the cost of local services; what this amount is as a percentage of their average after-tax income; what these figures will be when the community charge is implemented; and what the above figures will be when the income tax changes proposed in the Budget are implemented.

Mr. Ridley: [holding answer 23 March]: Households contribute to the cost of local services both directly via local taxation and indirectly via national taxation. Assessments of the size of contributions rely on data from the family expenditure survey. Limitations in the sample size prevent reliable estimates of the relative contribution of the highest and lowest paid 5 per cent. of households.

Local Authority Publicity

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to include in the forthcoming code of recommended practice on local authority publicity a provision to the effect that a local authority should not engage in publicity in order to promote the use of services offered by a particular private business, to the detriment of other businesses offering similar services to the public in the authority's area.

Mr. Chope: The draft code of recommended practice makes it clear that there should be no discrimination in favour of, or against, persons or groups in the compilation and distribution of local authority publicity material.

South Africa (Rugby Tour)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to uphold the Gleneagles agreement by seeking to ensure that the planned World XV rugby tour to South Africa does not take place.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister confirmed the Government's continuing commitment to the Gleneagles agreement during Prime Minister's questions on 29 March. I welcome the efforts of English Rugby Union to discourage players from taking part in the projected tour.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the numbers of (a) children and (b) pensioners living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation for each local authority in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: At 31 December 1987 there were 10,370 households temporarily placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation by English local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985. Information on the number of children and pensioners in these households is not collected by my Department. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has responsibility for these matters as they affect the Principality.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest cost of keeping a family in bed-and-breakfast accommodation for each local authority in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 16 March, at column 601.

Inner Cities

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the expenditure of his Department is spent in inner cities.

Mr. Ridley: Spending from my Department's programmes specifically targeted at inner cities is expected to be about £1,070 million, 16 per cent. out of a public expenditure total of £6,833 million in 1988-89 for the housing and other environmental services. Inner city areas will also benefit from my Department's other countryside programmes which spend some of their resources in these areas; separate figures for inner cities are not available. Expenditure from these programmes which is not incorporated in the 16 per cent. includes: water authorities, heritage, recreation, local environmental services, other local authority current, most local authority spending on housing.

British Canoe Union

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of Sports Council grants to the British Canoe Union in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and what information he has as to what estimate was made of the total membership of the British Canoe Union in the years in question.

Mr. Moynihan: Sports Council grant-in-aid to the British Canoe Union for the last three years for which figures are available was as follows:

Year	£
1984-85	269,614
1985-86	239,410
1986-87	196,789

Estimates of membership as supplied by the BCU are from November to October in each of those years:

Year	Numbers
1984-85	11,377
1985-86	12,733
1986-87	13,667

Amateur Rowing Association

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of Sports Council grant to the Amateur Rowing Association in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and what information he has as to what estimate was made of the total membership of the Amateur Rowing Association in each of the years in question.

Mr. Moynihan: Sports Council grant-in-aid to the Amateur Rowing Association for the last three years for which figures are available was as follows:

Year	£
1984-85	288,540
1985-86	382,546
1986-87	439,850

Estimates of membership for the calendar years 1984, 1985 and 1986 are as follows:

Year	Number
1984	24,910
1985	25,173
1986	24,842

Water Authorities

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor the performance of water authorities in England and Wales in their compliance with discharge concerns.

Mr. Moynihan: Details of discharges from sewage treatment works are contained in the public registers which water authorities are required to maintain. In addition, since 1986 the authorities have made annual reports to the Department detailing works which have failed to comply with consent conditions. The reports for 1987, which are now being received, will be followed-up by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution to establish the reasons for non-compliance and the remedial measures which the water authorities propose to deal with the problems. The Department will also examine water authority plans to improve the performance of their sewage treatment works in the context of their corporate plans.

EC Harmonisation Programme

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the programme of work in which his Department is involved with the construction and allied industries relating to the European Community's harmonisation programme in 1992 under the Single European Act.

Mr. Ridley: The Department leads the negotiations on the draft construction products directive as part of the agreed Community programme for the completion of the single market by the end of 1992. The directive, when implemented, should benefit the United Kingdom construction products industry by requiring the removal of non-tariff barriers to trade between member states. Although negotiations on the draft directive are at an advanced stage it is not yet possible to say when it will be implemented.

The Department is also involved in the development of European technical standards in support of the directive.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will acquire for his departmental library a copy of the paper presented by M. E. Ginniff of United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. to the Waste Management '88 conference in Tucson, Arizona, on future nuclear waste management strategies for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: A copy of the paper to which the hon. Member refers has been acquired for the departmental library.

West Midlands (Nitrogen Dioxide)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a summary of the findings of the investigation of atmospheric concentrations of nitrogen dioxide in the west midlands commissioned by the air and noise division of his Department in collaboration with west midlands local authorities and in particular regarding emission from domestic balanced flue gas appliances, which investigations were the subject of a report in 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: The contractors for the west midlands survey of nitrogen dioxide concentrations, Midland Environment Ltd., will be presenting a summary paper on all aspects of the study to the investigation of air pollution standing conference, in Birmingham on 7 June this year. The Department, in line with normal practice, has also encouraged Midland Environment to publish papers on the survey results in the appropriate scientific and technical journals.

Boundary Changes

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to changes in county boundaries following the passage of the Local Government Act 1972, he will list those areas in England and Wales which have subsequently been transferred from one economic planning region to another, and the dates on which such changes formally occurred.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

House Prices

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list what information he has on those areas in England where major new housing development has resulted in reductions of house prices.

Mrs. Roe: I regret that information is not available in sufficiently fine detail to identify such areas.

Planning System

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to propose changes in the working of the planning system.

Mrs. Roe: We keep the planning system under constant review to ensure that it operates efficiently to enable development which contributes to the growth of the economy while protecting and enhancing the urban and rural environment. We are at present consulting about proposals to amend and consolidate the general development order, and about proposals for incorporating EC requirements on environmental assessment into the planning system. We also intend shortly to introduce revised procedure rules for planning inquiries.

Rented Housing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to increase the supply of rented housing.

Mrs. Roe: The main aim of the deregulation proposals in part I of the Housing Bill is to increase the supply of rented accommodation. We are confident that the relaxation of rent controls over new lettings, backed up by the generous tax relief under my right hon. Friend's proposed extension of the business corporation scheme, will provide a powerful incentive to invest in rented property.

The Local Government Act 1988 also included an explicit new power for local authorities to assist in the provision of privately let accommodation.

We are also helping housing associations to provide more new homes for rent and to repair some empty properties to bring them back into rented use. We have both increased the Housing Corporation's programme by some £50 million in 1988-89 rising to a total of £850 million in 1990-91 and announced major increases in the grant rates available for schemes using private finance to make public money stretch further in providing new homes.

Basildon (Debt Burden)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he took of Basildon district council's debt burden in deciding to rate-cap that authority for 1988-89.

Mr. Howard: As required by statute, my right hon. Friend selected Basildon district council for rate limitation for 1988-89 by reference to the best information available to him about its likely total expenditure for 1987-88, which reflected among other things the costs falling that year on Basildon's ratepayers as a result of the council's debt.

Industrial Installations (Radiation)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to change the legal dose limits for acceptable levels of exposure to radiation for those working in, or living in the vicinity of, industrial installations.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has no plans for changing legal dose limits for acceptable levels of exposure to radiation. Dose limits, for workers and for members of the general public, are contained in the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985, which are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive. The Health and Safety Commission has set up a working group on ionising radiations, which is reviewing the subject and will be reporting to the commission in due course.

Local Government Act 1988

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will announce his final decisions on the timing of implementation of the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that my hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks) yesterday.

Council Houses (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which private company is carrying out research into tenants' views on the sale of council estates on behalf of his Department in Nottingham; and what other work the company has done for his Department.

Mrs. Roe: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Local Authorities (Property Assets)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to monitor the performance of local authorities in ensuring that their real property assets are managed efficiently and cost effectively.

Mrs. Roe: The Audit Commission has recently published a report which recommends measures for the improvement of local authorities' management of their property. The auditors will be following up the recommendations of the report with individual local authorities during the next audit round. My Department will be discussing with the local authority associations and the commission ways in which councils can be encouraged to adopt the report's recommendations.

Property Services Agency Board

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Offical Report the terms of reference of the Property Services Agency Board; when the scope of its functions and powers was last reviewed; and what steps the board is currently taking to encourage greater competition and private sector involvement in the management and execution of its duties so far as they relate to the real property assets of each Government Department.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many buildings the Property Services Agency rents for Government Departments in central London; and what is the annual cost and the rent per square metre.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency leases 159 buildings for occupation by Government Departments in the following central London postal districts: WC1 and 2, W1, SW1, SE1 and EC1 to 4. The rent bill for these properties is currently some £80 million, representing an annual rental of a little over £100 per sq m.

Glanville Fritillary

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision on the Glanville fritillary; if he will list the representations he has received; and what information he has on where in the United Kingdom this butterfly is found.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Greenwich (Rents)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the representations dated 19 February from the hon. Member for Woolwich about the decision of Greenwich council to raise rents for its frail elderly tenants in sheltered housing schemes.

Mrs. Roe: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether, after privatisation of the Crown Suppliers, any staff wishing to remain in the Civil Service will be found equivalent employment elsewhere in the Civil Service, with retraining and regrading where necessary;

(2) whether, after privatisation of the Crown Suppliers, staff nearing retirement or with long service not wishing to transfer out of the Crown Suppliers will have the option of going to the new organisation on secondment or taking early retirement;

(3) whether staff of the Crown Suppliers will be able to transfer out of the organisation prior to privatisation and will have equality of opportunity with other staff to apply for other jobs within the Civil Service;

(4) what are the expected financial savings to Government of privatising the Crown Suppliers;

(5) which parts of the Crown Suppliers organisation will be retained within the Civil Service;

(6) whether, after privatisation of the Crown Suppliers, any changes to the terms and conditions of service of staff will be subject to the same consultation with the trade union side as at present;

(7) whether, following privatisation of the Crown Suppliers, any staff will be made redundant compulsorily.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to the hon. Member.

County Hall

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning the future use of the former headquarters of the Greater London council at county hall, SE1.

Mr. Chope: The future use of county hall is a matter for the London residuary body and any future owner taking into account planning and listed building considerations. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be considering the recent High Court judgment on his planning decisions of 20 October 1987, when the transcript becomes available.

Warrington-Runcorn New Town

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each year since 1981 the square footage of factory space vacated by tenants of Warrington-Runcorn new town.

Mrs. Roe: The information requested is as follows:

Factory space vacated

	[1]gross square footage
1985-86	259,000
1986-87	291,500
1987-88	296,750

[1] Estimated.

Note: These figures do not take account of re-allocations or other re-lettings. Information for 1984-85 and previous years is not readily available.

I should emphasise that a significant proportion, about a third, of vacations arise from expansion, and that these figures do not therefore reflect the success of the corporation's role in the industrial development of the north-west.

Non-Metropolitan County Councils

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish for each non-metropolitan county council in England (a) the outturn expenditure for 1986-87, (b) the current expenditure for 1987-88 and (c) the percentage increase between the two;

(2) if he will publish for each non-metropolitan county council in England (a) the current expenditure for 1987-88, (b) the budgeted expenditure for 1988-89 and (c) the percentage increase between the two.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Hackney

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has come to a decision on the future of Hackney's building direct labour organisation following his request to the borough to submit a special report.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has considered Hackney's special report and subsequent correspondence and has today informed the borough, in accordance with his powers under S17(5) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, that with immediate effect its direct labour organisation shall not have power to undertake major new building work except as necessary to complete work already awarded to it, and that its power to carry out this work will cease completely a year from now.

The borough claimed to have made a surplus on its major new works account in 1985-86 following losses of £3·2 million in 1983-84 and £1·75 million in 1984-85. My right hon. Friend is now satisfied, however, that the claimed surplus is spurious.

Brompton Hospital

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to accept the advice tendered on architectural and historical grounds by English Heritage that the Brompton hospital be added to the statutory list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Local Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on English local authorities' expenditure plans for 1988-89; and what amount of block grant he estimates will be payable to them.

Mr. Ridley: On the basis of information received by 21 March, English local authorities are budgeting for an aggregate total expenditure in 1988-89 of about £27,610 million, compared with £26,569 million provided for in the RSG settlement. On this basis, the amount of block grant payable will be £8,955 million, £516 million less than provided in the settlement.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy on the initiatives to reduce damage to the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 29 March 1988]: In September 1987 the United Kingdom signed the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer and we are currently working with other member states on proposals for implementing the protocol within the European Community. The Department is also discussing with representatives of producers and users of chlorofluorocarbons and halons steps to reduce consumption of these chemicals through the development of suitable and safe substitutes and measures such as recycling and recovery.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any sites of special scientific interest that have been ploughed up for cereal growing in the last 12 months showing their habitat type; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 March 1988]: The NCC's 13th annual report shows that 27 SSSIs notified under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 suffered damage (mainly superficial) from agricultural activities. Another 21 awaiting or proposed for notification suffered similarly. The Nature Conservancy Council is compiling the information requested in respect of cereal growing. I shall write to the hon. Member with the details shortly.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 130

SESSION 1987–88

21st March-31st March 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
